Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if he would be willing to accept an amendment to his amendment so that the exemption would not be extended to divinity students?

Mr. REED. No, Mr. President.

Mr. WADSWORTH. As I understand the Senator's amendment, it exempts ministers of the Gospel and students in divinity schools.

Mr. REED. No; I can not accept the suggestion. I do not want to take the Senator's time if he desires to speak; but when others are through I will state my reasons for this amendment and why I can not accede to the Senator's request.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I think this is a very important and meritorious amendment, and that it should by all means be adopted. It has been offered by a member of the committee, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I know it was very earnestly considered and discussed by a number of the members of the committee, to whose attention it was brought, and I think it ought beyond a doubt to be adopted.

There are some ministers of the Gospel who object to being conscripted, drawn into war, and forced to shoulder arms. There are ministers who are willing, I am satisfied, in large numbers to volunteer to act as chaplains, and many of them will shoulder arms; but there are a few, I know, who have conscientious scruples against shouldering arms and fighting, and divinity students are, by reason and logic, in the same class There is no difference in fact or in principle.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. MYERS. With much pleasure.

Mr. GRONNA. I want to ask the Senator from Montana if it is not true that those who have such scruples against war would be exempt in any event? Is not that correct?

Mr. MYERS. No; not unless the religious organization with which they are connected, as a part of its creed and doctrine, is opposed to warfare.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. MYERS. With great pleasure.

Mr. GRONNA. Has the Senator from Montana received many requests from ministers asking to be exempted from going to war?

Mr. MYERS. I have received some requests from ecclesiastics, especially in behalf of divinity students, that this amendment be adopted, and I am satisfied the Senator from Missouri, who offered it, has received like requests or it would not have been offered.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not wish to take the Senator's time, but the letters I have received from ministers have shown that they are the most militant class of people we have in our country, and I myself see no reason why they should be exempted.

Mr. MYERS. I can not yield any further, because my time has nearly expired.

I have been informed that the divinity students of the country, whose number is not very large—there are not so many of them as there might be or ought to be—if drawn into war will not be able, many of them, to graduate from the theological seminaries in sufficient numbers to take the places of the ministers who have to retire from the ministry and of those ministers who die. The pulpits of the country should be kept filled. It is very essential that they should be. The war should not be allowed to close the churches. Many ministers will enter the Army as chaplains, others as fighters. This war may last several years. No man knows how long. If so, pulpits will be vacant, churches closed. An appeal has been made to some of us not to drag from their studies the few thousand theological students—all too few—many between 19 and 25 years of age. Let us grant it. We can afford to do that. They are needed where they are.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Montana has expired.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have offered an amendment to the same section, and it is designed to produce in some degree a similar result; that is, to broaden the exemption which is reported in the committee bill.

While I shall support the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri, I want, in speaking to it, to emphasize what seems to me to be one of the gravest injustices of this exemption section. I refer to that part of it which is designed to exempt from the operations of the bill those who have conscientious scruples against war, and then confining the exemption to those who, having such scruples, are members of denominations of which that is one of their articles of faith.

Mr. President, I can see good reason for the exemption of divinity students—not ministers; I am perfectly willing to include them, and they ought to be included in the operation of this bill, especially those militant ministers of the gospel, who go upon the theory that Christ came into the world not to establish peace but with a sword.

I am unable to perceive, Mr. President, how and by what process of reasoning a man who is conscientiously opposed to war and not a member of a religious denomination must submit to the requirements of this measure, while his neighbor, possessed of such scruples and belonging to a religious denomination, is made exempt. If we are to exempt that class of people, fundamentally the line of division should not be drawn between those who, in addition to possessing the scruples, are members of churches and those who do not possess any affiliation with churches. Consequently I want, as soon as this amendment is disposed of, to offer the one to which I now refer, in the hope that that invidious discrimination will be stricken from this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I was going to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. REED. I hope the Senator will not do that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Before I do so, may I have the amendment stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, line 9, after the word "territories," it is proposed to insert:

Duly ordained ministers of religion, students preparing for the ministry in recognized theological or divinity schools.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do.

Mr. REED. I hope the Senator will not offer any amendment to that. The amendment I offered has been considered. It applies only to a few people, in the long run, and I hope it will not be complicated by any amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am very much in favor of one portion of it, and not so much in favor of the other.

Mr. REED. Well, I will make a statement now, with the Senator's permission, on this amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I shall be very glad to hear the Senator.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, everybody knows that ministers of the Gospel and priests are not going to be drafted and put on the fighting line. That never has been done by any country within my knowledge. At the same time, we all know that each regiment will have its chaplain, who will be a minister, priest, or rabbi, some ecclesiastic, who will take his place with the men in the camp and on the field. We also know that organizations of good women of churches will go about on their missions of mercy, will do their part; we know that there will not be a battle field on which the Sisters of Mercy will not be found, and where there will not also be found good women of other denominations doing the holy work of ministering to the wounded and caring for the corpses of the dead. The minister will be there; he will be militant enough to take his place as a minister on the battle field. The priest will be there; the danger will not keep him from the zone of fire.

All that is asked—and it has been asked—is that those who are about to become priests or ministers, who are attending regular theological seminaries, who are fitting themselves for ecclesiastical duties, who have already devoted themselves to the mission of peace and of charity and of religion, shall not be taken from their schools probably in the very finishing year. The exemption will only be of a very small number of men in the aggregate. It will only reach men who are duly entered at the regular theological schools as divinity students.

I hope that the exemption will be allowed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, has not the Senator any fears that there will be a great rush to these divinity schools upon the part of young men?

Mr. REED. Oh, no. The language of the amendment requires that they must be students preparing for the ministry in recognized theological or divinity schools. Now, of course, it would be possible for some individual to take advantage of it, but I do not think that is a danger.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the Senator could easily meet the objection—if it is an objection—of our friend from New Hampshire by interlining the words "at the passage."

Mr. REED. I will insert the words "students who at the time of the passage of this act."

Mr. GALLINGER. I hope the Senator will make it read "approval of this act."

Mr. REED. "Approval of this act," then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from New York has expired.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I rise simply to give my support to the amendment, and to say to the Senate that in my last visit to the city of Chicago, my home, I was visited by a delegation of ministers of different denominations, pointing out the justice of such an exemption and calling to my attention the fact that many of their youth will be tendering their sacrifice in this conflict, and that by allowing these young gentlemen to finish their course, when they have finished they will then still be subject to service—many of them, as the Senator from Missouri has wisely pointed out, as chaplains or in other ways. I also beg to fortify, if I can, the observations made here that the Senate may not overlook the fact that in nearly all of these religious organizations there will be women who will make sacrifices immeasurable and indescribable; and in consideration of that, if there were no other, we could afford to grant the exemptions sought in the amendment.

I sincerely trust the amendment may meet the approval of the Senate.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, just one word.

I am in entire accord with the sentiments expressed by the Senator from Illinois. I have had a great many communications from Pennsylvania requesting an amendment of this kind, and I had intended to offer such an amendment myself; but I recognize that it comes with propriety from a member of the majority in this Chamber.

I heartily hope that the amendment will be adopted, and that the Senate conferees will see that it remains in the bill when the conference takes up the consideration of the measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I now ask that the amendment to which I referred be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, line 13, it is proposed to strike out the words "any person to serve" and to insert in place thereof the word "service"; also to strike out all after the words "who is," in line 14 of the same page, down to and including the word "organization," on line 19 of the same page, and to insert the words "conscientiously opposed to engaging in such service," so that the clause as amended will read:

And nothing in this act contained shall be construed to require or compel service in any of the forces herein provided for by any person who is conscientiously opposed to engaging in such service.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think I have already consumed my five minutes on this amendment, and I therefore submit it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the amendment says, as I understand it, that every man who is conscientiously opposed to entering the military service shall be exempt. Is that correct?

Mr. THOMAS. It provides that nothing in the act shall be construed to require or compel him to serve. As the bill is now drawn that provision is limited to those with conscientious scruples who are members of religious organizations.

Mr. STONE. Well, if you confine it to religious organizations and it is a part of a religious creed like the Quakers, for example, I see no objection to that; but if you frame it so that any man who is conscientiously opposed to going into the military service will be exempt, the Lord only knows what that will lead to.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I wish to add that the amendment which I propose is that which is in the English conscription law; and while I would vote to strike it out entirely, I must again insist that there is, to my mind, no justification for such an exemption which is confined within such narrow limits. It is not democratic.

Mr. STONE. I have great faith in the judgment of my friend from Colorado, and if he thinks it is all right I have nothing more to say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I think we ought to have some information on this subject. I will ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to tell us why this was not put on the bill in the committee. Will the Senator from Oregon kindly inform the Senate why the amendment that is now offered by the Senator from Colorado was not put on in the committee, so that we may vote intelligently?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I will state that that particular question was not considered in the committee, further than that portion which is now embraced in the bill exempting certain organizations whose creed is opposed to war, like the Quakers, the Mennonites, and so forth. This particular feature of it was not considered, and yet I think it ought to be recognized. The English law recognizes it. The English law excludes the idea of irresponsible persons making this claim, because it provides for a method of appeal. There is a tribunal to try out the man's claim that he has conscientious scruples, and a right of appeal is given. I think if this idea is going to be embodied in the bill it would be better to go a little further and to provide some sort of a tribunal.

Mr. STONE. That is the point about which I wish to ask my friend from Oregon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do.

Mr. STONE. The Senator spoke of tribunals in England, I suppose, to try out and determine the claim of a drafted man that he was conscientiously opposed to military service. We have no such tribunal here, however; and I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon if a man is drafted under the provisions of this bill, and he says that he is conscientiously opposed to war, conscientiously opposed to going into battle and shooting at men, which means the killing of men, whether that mere statement of his is to operate to exclude him or to exempt him from service?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me a word, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] has introduced an amendment providing a method of procedure to ascertain that fact corresponding substantially, as I understand, to the British practice.

Mr. STONE. But the procedure of the Senator from Wisconsin, whatever it may be, has not been agreed to by the Senate. Now, if it should not be——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It has not been offered. I have had no opportunity to offer it.

Mr. STONE. Well, it has not been offered. That is sufficient; and if it should not be agreed to by the Senate when offered, then we will have this provision in the bill which in effect says that any man who is called to the colors may say that he is conscientiously opposed to service in the military forces.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Missouri has expired.

Mr. THOMAS. I suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin that he offer his amendment in connection with mine.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If it is in order, I will offer my amendment as a substitute for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is in order. The Secretary will state the substitute.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I send it to the desk and ask to have it read. I think it is self-explanatory.

The SECRETARY. On page 13 of the bill, after line 16, it is proposed to add a new section, to be known as section 12, and to read as follows:

SEC. 12. At the time of registration as provided for under the terms of this act, or within 20 days thereafter, any person so registering may make application to the local tribunal hereinafter provided for, or application may be so made in his behalf, for the issuance of a certificate of exemption from the provisions of this act upon the following grounds:

First. On the ground that it is expedient in the national interest that such applicant or person in whose behalf said application is made, instead of being employed in military service, be engaged in other work in which he is habitually engaged or in which he wishes to be engaged, or if he is being educated or trained for any work that he should be continued to be so educated or trained; or

Second. On the ground that serious hardship would ensue, if the man were called up for Army service, owing to his exceptional financial or business obligations or domestic position; or

Third. On the ground of ill health or infirmity; or

Fourth. On the ground of a conscientious objection to the undertaking of combatant service in the present war.

And such local tribunal, if the members of a majority thereof consider the grounds of the applicant established, shall grant such certificate of exemption accordingly. Such certificate may be temporary or final, according to the judgment of the local tribunal, except that if granted upon the fourth ground of exemption above stated, it shall be final. If the applicant sustains his claim for exemption under the fourth ground by his uncontradicted oath, the local tribunal shall grant such a certificate of exemption. The certificate of exemption as to other grounds specified shall state whether the same is temporary or final, and in any case shall state the ground upon which the same is granted.

The local tribunal may allow an application to be made after the appointed time in any case in which it is shown to its satisfaction that the failure to make the application within the required time has arisen owing to the absence of the applicant abroad, or owing to any other cause which appears to the tribunal to afford a reasonable ground for allowing the application to be so made.

There shall be a local tribunal for each congressional district in the several States, for the Territories, and District of Columbia, and such local tribunal shall sit at a place or places to be designated by it, within the congressional district, or at the county seat of each county, within said congressional district, in each of said Territories, and in the District of Columbia, and shall so sit a sufficient time to hear and pass upon the applications for said certificates of exemption.

Each local tribunal shall consist of not less than five members and shall be appointed by the President, and a majority of each local tribunal shall be made up of persons not in the service of the Government of the United States, and shall be residents of the congressional district, Territory, or District of Columbia for which they are appointed.

There shall also be an appeal tribunal for and acting within each State, Territory, and the District of Columbia, consisting of not less than five persons to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Each appeal tribunal shall hold its sessions at the State capitol of the respective States and at such places in the Territories and the District of Columbia as the President shall direct. Both local and appeal tribunals may act through committees appointed by them consisting of not less than three members of the tribunal, but the action of each committee shall be approved or disapproved by a majority of the respective tribunals before such action shall become effective.

There shall also be a central tribunal, consisting of not less than five persons, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Such central tribunal shall hold its sessions in the city of Washington, D. C. The Government, or any person authorized to act for the Government, or any applicant, or person making application for another for the certificate of exemption herein provided for who is aggrieved by the decision of the local tribunal, may appeal from the local tribunal to the appeal tribunal and similarly from the appeal tribunal to the central tribunal.

The local tribunal shall make and keep a record which shall include the name and residence of the applicant or person in whose behalf said application is made, the grounds upon which the application is made, a statement of the evidence offered for and against the application, and the decision of the local tribunal, together with an explicit statement of the reasons therefor. Upon any appeal from the decision of the local tribunal as herein provided, the local tribunal shall forthwith transmit to the appeal tribunal a copy of its said record, duly certified by it to be a correct and true copy thereof. An appeal shall be sufficiently taken by a notice in writing, signed by any person authorized to act for the Government, or by the applicant, or the person making application in his behalf, stating that the party signing such notice thereby appeals from the decision of the local tribunal. Such notice of appeal shall be filed with the local tribunal within five days from the time the party is notified in writing of such decision. Upon request of the party appealing, the local tribunal shall furnish to him a true and certified copy of the record. The proceedings in the appeal tribunal shall be either upon the record or de novo, as the applicant may elect. The appeal tribunal shall make and keep a record of the proceedings before it on each application, including its decision and the reasons therefor, substantially as herein provided for making and keeping the record of the local tribunal. The appeal tribunal, on appeal to the central tribunal, which may be taken substantially as herein provided for the appeal from the local to the appeal tribunal, shall transmit to the central tribunal a duly certified copy of the record of all proceedings on said appeal. The central tribunal shall, upon notice to the respective parties, proceed to hear and determine said appeal and give written notice to the parties of its decision. In all proceedings before said central tribunal said parties may appear in person or by representative. The President may make such additional rules and regulations for the said several tribunals as may be necessary to give effect to this Act, and otherwise said tribunals may make rules and regulations governing their proceedings, respectively. All proceedings before said tribunals, and each of them, shall be public.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the substitute amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr.

LA FOLLETTE] for the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I have not had an opportunity carefully to examine that amendment. I have prepared an amendment providing for tribunals which I understand has the approval of the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee and of the War Department. It is much simpler in form than the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin. It provides in substance for local tribunals to be appointed by the President from the civil authorities of the various States. That the Senate may know the nature of this amendment I ask to have it read as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Add the following to section 3 of the act:

"The President shall make rules and regulations to carry out the terms and provisions of this section and provide for the issuance of certificates of exemption or partial or limited exemption and for a system to exclude and discharge individuals from selective draft.

"There shall be created under the direction of the President local tribunals in the several States or subdivisions thereof, composed of the members of the local civil government, to decide all questions of exemption under this act and also all questions arising under the draft for partial military service or for including or discharging individuals or classes of individuals from the selective draft, which shall be made under the rules and regulations aforesaid, and may also provide for an appeal tribunal."

Mr. STONE. Do I understand from that that the President of the United States is to provide for these tribunals, that he establishes them by an Executive order? I caught in listening to the reading this much, at least I think I did, that the local tribunals were to first pass upon the questions raised and that there should be the right of appeal. An appeal to what tribunal? Is it a tribunal to be established by Executive order or how? It is not provided for in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. I understand the plans of the War Department call for the creation of tribunals under the State authorities—that is, to be appointed by the governors from the civil authorities of the local communities in the States—and a central tribunal to review the findings of the local tribunals. That is practically the English system. Of course the exemptions must be decided upon by local boards. That could not possibly be done by a central board in Washington. The amendment provides that—in the several States or subdivisions thereof, composed of the members of the local civil government to decide all questions of exemption under this act—

And so on.

Mr. STONE. "And so on" will not do.

Mr. KELLOGG. I will read the balance of it, then:

and also all questions arising under the draft for partial military service or for including or discharging individuals or classes of individuals from the selective draft, which shall be made under the rules and regulations aforesaid, and may also provide for an appeal tribunal.

Mr. STONE. How is that appeal provided for?

Mr. KELLOGG. By order of the President.

Mr. STONE. It is an Executive order?

Mr. KELLOGG. It is an Executive order.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota to define what he means by "composed of the members of the local civil government." Does that mean the county or municipality or State? What authority would the Senator have in mind in Pennsylvania and in his own State?

Mr. KELLOGG. I mean any subdivision of the State which will be used for a registration district in which it may be necessary to have a tribunal; for instance, a county or a city in the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. Would he appoint the mayor of a city and the——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. PENROSE. May not the Senator answer me out of my own time, because I want the information?

Mr. KELLOGG. It would include the mayor, councilmen, and officials of a city—township officials, if necessary—or county officials, whatever was adopted by the Executive order as the subdivision in which the enrollment was made and in which the tribunal should act exclusively.

Mr. PENROSE. It seems to me that this provision is very vague and would lead to endless confusion. You would have rulings by the local civil government in Pennsylvania, whatever that term may mean, and rulings of another character by the local civil government of Minnesota, whatever that may mean. It seems to me the whole proposition ought to be under the control of the Federal authority.

Mr. KELLOGG. It is.

Mr. PENROSE. You appoint the local State officials, I understand.

Mr. KELLOGG. They are only members there under the direction of the President, and constitute the boards to be appointed by the President. If you have one ruling in Minnesota and another in Pennsylvania, the board of appeal will settle it. They are Federal officers, but they are taken from local civil officers of the State.

Mr. PENROSE. That does not mean anything to me, as far as Pennsylvania is concerned, because there we have boroughs, townships, counties, municipalities, and State officials. By the time the appeals are passed upon the war will be over. I am going to vote against the amendment. I do not intend to say any more about it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I believe the question before the Senate is the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin to substitute his amendment for the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from Wisconsin offered his amendment as a substitute for mine.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I hope very much the motion to substitute will not prevail. The amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin provides a rather elaborate system by which appeals are to be made to a central tribunal, all to be appointed by the President, as I understand from the rather hasty examination I have been able to give it. The machinery of such a proposal would be almost more than the Federal Government could carry and operate.

The bill which is now under consideration, you will note, Mr. President, provides, in section 5, page 8, that the Federal Government shall utilize the services of local officers. After a deliberate study the bill was drafted upon the theory, with respect to the draft provisions, that it would be very unwise and practically almost impossible for Congress to attempt to legislate down to the last details as to how the draft should operate in all the communities of the United States. It was the hope and policy of the Military Affairs Committee, I think I am justified in saying, that the purely administrative features of the draft should be left to the administrative officers of the Government, acting and cooperating with the administrative officers of the States and municipal subdivisions of the States.

During the Civil War the draft law of 1863 was operated under the charge and control of the provost marshal general, Gen. Fry. The operation of the law was placed almost entirely in the hands of the Federal Government, and it was under his charge. That was done, Mr. President, because in that unfortunate hour apparently Congress and Mr. Lincoln's administration did not feel that it could trust all the local officers for a faithful and honest administration of the draft law. It was well known at that time, and it is well known now, that during the Civil War there were communities in the Northern States which were not entirely loyal to the Federal Government, and not all of those local officers could be trusted to enforce the law.

That, thank Heaven, is not the condition to-day, and I have been informed upon reliable authority that it is the hope of the administration and its desire to have the hearty and honest and faithful cooperation of the local officials all over this broad land of ours in an honest administration of the draft law.

The particular portion of the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin which bears any relation to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado will be found on page 2, lines 11 and 12, of the print of the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin, and this is the only part of it which I can find that has anything to do with the proposition made by the Senator from Colorado. On line 11 it reads:

Fourth. On the ground of a conscientious objection to the undertaking of combatant service in the present war.

That is very different from the contention which the Senator from Colorado has been making. The Senator from Colorado has been contending, and he, of course, is entitled to his conviction and his contention, that a person who has a conscientious conviction against war in the abstract, against bearing arms in any war as a matter of principle, should be exempted, but the provision in the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin would go to the extent of saying that any man in the United States who has a conscientious conviction against taking part in this war shall be exempt. I call that to the careful consideration of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from New York has expired.

Mr. THOMAS. Before the Senator from New York takes his seat, I think he is entirely mistaken as to my position. Under such a bill as this, whose purpose is selective draft, based on the principle of universal liability to service, none of these people should be exempt; but if a part of the class is to be exempted by the bill, then I purpose to extend it so as to include all others of the class, whether identified with a religious organization or not. Otherwise we impose a privilege upon men affiliating with religious orders to the exclusion of noncommunicants entertaining similar convictions.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I had intended to invite the special attention of the Senate to the feature of the amendment tendered by the Senator from Wisconsin, to which reference has been made by the Senator from New York so pointedly. Apparently the idea is that there are two classes of people in this country who have these conscientious objections. One class has conscientious objections to engaging in war under any circumstances or under any conditions. It has conscientious objections against engaging in war at all. Another class has no such general conscientious objections to engaging in war, but while they are quite willing to engage in any ordinary war they have conscientious objections to engaging in the particular war which is now going on. Just what class of people there are in the country who while they have no conscientious objections to engaging in war generally have conscientious objections to engaging in this war I can not very well guess.

But there is another feature of the amendment which is worthy of our attention. The framer of the amendment has very logically provided that the unsupported affidavit of the person claiming the exemption is sufficient to justify a finding in his favor. It reads:

> If the applicant sustains his claim for exemption under the fourth ground by his uncontradicted oath, the local tribunal shall grant such a certificate of exemption.

So his own oath with respect to the matter practically becomes indisputable and conclusive.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I wish to ask the Senator if he construes that as meaning that there is no appeal whatever from the statement of the man who is disposed to protest against the draft?

Mr. WALSH. If the tribunal found upon the unsupported statement that he had these conscientious scruples I can not conceive upon what ground an appellant tribunal would reverse its decision.

But, Mr. President, I desire to invite the attention of the Senate to the fact that exactly the same objection can be validly made against the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado, because when a man comes forward and asserts upon his oath that he has conscientious scruples against engaging in war, how is it possible to controvert and overcome that proof? By what means? I suggest to the Senator from Oregon, who has charge of the bill and who is a good lawyer, How will we go about it to submit evidence to overcome an affidavit of that character?

Some very estimable gentlemen called upon me yesterday afternoon asking my support for an amendment such as that tendered by the Senator from Colorado. I offered this objection. It was said, "Oh, well, of course the officers will know whether or not they are honest about it." I said, "Take the town loafer, for instance. Suppose the town loafer does say, 'I have conscientious objections to engaging in war.' How can you demonstrate that he has not?"

Mr. KELLOGG. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WALSH. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. My amendment does not purport in any way to fix any exemptions whatever but only to pass upon exemptions which the law shall fix.

Mr. WALSH. I was not addressing my remarks to the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota, but I am addressing myself to the practical aspect of the proposition offered. I do not mean to assert that it is just to exclude or exempt any of these men.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of New Mexico in the chair). The time of the Senator from Montana has expired. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if I may be permitted to say just a word upon this amendment, I will state that the amendment follows very closely the English statute adopted, as I now recall, on the 27th of January, 1916, excepting that, as to the conscientious objector, I add the words "in this war." These words do not appear in the English statute.

I did that, Mr. President, as anyone can very readily, I think, understand, because it seems to me there may be in this country a very large body of people subject to the draft who would have conscientious objections against being enlisted into the service to go to a foreign country to fight against Germany and Austria. We have upward of 10,000,000 citizens of the United States who are of German or Austrian birth or German or Austrian parentage. Of course they can be drafted; and it may be that it would be the policy of those who make the selections to take them, simply because some of them might be reluctant to go and might have conscientious scruples.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; I can not yield to anybody when I have but five minutes.

It seemed to me that, just as a practical question, they ought not to be drawn into the service and ought not to be required to go into the service to fight against their own kith and kin, provided they have conscientious objections to so doing. We want soldiers whose hearts are in the work that is assigned to them, soldiers who have no reservations whatever. If we are to make an army effective, it ought to be an army that has no scruples against shooting the people with whom we are at war.

Mr. President, my amendment does provide that the oath or affidavit of the conscientious objector shall be final. I think it must be final. If he shall have made contradictory statements, if it appears by testimony offered and taken by the tribunal that the affidavit which he files is contradicted by statements which he has theretofore made, then it ought to be thrown out; but if he stands there clean handed, clean conscienced, and says, "I can not bring myself to kill" in this war, then his affidavit should be accepted. I know, Mr. President, that such an attitude arouses a feeling of resentment and in a way prompts the desire to reach out and draft those who occupy such a position and compel them to serve. So it was in the draft in the Civil War. History tells us that the draft was prosecuted in the Democratic districts much more thoroughly than in the Republican districts, just to make the antiwar Democrats who opposed the draft go to the front. They desired to put an officer behind them with a revolver and make them fight whether they wanted to do so or not. That is the reason President Lincoln said in a letter, which has been published during the war now on, "You can not get them down to the front; they would sift out on the way"; he said, "it was like trying to shovel fleas across a barnyard; you would lose most of them before you got across."

In framing this amendment I have followed the English statute. If England, after having been in the war for 18 months or 2 years, in her conscription act recognized the conscientious objector and permitted him to be exempt from the draft, ought we not to do so here, when we are not under the stress that England was under for men at the time she adopted the draft? We are right at the outset of this war, when the additions made through volunteering in all of the fields open for volunteering, in the Regular Army and in the militia, are being filled as rapidly as can be and at this time there exists no reason for the United States to be more stringent or less liberal in fixing exemptions than was England at the end of two years of this devastating war.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I feel that a man who is conscientiously opposed to fighting ought to be excused. I will take one instance. A minister of the Presbyterian Church came before our committee some days ago. He was a fine looking fellow, and differed from his congregation largely and differed from the Presbyterian ministers generally, being conscientiously opposed to war or fighting. That class of men—and he was a good man—would go to jail before they would go to war. The result has been in England that the jails are full of people who would not go; they will sacrifice their lives before they will go to war. I have great patience with a man of that kind; but I am not at all in sympathy with the class of men my distinguished friend from Wisconsin has spoken of, men who, as a group, are opposed to fighting the fatherland; for instance, if they happen to be natives of any of the central powers or descended from citizens of any of them, because they do not want to fight them. I am not at all in favor of excusing them, for they ought to be placed on exactly the same footing as any other citizens.

Mr. President, while I am entirely in sympathy with excusing men who have conscientious objection, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin goes too far. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] provides for a tribunal, a civil tribunal created in the State, under regulations of the President, it is true, but directly appointed by the governor of the State. Therefore there will be a tribunal to try out the question, provided some such amendment as that suggested by the Senator from Montana is included in the bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Would the amendment I have offered meet the approval of the Senator from Oregon, the chairman of the committee, if the words "in this war" were stricken out?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin is too cumbersome.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It follows exactly the machinery of the English statute. They have these three tribunals there.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think for this emergency it ought to be a simpler piece of machinery, leaving it to tribunals that will be created under the regulations to be prescribed.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. McCUMBER. I thought the Senator was through.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield the floor.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, before we have a vote on this amendment, I think it but fair that I should express my convictions. I supposed that this was a war between the American Nation and some other nation, and I had supposed that we were to be Americans who were to fight the battles. I did not suppose that anyone would think it proper that we should excuse any man on the ground that his sympathies were un-American, no matter who his ancestors may have been.

I think it not inappropriate to say right here that our ancestors fought our own blood in the War of the Revolution, and when we applied the draft we did not say to every man in America, "You can decline to come under the draft if you say you have a conscientious objection to fighting one of your own blood, or fighting against the country from which you have only a short time been severed." It seems to me that we ought to ignore everything else in this matter but the idea of Americanism, and that we ought to fight that battle as Americans.

I want to say a word in opposition to the idea that has been given expression by the Senator from Oregon, that he would excuse any man who would come and say that he was conscientiously opposed to fighting in war. Why, Mr. President, the moment you do that every traitor and every "slacker" would have no objection to coming forward and swearing that he was conscientiously opposed to fighting in any war. We would leave the traitors at home. Mr. President, because I and my family may believe that it is right to lay down our lives for our country, I do not think any other man has the right to say, "I do not believe in it, and you and your family can lay down your lives to protect mine, because I have conscientious objections; I have conscientious scruples against fighting in any war."

This whole proposition is based upon the theory that every American owes to his country the duty of serving it even to the extent of giving his life to his country. That is what you are basing this idea of draft upon. I have no use for any portion of the provision in the bill itself which says that any people belonging to a creed which does not believe in battling for your country need not be called upon to fight.

Mr. President, this is not a question of my belief or a question as to the belief of some one else as to whether or not war is proper. The country of which we are citizens has decided that we should go into this war, and we ought not to allow any man to escape the duty of citizenship simply because of a religious view. He has no greater right than I have because of any view he may have.

Mr. President, after this war is started any great church can change its creed and put into it an article that it does not believe it is right to war, and we might thereby lose a half or a third of the fighting force of our country. Before we get through, if there is only one vote to strike out all of that section which excuses any American citizen, no matter what his religious convictions, no matter what his religious views may be, from serving his country and doing his duty for the country that protects his life and his liberty, and that of his children, it will be my vote.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] spoke very plainly and frankly about one phase of his amendment. He says there are hundreds of thousands of citizens of the United States who are natives of Germany or Austria and who, therefore, might have conscientious scruples against fighting their relatives in those countries, against engaging in war with those countries. That may be true. There is a very large element of our population which is composed of natives of one or the other of those countries; but if they are naturalized citizens when they became naturalized they renounced all allegiance to all foreign countries, sovereignties, princes, and potentates whatsoever, especially allegiance to the country from which they came. They took an oath; they swore that they renounced all allegiance to those countries. I know that it is the custom of many judges, who are authorized by law to admit foreigners to citizenship by naturalization, to ask applicants whether, if war should arise between the United States and their native countries, they would be willing to take up arms on behalf of the United States and fight the armies of their native countries; and some judges make it a rule, if applicants do not answer the question in the affirmative, to deny the right of citizenship; and I think they are right in doing so.

Unless a man is willing so to cast his lot with us as to take up arms in the event of war between this country and the country of his birth, I do not believe he is entitled to American citizenship or that he would make a good citizen. If there are any naturalized citizens who are not willing to take up arms against the country of their birth, I think their citizenship ought to be revoked. I do not believe they are worthy of being citizens of this country.

I am not at all in sympathy with the idea that because a man was born in Germany or Austria-Hungary, if he has scruples against taking up arms against his relative over there, he ought to be excused from enlisting in the Army of the United States. If that is his state of feeling, he is a dangerous citizen. If there are any such people in this country, it may be that they have been engaged in blowing up munition factories in this country, and perhaps it is against them that the Department of Justice is compelled to employ special agents to keep track of their doings. If so, they are entitled to no especial consideration.

So, with due respect to the Senator from Wisconsin, I do not think that suggestion is any valid argument in favor of his amendment. In fact, I will say that with me it is an argument against the amendment; and I shall vote against it on that account, as well as for other reasons.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I think the provisions of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] involve a very serious question. The amendment creates distinctions between our citizens and segregates the men who were born in Germany and the men who were born in Austria-Hungary into an exempt class by themselves, for the Senator explained that it was not his idea so much to meet the objections of those at large who had conscientious scruples against war, but to meet that condition which he believes exists among the men of foreign birth—the Germans and the Austrians who might have such conscientious scruples.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield?

Mr. PHELAN. I will yield to a question as a matter of reciprocity.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am sure the Senator from California does not wish to misrepresent what I said. I said nothing of the sort; and I wish here simply to make that denial.

Mr. PHELAN. I so understood the Senator, and the RECORD will speak for itself. In order to justify his amendment, any way, he said there were large numbers of Germans and Austria-Hungarians who would have conscientious scruples against fighting against the men of their own race. I think up to the time when war was declared there was a sentiment among that class of our fellow citizens against the declaration of war—it was a mere sentiment; but I believe the vast majority of them were satisfied that, if in the judgment of the President and the Congress it was necessary, in vindication of American rights, to declare war, they would elect to go with America.

I have personal assurances of that from my German-American friends. I have letters and I have had personal communications orally, assuring me that that was the general sentiment among Germans. Some of the German newspaper press published in this country, believing to the contrary, were inciting their compatriots to resistance and opposition, thinking, for some reason, that that was the best policy for the German-American newspaper; but that idea has been repudiated by the real Germans; and, if you will observe, their societies and press have, since the declaration of war, on many occasions declared their loyalty to America.

I wish to state, and to record it as a matter of record, that in 1913, in August of that year, I was in Europe, having been commissioned by the President of the United States to interest foreign governments to participate in the Panama-Pacific Exposition, to which the President had invited the nations of the world. In Munich I sought an interview with Count von Bernstorff, who then and until recently was the ambassador to the United States from Germany.

Among other reasons which I urged why Germany should participate in that exposition celebrating the construction of the Panama Canal was that there was a vast number of Germans in this country who would take a pride in an exhibition made of the resources of the German Empire. He immediately resented that. Much to my surprise, he substantially said, "Do not talk about those people. We do not care what they think or want. They have deserted the Fatherland. They have run away to avoid military duty. They have been false to the old traditions. They are outlaws"; and that was the sentiment of official Germany then, as I believe it is to-day. They regard these good people, who are expected to render service to the autocracy now, as outlaws, as men who have fled from their duty. I think our German-American citizens should know and understand that, which is the Prussian estimate of them, and they would be confirmed in what I believe to be their sincere conviction, that their duty lies with America in this struggle.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from California has expired. The question is on the substitute of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the request seconded? [A pause.] The Chair does not think so.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for a rising count.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those who sustain the request for the yeas and nays will please rise. [A pause.]

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. This is for the yeas and nays, Senators. Do you not want to go on record?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those who are opposed will rise. [A pause.] The request is not sustained. The question is on the substitute offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The substitute was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is upon the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] intended to offer his amendment—and I agreed with him to accept it—as a part of my amendment. I should like, therefore, to have them considered together. His amendment provides a method of procedure which will make my amendment effective, if carried. It has been read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado accepts the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota. The Secretary will state the amendment as it now stands.

Mr. BRADY. Let the amendment be stated, Mr. President.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, the following——

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask to have the Secretary read the whole amendment. I did not hear it.

The SECRETARY. The amendment of the Senator from Colorado reads as follows:

On page 6, line 13, strike out the words "any person to serve" and insert in place thereof the word "service"; strike out all after the words "who is," on line 14 of the same page down to and including the word "organization" on line 19 of the same page and insert the words "conscientiously opposed to engaging in such service," so that the clause as amended will read:

And nothing in this act contained shall be construed to require or compel service in any of the forces herein provided for by any person who is conscientiously opposed to engaging in such service. The President shall make rules and regulations to carry out the terms and provisions of this section and provide for the issuance of certificates of exemption, or partial or limited exemption, and for a system to exclude and discharge individuals from selective draft.

There shall be created, under the direction of the President, local tribunals in the several States or subdivisions thereof composed of the members of the local civil government, to decide all questions of exemption under this act, and also all questions arising under the draft for partial military service, or for including or discharging individuals or classes of individuals from the selective draft which shall be made under the rules and regulations aforesaid, and may also provide for an appeal tribunal.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I wish to offer this amendment not as a part of any other amendment but as an amendment to this bill by itself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado accepted the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota and offered it as a part of his amendment.

Mr. KELLOGG. Well, I withdraw it, then. I do not want it voted on as a part of another amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. I am sorry I misstated the understanding that I thought I had. I will offer that amendment as a part of my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Colorado as modified has been stated.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Colorado now has offered the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota as a part of his amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; he has.

Mr. KENYON. I ask the Senator, then, if he will not change the word "may" in the last line to "shall"? As this amendment now stands, the President may provide for an appeal tribunal. I think we should leave it in such shape that he shall provide for it.

Mr. THOMAS. I will accept that amendment.

Mr. KENYON. I suggest, then, inserting the word "shall" in the last line instead of "may."

The SECRETARY. So that it will read "shall also provide for an appeal tribunal."

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I want to hear the first part of that read, so that we can see what the exemptions are and who can be exempted on account of conscientious scruples about going into war.

Mr. KELLOGG. It does not provide any exemption at all.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that the amendment be read in extenso.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order. The amendment has been read, but the Senate is not in order, so that the Senators can hear it. Let us have order in the Senate.

The Secretary again stated the amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I simply want to say that this provision practically excuses from entering into this war any American citizen who has a conscientious objection against joining the service in this war; and, of course, it practically annihilates and destroys the whole system of compulsory service provided in the bill.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I wish to say that with the amendment of the Senator from Colorado coupled up with this I am opposed to both of them. I am in favor of my amendment because it has been approved by the War Department and by the chairman of this committee; but coupled up with an amendment which excuses anyone who has scruples against going to war, I am opposed to it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, there is a great deal of force in what the Senator from North Dakota has said; but this bill does provide for an exemption of all these citizens who have conscientious scruples, provided they belong to some religious organization. Now, either that should go out of this bill or the amendment which I have offered should go in. There are plenty of loopholes in this bill of which the so-called slacker will take advantage without expressing the existence of any conscientious scruples. My amendment, however, will equalize this bill and make the exemption as extensive as the thing which it assumes to exempt whether the individual coming within the exemption belongs to a religious denomination or not.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, under the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is reminded that the Senator from California has spoken on this amendment once.

Mr. PHELAN. Excuse me—not on this amendment. This is an amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado. Am I in order, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will resolve the doubt in favor of the Senator from California. He may proceed.

Mr. PHELAN. Under the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado, not only those who have conscientious scruples will be exempted, but it would also give an opportunity to others for their own convenience, arising from their own lack of zeal, their own cowardice, to make a declaration or oath that they have conscientious scruples; and hence it would open the door to all the slackers, so called, who desired to avoid Army duty.

I do not quite agree with the Senator from Colorado in his desire to equalize all classes of citizens, those who do not belong to any society and those who do belong to societies, which for time immemorial or since their foundation, have been opposed to war. I happen to have in my hand a letter from the Friends' Society. It is the only society that I know that has conscientious scruples against war. There may be others. It reads as follows—and I think it would be a matter of information to the Senate at this moment:

DEAR SENATOR PHELAN: In the April 2 address of President Wilson I find this clause: "Who should in my opinion be chosen upon the principle of universal liability service."

For 20 years I have been the presiding clerk or moderator of California yearly meeting of the Friends' Church, an organization in entire harmony with the Society of Friends as a whole, which for more than 250 years has declined to take part in war because we dare not take human life under any circumstances. Three times each year in our business meetings our members are asked the following question:

"Do you maintain the Christian principle of peace and consistently refrain from bearing arms and from performing military service as incompatible with the precepts and spirit of the Gospel?"

Germany's military system has driven all the Friends from that country.

Will the United States follow the English conscription plan and imprison and torture those who are conscientiously opposed to taking human life?

Sincerely, JOHN CHAWNER.

765 SUMMIT AVENUE, PASADENA, CAL.,
April 3, 1917.

I take it that this is an organization that is contemplated in the committee's bill that for a long time, without any expectation of war, has committed its members to a conscientious opposition to war. I think if we came to the pass where we needed more recruits I would be in favor of calling upon the Society of Friends to supply their quota; but there is no necessity now. If we respect an organization of this kind that has for a long time, not in contemplation of this war or any other war, conscientiously declared its principles, it would be well for us to do it without opening the doors to every slacker who, without any sincere and long-established convictions might declare also his so-called "conscientious scruples" in order to avoid service.

When the Spaniards invaded the New World they found on the islands of the Pacific and the Caribbean a great number of people who were pacifists, and others who were warlike. They called the pacifists in contempt "pacificos," and they defined a pacifico to be a fellow who would, without resistance, bare his neck to the Spanish yoke. I think that the pacificos ought to be taught the lesson of America—that we bare our neck to no man's yoke, and that we will take up arms, and if necessary sacrifice our lives, rather than to submit to voluntary slavery. So I have no respect for a pacifico who submits to oppression without resistance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from California has expired.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, lest there should be some confusion about this amendment, I wish to say that it seems to me that the amendment that was intended to be offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] is an amendment that will add strength to the bill; but coupled with the amendment as it now is, in my judgment, it is injurious to the bill and should be voted down.

The committee gave careful consideration to all of these matters and has presented here a bill that is workable and fair; but the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota makes the matter of local control of the exemptions plain and explicit, and it should be adopted.

Therefore I wish to say that it is my purpose to vote against this amendment as it is presented here at this time, and if the Senator from Minnesota again offers this amendment alone I shall be very glad to support it.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado inadvertently made a mistake in a statement a while ago in his remarks. I did not dare to ask leave to correct him at that time, in view of the fact that he had only five minutes at his disposal——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would remind the Senator from Montana that he has spoken once on this matter.

Mr. MYERS. Not on this amendment. This is the Thomas amendment. I spoke on the La Follette amendment. The La Follette amendment was up when I was speaking last. This is the first time I have spoken on the Thomas amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That was a substitute for the Thomas amendment; and the Chair is of the opinion that the discussion ought not to be prolonged when it contravenes the spirit of the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. MYERS. Are not the La Follette amendment and the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] different things?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. One is offered as a substitute for the other, and the speaking was upon the amendment. The unanimous-consent agreement, as the Chair understands it, limits the speaking to five minutes and once for each Senator.

Mr. MYERS. If the Chair rules that speaking on the La Follette amendment bars me from speaking on the Thomas amendment, of course, I shall not appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, as modified.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KELLOGG and Mr. McKELLAR addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair believes that the amendment presented by the Senator from Minnesota should be next considered, because it has been discussed already, and the Senate is familiar with it.

Mr. KELLOGG. I offer the amendment, and make no remarks upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add the following to section 3:

The President shall make rules and regulations to carry out the terms and provisions of this section; and provide for the issuance of certificates of exemption or partial or limited exemption, and for a system to exclude and discharge individuals from selective draft. There shall be created, under the direction of the President, local tribunals in the several States or subdivisions thereof, composed of the members of the local civil government, to decide all questions of exemptions under this act, and also all questions arising under the draft for partial military service or for including or discharging individuals or classes of individuals from the selective draft, which shall be made under the rules and regulations aforesaid, and shall also provide for an appeal tribunal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. I offer an amendment, which I ask that the Secretary may read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, after line 11, on page 2:

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to raise 500,000 volunteers under the provisions of "An act to provide for the raising of the volunteer forces of the United States in times of actual or threatened war," approved April 25, 1914, in so far as the same is not inconsistent with the terms of this act; and he shall immediately call out and train 500,000 volunteers. Should that number not enlist within 90 days all deficiencies shall be secured by draft as herein provided.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, earlier in the week I addressed the Senate on the subject of this amendment, and I do not propose now to go into it further than to repeat that this is the amendment which those who believe in the volunteer system going along with the conscription system favor.

Mr. President, I might say that under the terms of this amendment the bill known as the conscription bill is not interfered with at all. Conscription goes on just as before. All the arrangements are to be made. The enrollment, the exemption, and the conscription, everything goes on in perfect order under the bill, amended as well as unamended.

All that this amendment does is to authorize the President to call out 500,000 volunteers between now and the time when the conscription bill can possibly go into effect. The Secretary of War very frankly stated before our committee that it would be impossible to enroll all the 6,000,000 of men under the conscription bill, to fix the exempted classes, to have the conscripts in readiness to begin training. He said it would be at least August 1 before that could be done.

Now, my amendment simply provides that the President shall at once call out 500,000 volunteers and begin to train them. It is not expected to send troops—untrained volunteer troops—to Europe, any more than it is to send untrained conscript troops.

The troops are to be trained in precisely the same way whether they are volunteers or whether conscripts. The only purpose of this amendment is to give the patriotic citizens of America the right to volunteer and go out to fight for their country.

We hear on all sides that there are no patriotic men in this country, still I for one believe that Americans are just as patriotic as ever, and I believe if they were given the opportunity in separate units to volunteer and fight for their country they would be doing it, and I think time is the essence of the situation.

I think the very first thing we ought to do is to organize an army, and not just prepare for organization. Suppose we pass this bill as it is and then wait for three months. We do not know what is going to happen. Many changes may take place in three months. But if you organize an army now, if you provide that volunteers may come forward now, if you put them in training camps now, if you start and train them now the Germans will know that we mean business, and we will mean business.

I want to say, Mr. President, here and now, that I have no confidence in the kind of fighters that have to be driven to fight. If a man wants to fight he has to have the fighting spirit in him. If a nation wants to fight it has to have the fighting spirit in it.

I believe America has that fighting spirit, and that all we need to do is to give an opportunity to those who want to fight for their country to come forward and fight for her, and they will respond in the old-fashioned American way. This plan does not interfere with conscription. Conscription is just made more complete and stronger.

This is the opportunity for all of you who believe that American patriotism is not dead, that we are still a courageous people, that we are still a brave people, to show your belief by your votes. The opportunity is here now for you to give patriotic men a chance, to give free men a chance.

We are putting the burden of this war upon a very small class of our citizens. Why not let them all come in who desire to come? That is the question I ask of you, Senators, to put to yourselves now.

I do not believe that the patriotic, courageous men of America have any sympathy with the idea that patriotism is dead and that we have degenerated into a nation of conscripts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senate will adopt my amendment.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, two plans for raising an army are before us for consideration, presented, respectively, by the majority and by the minority of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Both plans recognize the necessity of relying ultimately upon universal compulsory military service. Both plans afford to those who may be drafted an opportunity to volunteer in either the Regular Army or the National Guard. Both plans provide for raising and equipping a new organization, outside of the Regular Army and the National Guard, amounting at first to 500,000 men, with authority vested in the President to increase that number by 500,000 additional men. Where the plans differ is in the method of raising the first 500,000 men for the new organization.

The majority recommend that volunteers be admitted only to the existing military units—to the Regular Army and to the National Guard; that the new organization be raised solely by the method of a selective draft, under which each citizen liable to service shall be assigned by the military authorities to the post where he may be most useful to his country, not where he may prefer for reasons of his own to perform his service.

The minority recommend that volunteers be invited to enlist in the new organization for a period of 90 days, and should the full number of 500,000 not be secured within that period, the balance be secured by selective draft.

It clearly appears that both the majority and the minority recognize the merits of the selective draft as our ultimate reliance for an adequate army, and that both recognize the advantage of permitting accessions to our Army through the volunteer system. But the minority would give the volunteer system a chance to supply the new organizations at the outset; they would permit the volunteer spirit to exhaust itself before the selective draft is resorted to.

The minority evidently hope that the new organizations may be completed before the volunteering shall cease, but no one can assure us that such a happy result would be reached. No one claims with confidence that all the men we may need in the present war may surely be secured under the volunteer system.

We can all see that it would be a source of gratification for our country and for our allies and a fine object lesson for our enemies if the Members of Congress in both Houses could reach a substantial agreement upon this one point of difference and adopt a compromise that would substantially satisfy both groups.

But such a compromise is hardly possible where a change in a traditional policy seems desirable, particularly in a matter of such importance as the method of raising an army. Instead of chagrin that we can not agree on all points, we should rejoice that our differences are so small.

As this debate closes it is evident that the fine fighting qualities and the patriotic spirit of the volunteer are fully appreciated. To him we all accord his cherished opportunity for voluntary service. It is equally evident that our admiration for the volunteer proceeds from our realization that he has qualities that have not been granted to every citizen. And because we may not have enough of these exceptional men to win the fight we must plan from the outset to draw upon the mass of our citizens under a plan which will insure us the maximum fighting strength of the Nation's manhood in case the exigency demands that maximum strength. We must conserve our forces for the last lap of a long race.

An immediate call for volunteers would doubtless bring the enlistment of many thousands, perhaps hundreds of thousands, of men within a few days. But we are not supplied with tents, cots, clothing, equipment, and arms for so many recruits. Our Mexican expedition exhausted our supplies and our appropriations. The last session of Congress closed without the passage of an Army appropriation bill. While we are waiting for the enrolling and classifying of our potential soldiers we shall be gathering our supplies and constructing our barracks and training our officers for their use. The time will not be wasted.

Meanwhile volunteers, more than half a million, will be eagerly sought and received into our existing Regular Army and National Guard, where officers are ready to train them and veterans are ready to set them a good example. I have the word of the Secretary of War for this readiness to accept volunteers when the law permits their enlistment for the period of the existing war. It would be manifestly unfair to urge enlistment now in the Regular Army when such enlistment would require three years' service with the colors and three years' service in the reserve.

Most of us recognize the great advantage of having troops in the same regiment as nearly homogeneous as possible. The Regulars and the militia are now composed exclusively of volunteers. It is desirable that recruits for these branches of the service continue to be volunteers. In this way jealousies and distinctions and discriminations are avoided. No one would think of having black men and white men serving in the same regiment. There are similar objections to having volunteers and conscripts serving side by side. The volunteer may think he is superior to the conscript. The conscript may think so, or he may not. But the difference is bound to be discussed and it will probably cause trouble.

For the same reasons the new organizations, the units made up of the 500,000 men who will be raised under the first section of the bill, should be homogeneous. If the first regiments should be raised by enlisting volunteers, and then volunteering should cease, it is obvious that losses in the volunteer regiments must be supplied by conscripts. And at once we should have the condition that we are seeking to avoid.

Moreover, the Secretary of War would be expected to give the volunteer system a fair trial. Those who favor the volunteer system would be reluctant to see it fail. They would urge more and more drastic methods of stimulating recruiting. It was my fortune to spend several months in the Canadian Provinces in 1915 and 1916, and I know at first hand of the taunts and worse that greeted every man of military age from every billboard and shop window, at every public meeting, and in gatherings of every sort. "Volunteer" means one who enlists of his own free will. Recruiting methods such as I have seen in practice rob enlistment of every trace of genuine voluntary action. They smack rather of duress, intimidation, and deception. I fear that advocates of volunteering would not be satisfied unless the most extreme methods should be tried.

I can well imagine the sullen resentment of a young man who finds himself wearing a uniform as a result of a "voluntary" enlistment secured by such means. His decision may have been hasty and ill-considered, the result of impulse and soon regretted. But it was voluntary. He has only himself to blame.

But if he finds himself, even though reluctant, in the service of his country as a result of a general law, impartially enforced, he blames no one—himself least of all—and regret and remorse are not in him. Moreover, his comrades are his equals in every respect—no one can claim any superiority in courage or patriotism—and he knows that he has had a fair chance. One of the miracles of humanity is our resignation to certain death a few years hence because we know it is inevitable and because we know it is universal.

We must not divide our young men into heroes and stay-at-homes. We must not take advantage of their impulses to lure them into decisions they may regret. We must not browbeat them into a dangerous service when we know they do not realize what that service means. Let us show them, honestly and patiently, why we are fighting this war; why their services are required; and what methods we are employing to treat them fairly and impartially.

With every sympathy for the high motives of the minority in seeking to bridge the gap between the volunteer system and the selective draft, I am convinced that a compromise is not in this crisis desirable. Even if such a compromise were acceptable to the people at this time, I am satisfied it would not prove acceptable when the plan had to be tried out. Fairness and heroic measures are required of us in times of great stress. It is better to meet the issue squarely and abide by the decision of the majority than to try a middle ground which may prove dangerous.

I shall vote for the immediate application of the selective draft system in the happy assurance that those who favor the volunteer system, in case they are outvoted, will join us in passing the bill by a rousing majority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from New Hampshire has expired.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to make any extended remarks on this bill, but I simply wish to state briefly the reasons for my vote.

I have favored the volunteer system for raising an army in the United States. The very best soldiers of the Nation in the past have come from the volunteers. However, I have always considered and viewed this subject in times of peace when it was unnecessary to raise an army beyond peace strength. For this purpose it has proven satisfactory to most nations, but it seems to be undisputed that in times of war it has sooner or later broken down and it has become necessary to resort to draft. It seems to be the opinion of those who have made careful study of the question, and who have become expert in military matters, that a selective draft system will be necessary sooner or later in the present emergency. We are cautioned by the special commissioners from France and Great Britain, now in our country on a joint mission to cooperate with the United States against the common enemy, not to make the mistakes their countries did, but to profit by their errors and start right. If we are obliged to resort to the draft at all, it would seem better for the soldier and the country to begin with the system, as there could then be no stigma attached to anyone who may have failed to volunteer. All the soldiers of a similar age will have offered their services to the country, and it will not be the fault of the man who is left at home if he is not accepted by the Government. All those remaining at home will be required to perform some other patriotic service of equal importance. This method is expected to bring about universal obligation in order to secure the greatest military efficiency. Those who may not wish the selective-draft system to apply to them are at perfect liberty to volunteer in either the National Guard or the Regular Army to bring these organizations up to war strength under present laws, which will require something over 500,000 men.

There is another and stronger reason for favoring the selective system. We find those who were originally opposed to this war, and people with pro-German sympathies, crying for the volunteer system, but intimating at the same time that they believe it will fail. They seem to be opposed to the selective system because of the fear that it will produce the necessary army to conquer Germany. Some have even gone so far afield as to argue that the selective-draft system is unconstitutional under our form of government, and, to sustain their contention, have the audacity and gross ignorance to point to the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution, which has no application whatever to the power of the Government to raise an army.

While personally I would prefer to see the volunteer system tried out first under the same restrictions as laid down for the selective-draft system, yet inasmuch as the President, who is Commander in Chief of the Army, and the General Military Staff, his chief advisors, are all of the opinion that the best results can be obtained by using the selective-draft system now, I am willing to lay aside my personal preference and yield to the wishes of those who are specially charged with the responsibility of carrying on the war. The time for argument over details is at an end. The time for united action is at hand. It is the plain duty of all Americans now to work and act together for the honor and safety of the country. We are now at war, and this is a war measure, and I shall not place a single straw in the way of those charged with the duty of vigorously prosecuting the war and bringing it to a speedy and successful conclusion.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I am for the pending measure, sponsored by the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. I am prepared, with some misgivings, to vote for it; but I desire that it shall provide for the right of our people to volunteer and the acceptance of volunteers up to the time that the draft shall be actually made. I have followed the President in his request for a declaration of war; I have followed him in all the legislation that he has asked us to enact; and, so far as may be consistent with the retention of the liberties of our people, I shall follow him in all that he may desire for the successful prosecution of this war.

But in the exigencies and in the emergency which require extraordinary legislation upon our part I would endeavor to disturb as little as possible the habits of life and the homes of our people. The great desideratum of government, after all, is the contentment and the happiness of the governed. So far as human wisdom could devise America presents to the world this desideratum. This war, rightly and righteously undertaken, would be a sorry thing if it left an irritated, discontented, and unhappy people. When the safety of the Nation requires, we may justly demand the maximum, the supreme human sacrifice, but this maximum sacrifice must be taken with the minimum of harm and hurt to the happiness and contentment of our people. The American people can not be measured nor their attitude determined by comparison with any other race. Ours are a people who have never known drastic restrictive measures. Little have we felt and little have we heeded the heavy hand of the law. The discipline requiring great sacrifice and the subordination of the individual to the State is little known to us. A contented, happy, free people in the largest sense of the word have understood and enjoyed the fullest liberty. Overnight, now, as it were, the most drastic of all laws we apply to this people. I will do it as an emergency and a war measure, but only as an emergency and a war measure do I acquiesce in it. I would, however, break the force of it during the period of preparation—provide, if possible, the solvent, that when the day comes the act may be better understood.

Admittedly the mechanics of the draft will require some months for preparation and perfection. During that period the call could be made for volunteers, and volunteers accepted. Contemporaneously we may prepare for the draft and receive those who wish at once to serve the Nation. Under the laws of 1914 and 1916, as was demonstrated by the eloquent Senator from Missouri, the waste and the inefficiency attributed to the old volunteer system will be eliminated, and the men who, in the interim until the draft shall occur, present themselves as volunteers will be trained and equipped with the same prudence and care as those who will be selected by the draft.

Under the proposal of the amendment presented for volunteers, volunteers and conscripts are to be trained alike and similarly equipped. Neither will be sent into action until entirely fit, and both will have the utmost care bestowed upon them; both will be subject to the same law, the like rules, and the identical rigorous preparation. Under these circumstances I can see no good reason why men who to-day want to serve their country should not be permitted to fight for it; why those who wish to volunteer in the three months which must elapse before the draft may not be received and enrolled.

Our people are not yet war conscious. What a rude awakening the draft will be! We are battering down the last distinguishing barrier; we are now destroying the last proud tradition that made us a Nation of sovereign free men, instead of a nation of mere military units. I am willing to do this temporarily for world democracy; that the philosophy of government which would obscure the light to mankind and would retard civilization may not be vindicated and justified by victory; that the intellectual and the spiritual, necessary for the character of a nation, and without which no nation can permanently endure, may be dominant world factors.

I would do it, though, in the manner which would least disturb the domestic relations of our people, least violate their sensibilities and their traditions, least affect their contentment and their happiness. And this we can do by the preparation of our volunteers, by making our people war conscious, in familiarizing them with the emergency and the imperative necessity.

We ask nothing in relation to the volunteers that will not be done in relation to the conscripts as well. I am unable to follow some of the arguments which I have heard on this floor, by which the volunteer is said to be unequal, inept, and unfit, but by which the same man, when he is conscripted, has every military virtue. The amendment which is proposed here now, which is asked to be accepted by the distinguished Senator from Oregon, merely provides that contemporaneously with the preparation for the draft, merely while we are getting ready for the draft, which we all accord and for which all of us will vote, you permit the Americans with red blood in their veins, who want to fight for their country, to have that right by voluntarily asserting it unto their Government.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the objection to the proposition of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is that by adopting temporarily the volunteer system you, as it were, prevent the full operation and best use of the draft system. The reason that conscription has been odious is because of the fact that in this country a volunteer system has always preceded the draft system. All eligible persons who failed to become volunteers were regarded as "slackers," shirkers, and cowards, even when valid excuses existed. That is the principal reason why hatred attached to the draft. The odium will be again renewed if you have the two systems by which men are enlisted in the service of the United States.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I can not yield in my five minutes.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator yield for just a question?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well.

Mr. REED. Have you not all been boasting that you have those two systems now?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, Mr. President, I want to say that, in my judgment, the time has arrived when we must have but one system; and when we have that one system there will be no taunt of cowardice directed to the man who fails to join the Army. The very thing which has produced "slackers," the thing which has visited upon the conscript system the popular reproach, lies in the plan under which opportunity was first given to volunteer with consequent reflection upon those who later had to be conscripted. No odium attaches to the French, Russian, German, and Austrian soldiers, and they were all conscripted. They have no volunteer system in those countries. We are now entering upon a broader field than we have ever ventured upon before. The present world conflict is more gigantic than any war which has occurred in its history. There are 19,000,000 men in arms in Europe to-day, and more than 10,000,000 have been killed or disabled. It seems to me that we can never raise our proportion of soldiers for this conflict under any system of volunteering. In every war of any magnitude each nation sooner or later has been compelled to resort to conscription. We did in the Revolutionary War, the War of 1812, and in the Civil War.

Suppose we have to raise 2,000,000, or 3,000,000, or perhaps 4,000,000 men; will anyone contend that we can raise these armies under a volunteer system? Yet if we rely first upon the volunteer system and then resort to conscription the draft will again become odious to the people and every eligible man who fails to volunteer will be stigmatized as a dodger. The result will be when conscription comes, the drafted man will lack that inspiration of courage and devotion which a soldier ought to possess. But if men understand that they owe the duty of bearing the burdens when they have shared the benefits of government, they will recognize when drafted that they are simply performing a service which they should not avoid.

When volunteering precedes a draft the latter system becomes not only degrading to the men drafted, but it is demoralizing in its effects upon all the eligibles not in the service, and they constitute from five to ten times as many as those who enter the ranks. Eligible men who refuse to volunteer when their country calls, as I have said, are regarded as shirkers, dodgers, and cowards, and the consciousness of such sentiment toward them weakens their moral stamina. There is nothing that so saps the sterling qualities of manhood as a sense of want of courage. Thus the establishment of a volunteer system to precede conscription in a great and long war will sow the seeds of degeneration of the spirit among many of the eligible men, which ultimately must have its deplorable effect upon the character of a great part of the people of a nation.

When we find that we must calculate upon large armies, knowing that we can not raise them by the volunteer system, it is best and fairest that we should start with the one system to which we must come. George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, and Abraham Lincoln advised it. It can not be said to be an un-American policy or such true Americans and patriots as they were would never have urged it. Nearly all the military experts both of America and Europe have declared for it. The President of the United States, who is the Commander in Chief of the Army and who will receive the credit or suffer the blame for the conduct of the war, wants it. Should we tie his hands in such a crisis? That system is called the selective-draft system. It is, in fact, the selective-service system.

First. It is equitable. It is founded upon the theory that equal benefits of government should compel the carrying of equal burdens of the Government; that the rich and poor should, as to enlistment, be upon an exact equality; that it is unjust for willing hands to do all the work and the unwilling to do none.

Second. It is expedient. It is not best for the future civilization of the Nation that only the brave, strong, full-blooded, patriotic Americans, the flower of the youth of the land who would volunteer, should be sacrificed in the battles fought for all, and that the future generations should be built up from the weak and those who shirked their duty.

Third. It is an economic necessity. The most effective participation in war is supplying those agencies most needed. When the British Premier says the paramount necessity of Great Britain is ships, ships, ships; when the French commissioners say France needs most not soldiers but foodstuffs, coal, steel products, and military supplies, it is an economic waste to permit farmers, chemists, miners, munition makers, shipbuilders, and factory hands for Army supplies to abandon their work so necessary for the success of our cause to volunteer into a service less needed. The citizen must surrender the individual right to choose his occupation which he possesses in time of peace and yield to the paramount necessities of the Nation in time of war. The selective-service system proposes to refuse to draft men who are in pursuits the products of which are most needed in the prosecution of the war.

For these reasons, Mr. President, I contend that the passage of this bill is wise, expedient, and necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Colorado has expired.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, one of the most singular illustrations of the versatility of United States Senators is the ability of Senators to argue awhile on one side of a question and then argue awhile on the other side, and in both instances to reach the particular conclusion that suits the purpose of the moment.

That eminent gentleman, Mr. Æsop, who gave the world so many delightful fables describes a certain animal that had one set of legs on its belly and another set of legs on its back. When it was pursued and the set of legs it was then using grew tired it just flopped over and used the other set of legs. In this way the strange creature could run perpetually and so was never overtaken. We have that class of logicians in the Senate. We are told in one breath by Senators who advocate the draft that it is all right to have the draft, because along with the draft we are going to give an opportunity for 500,000 men to volunteer in the National Guard and Regular Army, and hence that there is a full outlet for all the patriotism and all the valor of all American citizens, because they can volunteer. This then, gentlemen, is highly desirable and it will work admirably. In the next breath we are told that if we permit volunteering and conscription at the same time the two systems can not exist together. Thus we have these gentlemen running part of the time on one set of legs and part of the time on another set of legs, but in each instance they are able to vote for the conscription bill. Now, is it not time to quit that sort of thing in the Senate?

Either it is true that we have here a conscription plan without a volunteer plan connected with it, or it is not true. If the volunteer plan is connected with it now, then it does not lie in the mouths of those who advocate the bill to criticize for a moment those who advocate carrying the volunteer system a little further and permitting genuine volunteering in this country.

Mr. President, we have been told that the volunteer plan will get us so many troops that the Government can not arm and equip them; that they will come in hordes and droves and overrun us. In the next breath we are told that the volunteer plan will break down, and that we can not get enough of troops by that system. Those two propositions can not stand together. At the same time those gentlemen who tell us that the Government can not equip the volunteers as fast as they will come also tell us that the Secretary of War has assured them that he will equip 500,000 volunteers if only they will enlist in the National Guard and the Regular Army. How can those propositions stand together?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Missouri has expired.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, we have wasted much time in discussing the relative merits of the volunteer and the draft systems. This is a cold, hard, business proposition. The grim necessity of war involves, of course, every emotion of the human heart. They are the inevitable accompaniments of every conflict, but should not in any manner be allowed to control the cool, unemotional judgment in prosecuting the war, having before us always the end to be attained. The desolation that comes to a land is as grevious when brought by war fought by draft as volunteers; the empty chair at the fireside is no less heartbreaking when emptied by volunteering as by drafting. The widows and the orphans and all the intimate human suffering that comes as a necessary accompaniment of war is no less grevious if brought about by either system.

The thing that concerns us now is how best, surest, swiftest to end successfully this conflict. In every war of any magnitude in which we have engaged when grim necessity laid its relentless hand upon us we disregarded the sentiments and emotions that cluster around the patriotic volunteer and demanded the service of every citizen eligible to aid in achieving the end sought. In the Confederacy after the volunteers in 1862 had enlisted for 12 months the Confederate Congress passed a draft law, conscripting and keeping in line those who had already volunteered, as well as recruiting with this method new forces. The same was true on the northern side. Were the glorious achievements on both sides of this heroic conflict, made possible by volunteer and conscription alike, any less glorious because of conscription? These are but sentiments, high and noble, indeed, but they sink into insignificance by the side of the principle involved in this conflict and the ultimate triumph of that principle. It is needless for us to protest against our adopting for the present war the military policies now practiced by Europe; the methods of modern warfare have changed so rapidly and so radically that we are practically upon an unknown turbulent sea of conflict, without any precedent or ancient landmarks to guide us. We are in this war, so far as our relations to the central powers are concerned and so far as our military relations are concerned, upon identically the same footing as the allies. Would it not be folly for us not to profit by their experience, to avoid their blunders, and avail ourselves of those means which they have used successfully? The places and manner of fighting is radically changed. Flying brigades people the air and fleets sail under the ocean, whilst invisible guns miles away drop death and destruction in unseen cities.

Modern warfare, depending upon the practical application of scientific discoveries, calls for the highest possible skill in men and officers. I therefore am going to vote for this bill, because I have confidence in those upon whom we have laid the responsibility of administering the affairs of our Nation in times like these. I believe in their patriotism as I believe in my own. I believe that they are better prepared to know in regard to this particular matter than I. I believe that the advice given and the measures asked for are the result of mature deliberation to know the best way to maintain our rights and to uphold the honor and dignity of the American Government. When Mr. Lincoln, in 1861, without warrant of law, but on account of the emergency, called for volunteers and raised the military and naval forces at his own behest, he was denounced as a usurper and a despot. The same criticism was laid at the door of certain Confederate leaders; the same was charged against George Washington, but the spirit of democracy in America has not suffered and will not suffer, for the reason that the end and aim of every American of high or low degree is to maintain our splendid democratic institutions. I have no fear of our losing any of our rights by a temporary surrender of certain peace privileges. In times of a national emergency we surrender them the more willingly because we would enjoy them during times of peace more fully and more perpetually. "He that saveth his life shall lose it" is a doctrine as divine as its source.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, the discussion this evening reminds me of the fact that time, as it courses onward, still unrolls the volume of concealment.

I do not question the patriotism of the President. It is not my province to question the patriotism of the General Staff. They may be doing that which they think best to meet the present emergencies. But I do not believe there is a man beneath the American flag to-day who would vote for conscription if he had the faith that I have in the heroism and the patriotism of the American people and believed that they would respond promptly to the President's call to arms.

Conscription imputes disloyalty to the American citizen. It is only done because the Congress evidently believes that he will not respond. I do not share in that belief. I trust him absolutely.

If this Government is to be maintained upon the principle that all the just powers of government are derived from the consent of the governed, then with all my heart I believe that the American volunteer can be relied upon to furnish the necessary force to defend the American flag, and I am not going to vote to put a stigma upon his good name or question his patriotism. I am not going to vote to affront his manhood until he proves to me that he is disloyal or recreant to his duty. He has not done anything in the past to justify even a suspicion of disloyalty. He has not been false to the flag; he has not hesitated or faltered when duty called; and I do not think he deserves such treatment as is proposed in this bill.

The Senator from Colorado says that "it implies some sort of degeneracy" to refuse to volunteer if this conscript law shall be enacted, and that it brings about a want of harmony between the men in the Army. Well, if the citizen wants to fight, if he wants to do his duty, he knows what his duty is, and just the minute he is permitted to perform that duty under the law he will either do it or he will not. If he declines to do it, then you have got to take him by the scruff of the neck; you have got to drive him as you would a dumb brute. But if he is alive to the perils of his Government, if he is sensible of his obligations to his Government, when the call to arms is made by the Chief Executive under the law he will respond in 1917 as he has done in all the days of American history.

I should prefer the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee without the last three lines:

> Should that number not enlist within 90 days, all deficiencies shall be secured by draft as herein provided.

These lines should be stricken from the bill. I desire that the Army shall be raised by the volunteer system, and I do not want the threat of conscription held over the citizen to coerce him to do his manifest duty to his country. Let his service be a free-will offering—the tribute of a loyal heart to his country in the hour of peril.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I am strongly in favor of the selective draft provided in the pending bill and shall vote for it. In my opinion it is the only sure way to obtain a fair distribution of the labors and responsibilities entailed upon our country by the war.

Patriotism imposes an obligation on all citizens to sustain the State everywhere and always, in peace and in war, and to give everything—if necessary, even all one possesses and life itself—to preserve the Commonwealth. This is not a voluntary obligation which a citizen may assume or refuse at his option, but a bounden duty which must be performed whether he likes it or not.

The State can not exist without taxes, and it does not ask its citizens to pay them as a free-will offering, hoping that enough well-disposed persons will respond to give the necessary revenue; but it provides, under severe penalties, for collecting every dollar due it. The first principle of taxation is equality and uniformity. No Government could exist which forced one class of citizens to pay taxes and exempted others. The same rule prevails in regard to jury duty and quarantine regulations. We should certainly fail to secure good juries if we called for voluntary jurors, and thousands would refuse to rat proof their houses against cholera unless forced to do so. The spirit of our free institutions is that everyone should do his duty, but we provide in every case for enforcing performance. Why have a different system for military duty, the most onerous and important of all?

As President Wilson so well says, "The principle of the selective draft, in short, has at its heart this idea, that there is a universal obligation to serve and that a public authority should choose those upon whom the obligation of military service shall rest, and also in a sense choose those who shall do the rest of the Nation's work."

Mr. President, as I understand the selective draft provided in the pending bill it will put into execution a plan very carefully devised by our highest military and civil authorities, which will select in a fair and impartial way, just to everyone, rich and poor, powerful and weak, a sufficient number of vigorous young men to fight the Nation's battles, and will exempt from military duty certain classes whose work is more essential to the public welfare; in other words, will take for the Army those who ought to fight and leave behind those who ought to perform other service.

If we adopt the volunteer system I doubt that every man will do his duty; many patriotic men will gladly volunteer and give up their lives, but a great many others, who owe the same military service to the State, will hold back for one cause or another and not respond to their country's call. Every citizen of the United States owes the same allegiance to it, and every citizen capable of bearing arms is bound in duty to do so if called upon; indeed, military service is the very highest duty of the citizen—much higher than the contribution of financial aid—and is in no sense a voluntary offering. The volunteer system permits some to perform the greatest possible service, even a sacrifice of life, and allows others to enjoy all the benefits and advantages of government without counter responsibilities. This is wrong, undemocratic, unfair in every way, and not a square deal by any means.

If my relatives are induced by patriotic feeling to fight and die for their fatherland, my neighbors should do likewise. In other words, common honesty and fair play demand a system which treats everyone alike and shows favoritism to none. This thought is well illustrated by a remark made recently by one of my friends in Louisiana. He said that when our trouble with Mexico broke out some time ago two of his sons enlisted in the Army. While they were away doing their duty as volunteers one of their young friends called to see him. Conversation turned upon the war, and being asked why he also did not enlist the young man said with a sneer he would never be caught in a snap like that. My friend was disgusted and told me that while he was willing for his boys to go when called upon, he wished to insist upon the adoption of a system that would insure like treatment to all other persons liable to military duty. I think he is right.

A very serious situation at this time is the necessity of producing a large surplus of food, so that our own people can purchase the necessaries of life at a reasonable cost instead of the exorbitant prices which now prevail, and that we may be able to aid our starving brethren in Europe. There is a general shortage of food throughout the world, and it is imperative that every encouragement be given by us to agriculture. We must induce more people to engage in producing food; we must send additional workers to the farms, and not allow any of those now on the farms to leave them. It is just as essential to have good food to maintain the life and strength of the Nation as it is to have soldiers to fight for the Nation's honor. Napoleon said an army travels on its stomach, and a hungry army is half defeated. These statements are as true when applied to the masses who compose our hundred million citizens as to the soldiers in the field, and it would be extreme folly not to provide ample food for all our people at prices they are able to pay.

Moreover, we can perform no more beneficial or effective service to our allies than by furnishing them food. Twenty million men in Europe have been withdrawn for three years from productive pursuits; business of every kind is disorganized, especially food production and transportation. If we do not help to feed these people, and that quickly, millions of them will starve, and I am not so sure that our own citizens will escape awful suffering if we neglect to produce as much food as possible. There is no division of opinion on this point, and as we need more food to supply our own shortage and great quantities for our allies, it would be very unwise to remove an appreciable number of men from our farms.

If a volunteer system be adopted, no portion of our manhood will rush to the colors more quickly than boys reared in the country, with the breadth of vision and keen ambition imparted by their close touch with nature and the virility which comes from active outdoor life. I do not mean to reflect in the slightest degree upon the boys of cities and towns who will do their duty also, but I do say, and history will confirm the statement, that young men from the country have always borne their full share in every war, aye, more than their share. They will do likewise in this struggle, unless they are encouraged to stay at home and made to understand that they can serve the Nation better as food producers than as fighters.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I have consumed no portion of the time of the Senate throughout the prolonged debate upon this bill, and yet I feel that before a decisive vote is taken I should, as briefly as possible, state some of the things which are in my mind. In the five minutes allowed me under the unanimous-consent agreement I can not canvass the whole field of considerations which induce me to vote as I shall, much less elaborate as fully as I should like any one particular phase of the questions involved. I am therefore constrained to refrain from saying many things I should like to say and to briefly state in what might seem dogmatic form the things I do say.

And first, Mr. President, I wish to observe that the present juncture in which we find ourselves is full of dire possibilities. From this war there may ensue consequences destructive not only of governments as now constituted but, what is of more consequence, the demolition of those ideals of democracy whose permanent contribution to the world we are fond of believing it was the proud distinction of this Republic in a large way to make. If we lose we shall have spent life and treasure in vain, and government by the free peoples of the earth, not excepting our own, shall have proven its inability to vindicate its right to live. The integrity—the very existence—of our own Republic, with all its blessed ideals and sacred purposes, is, I conceive, hanging in the balance and is inextricably involved with the outcome of this gigantic conflict.

I briefly mention my conception of the momentous magnitude of the issue to emphasize the frame of mind in which I approach my vote upon this bill and the proposed amendment. Mr. President, war is abhorrent to me, and I shrink from contemplating the flood of misery in which the future of it might engulf us; but, sir, the issue is such that I am forced to blind my eyes to the awful sight and deaden my ears to the dreadful griefs which it entails and vote for the measure here which will enable us to wage war in the most vigorous way, to the end that it may the sooner be terminated.

If the issue here were a direct one between the selective-draft system and the volunteer system as a fixed policy throughout this war, I should unhesitatingly vote for the selective-draft system. I should do this because I consider it the most fair, equitable, just, and democratic way of apportioning among the citizens the military duty of bearing arms. The volunteer system is the converse of this. Equal benefits impose equal burdens, and I can see no reason why some citizens should be permitted, as they are under the volunteer system, to tender themselves for the performance of their duty to the country and others be permitted to elect an avoidance of that duty.

Again, Mr. President, viewing it from the efficiency side, we must not only, in the first instance, raise an army, but we must as well, out of an abundance of precaution, devise a scheme that will not only supply the wastage in the ranks of the first army raised, but also a scheme that will produce new increments as the future circumstances will require. And I am convinced that the volunteer system, however it might prove efficient in a trifling war, will, reasoning from the experience of the past, prove utterly inefficient in such a prolonged conflict as the present one might be. Prudence tells me that if my apprehensions are great, my preparations should be commensurately so.

And, accordingly, I should oppose a volunteer system as the permanent plan for raising forces in this war.

But we are afforded an alternative here by the McKellar amendment, which provides for raising the first 500,000 men by the volunteer system within 90 days; and in the event that this system will not produce that number within that time, then to complete the quota by selective draft, and in any event, under this amendment, all deficiencies and new increments shall be raised by selective draft. This alternative is neither one thing nor the other. It is a logical inconsistency. In its volunteer phase it repudiates the equity of its selective-draft phase, and in the latter phase it pronounces against the inequality and ineffectiveness of its volunteer phase.

I can not vote for this amendment. It is a compromise that satisfies nothing. If it were adopted it would, to be sure, place the laurels upon the men who came forward under its volunteer provisions and by the same rule would attach ignominy to the men who were caught under its selective-draft provisions. Then, indeed, would the word "conscript," as the term has been used here—I think improperly used—connote shame and reproach. Whereas if the selective-draft system is consistently adhered to, embracing all within the broad scope of its operation, no man will feel, on the one hand, that he is glorified nor, on the other, that he is disgraced, for all will enter the ranks by the same portal.

Again, to raise the 500,000 men provided for by this amendment a process of selection must be undertaken so as to avoid having them draw unduly from the ranks of vital industry; and therefore, after making allowance for the exemptions, to raise this 500,000 men from volunteers it would necessitate the volunteering of a number much larger than the 500,000.

There is no assurance that the required number would volunteer to supply this first increment of 500,000. If we should try the method proposed by this amendment, and if it should not yield the number called for, as it might not because of the impending draft, our position at home and abroad would suffer in the estimate of those whose high opinion and confidence we desire to retain and would lend encouragement to the enemy, who is looking for every sign of weakness, an evidence, however slight, of indifference on our part as an encouragement to them in their hostilities against us.

I have given this subject my careful attention and brought to it the best light of my mind and conscience. I deplore the necessity which compels this Congress to address its deliberations to subjects of this nature. But, Mr. President, facts do not disappear nor circumstances fade by ignoring them. The fact is we are in an inconceivably huge struggle. As revolting as it may be to contemplate, we must face it. And believing we should bear ourselves in this conflict as befits a great and powerful people, I shall vote for this bill without the proposed amendment, because I believe it to be the most effectual way of applying the might of our power to the successful and glorious termination of the conflict.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], an orator of force and fire, one of the ablest, most widely informed, and most effective debaters this body ever had, described, a few days ago, in sentences that blazed, what would happen if there should now be a call for volunteers to fight. He said in effect that drums, "boisterous" drums, would roll, bands would play, bugles blow, rockets burst, orators thunder, and a general uproar ensue from the heart of which American patriotism would leap new panoplied and reborn.

Mr. President, does American patriotism depend on flamboyant methods such as these? Is it not deeper than all this? Does it find nobler expression in the gleam of arms and uniforms, the crash of battle, than elsewhere?

Right here is the vice of the position taken by the Senator from Tennessee, Mr. MCKELLAR, the Senator from Missouri, Mr. REED, and their associates and sympathizers in this controversy. In making enlistment for the fighting line the subject of especial appeal, of especial excitement and emotion, they exalt what is but one branch of a great service army out of all proportion and fall into the very militarism they would avoid. They want the surging crowds, delirious under the sway of music and the thrill of oratory, to call for men to fight, never thinking of the effect of all this on the man who could render more efficient service by remaining with his family, his school, his store, his farm, his bank, or his shop. Under the REED-MCKELLAR brass band and steam piano system he feels that he must fight, or wear through life the coward's name, the slacker's brand. Under the Woodrow Wilson plan there is room and there is glory for all, for the man at home as well as the man at the front.

When Woodrow Wilson, recognizing the willingness of all the people to serve wherever needed most, announced through this bill that the formation of the fighting groups of the peoples' service army was a matter of quiet, orderly, and intelligent selection, and that equal care must be had in ascertaining those best adapted to duties at home, he dealt militarism the severest blow it has yet received and laid the foundations for an ideal army of democracy.

The selective plan embodied in this bill presents the most effective method of mobilizing the resources of our country for a war that may involve its very existence and the fate of all free government. Under the REED-MCKELLAR system, or lack of system, families may be broken up, colleges and schools dissolved, industries crippled, entire sections stripped of able-bodied male inhabitants, farms depopulated, general disorganization and confusion precipitated. Under the Woodrow Wilson system of fair and impartial selection it will be the especial effort of those laboring under the President's direction to keep families intact as much as possible, to keep agriculture, commerce, manufacture, and education from as much disturbance as may be practicable, to keep in mind the fact that as much depends on the men, the women, and the children back home as the men at the struggle's front. And no scornful finger may be pointed at the men in the field, the shop, the factory, the home who are soldiers in the great service army as much as the man with the shoulder straps and gold lace.

Never was severer ridicule leveled at any measure than that heaped by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] on the provisions of this bill providing for the military service of young men. Let me say to him that most of the soldiers, North and South, who fought in the American Civil War, at the time of its occurrence the most gigantic struggle in modern history, were young men. They left a record of valor and endurance that will live on the lips of glory, a heritage that has united the American people forever about the altars of their memory.

Mr. President, the word "conscription" gained its unpopularity from the fact that it was put into operation through stern necessity after volunteers had been invited and a contrast established that should never have been permitted. Let us not repeat that error now.

I believe in compulsory liability to military service because I believe in compulsory liability to jury service, to posse service at the call of local peace officers, to road service, and in compulsory law and order. I believe in it because I believe in equality of burden, equality of sacrifice, and equality of duty to the American flag.

Mr. President, no purer and no sublimer purposes have ever animated any people than those that prompt us now. We have no quarrel with the German people, but with the Prussian autocracy that dominates them—that now would dominate and terrorize mankind. Many of the citizens of my own State are descended from ancestors who came to Texas from Germany to escape this despotism. Let me say here that it has been my privilege to know something of the characteristics and ideals of the Americans of German descent in Texas. My roommate for a considerable time at the University of Texas was John Conrad Romburg, a gifted Texan of German extraction, now an ornament of the legal profession at Gonzales. Many of the most delightful moments of my college life center about my association with him. One of my opponents for the Democratic nomination for the United States Senate in 1912 was another gentleman of German blood, Jacob Wolters. The arena of Texas politics has never seen a manlier nor an abler contestant. He issued a statement a few days ago reviewing the causes that led the United States into this war, and it was one of the most comprehensive and convincing presentations of the American side that has yet appeared. And like Jacob Wolters, the other Americans of German blood in Texas will be just as loyal and as true, as ready to give their life and treasure for American ideals, as any other element of our citizenship—a citizenship so diverse in racial origin, so united in devotion to human liberty. Our entrance into this conflict makes it certain that we must fight as long as Prussian despotism survives, and that may be long after the current struggle has ended. We have lifted the sword for liberty, law, and brotherhood, realizing that the triumph of these principles in the world will mean peace for all mankind forever and forevermore. In adopting the measure before us we will join the American people in sending this message to the successor of Lincoln and Jefferson and Washington at the other end of the historic Avenue, "We are with you, Mr. President, 100,000,000 strong."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Texas has expired.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the foolishness of fighting gently is manifest. The duty is upon Congress to provide an aggressive policy which will make victory certain. Whether we will engage in war with Germany is now behind us. We are at war with that great Empire and the real question to be determined in the consideration of this bill is how we are to provide the soldiers necessary to maintain our Nation's cause. The subject has been under discussion for many days. It is impossible now to go into it in detail, but I favor the selective-draft plan because I believe it is the fairest method that has been suggested, because I am sure that it is effective and will provide the soldiers necessary, and because I am sure it is the scientific and economic method of raising the necessary troops. It will enable us to retain in industry those most useful there and bring to the colors an efficient fighting force.

Some one has said in the Congress that the term "conscript" is synonymous with "convict." The term "conscript," Mr. President, contemplates the service rendered by the citizens under law. It differs in every respect from penal servitude imposed as a punishment for crime, and the Congressman who can not see that distinction finds no proper place here. His proper place is in a hospital for the feeble-minded.

In advocating the selective-draft system I do not discredit the courage of the soldiers who volunteered in our wars during the past. That is conceded by every student of history. But I do believe that the new methods and instruments of warfare have minimized in some degree the elements of personal courage, which was the controlling factor in winning triumphs in the wars of the past. It is true that personal courage must not be discounted, but endurance, power, and fitness have become of the very greatest importance, and I believe the selective draft is better calculated to obtain this than the old volunteer plan.

As a Member of Congress charged with a responsibility the like of which I never expect to experience again during my lifetime, I intend to vote for that plan which I believe is best calculated to bring success to the American arms.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, for reasons to which I need not do more than allude, I have been obliged to refrain from participating in this discussion. I desire, however, to have read into the RECORD at this place a telegram which I have this day sent to the Daily Oklahoman, and I will also make the request to print in the RECORD without reading a brief speech delivered by Daniel Webster in the House of Representatives on the subject of military conscription.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered. The Secretary will read the telegram sent to the desk by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Telegram sent by Senator GORE to the Daily Oklahoman, Apr. 28, 1917.]

Editor OKLAHOMAN,
Oklahoma City, Okla.:

The pending military bill provides for filling up the Regular Army with volunteers and only in case that volunteering fail does it authorize conscription. It provides for filling up the National Guard with volunteers, and only in case volunteering should fail does it authorize conscription. The McKellar amendment provides for raising the additional forces required by the volunteer system, but in case volunteering should fail it authorizes conscription. No one can object to conscription if the system of volunteering should not succeed. We must wage, we must win this war.

Secretary Baker has stated that it would be impossible to organize an army under the selective conscript plan prior to August next. The McKellar amendment would permit the organization of an army of 500,000 volunteers between now and August. Why should we sacrifice this time when it may be the price of an early victory? I am not quite convinced that an army of conscripted slackers (I dislike the word) would excel either in valor, efficiency, or patriotism an army of patriotic volunteers. Why should we brand the American boy as a conscript without affording him the opportunity to earn the glory of an American volunteer? Are we the degenerate sons of heroic sires? Let us give patriotism a chance before resorting to Prussianism.

In the Union Army there were 2,657,000 volunteers. There were only 46,000 conscripts. The drafting of that number occasioned rioting and bloodshed. In the present war England raised 5,000,000 volunteers before resorting to the draft. The London Nation declares that English conscription has been a failure, that it has chilled the patriotic ardor of the people, and that it has sacrificed one of the most deeply rooted principles of their political tradition, and then adds significantly, "We hoped to reap a Prussian reward; but to give up one's own strong points is no talisman for acquiring one's enemy's."

Canada, with fewer people than New York, has raised 400,000 volunteers. She spurns conscription. Australia, with fewer people than Illinois, has raised 250,000 volunteers. In a popular election she defeated conscription by an overwhelming majority. Even the troops in the trenches voted two to one against the hated draft. Col. Roosevelt now has an offer of 123,000 volunteers. Could not President Wilson raise a volunteer army sufficient to defend the honor of the Nation? Is the spirit of America departed? Shall we cast suspicion upon the popularity of this war? I have no sympathy with those military critics who are constantly casting asperations upon the American volunteers who have won every victory and who have baptized with their blood every battlefield of the Republic. Shall we now, in order to adopt the draft, impeach the patriotism of the living and dishonor the memory of the dead? Let us not in our unique attempt to substitute democracy for military despotism in Germany incur the risk of substituting military despotism for democracy in America. Let us not sow the wind lest we reap the whirlwind. If to cherish with reverence and surrender with regret the most sacred ideals and traditions of our fathers be an offense, then, indeed, have I offended.

SPEECH OF DANIEL WEBSTER.

[The House had under consideration a bill proposing to draft men for service in the War of 1812.]

Mr. WEBSTER. Mr. Chairman, after the best reflection which I have been able to bestow on the subject of the bill before you, I am of the opinion that its principles are not warranted by any provision of the Constitution. It appears to me to partake of the nature of those other propositions for military measures which this session, so fertile in invention, has produced. It is of the same class with the plan of the Secretary of War; with the bill reported to this House by its own committee for filling the ranks of the Regular Army by classifying the male population of the United States; with the resolution recently introduced by an honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Ingersoll, and which now lies on your table, carrying the principle of compulsory service in the Regular Army to its utmost extent.

I.

This bill, indeed, is less undisguised in its object and less direct in its means than some of the measures proposed. It is an attempt to exercise the power of forcing the free men of this country into the ranks of the Army for the general purposes of the war under color of a military service. To this end it commences with a classification which is in no way connected with the general organization of the militia, nor, to my apprehension, included within any of the powers which Congress possesses over them. All the authority which this Government has over the militia until actually called into the service is to enact laws for their organization and discipline. This power it has exercised. It now possesses the further power of calling into its service any portion of the militia of the States in the particular exigencies for which the Constitution provides, and of governing them during the continuance of such service. Here its authority ceases. The classification of the whole body of the militia, according to the provisions of this bill, is not a measure which respects either their general organization or their discipline. It is a distinct system introduced for new purposes, and not connected with any power which the Constitution has conferred on Congress.

But, sir, there is another consideration. The services of the men to be raised under this act are not limited to those cases in which alone this Government is entitled to the aid of the militia ("militia" as used in the Constitution refers to the entire male population of the several States capable of bearing arms, the age limits varying in different States. The National Guard, strictly speaking, is not the militia, but simply the Organized Militia) of the States. These cases are particularly stated in the Constitution, "to repel invasion, suppress insurrection, or execute the laws." But this bill has no limitation in this respect. The usual mode of legislating on the subject is abandoned. The only section which would have confined the services of the militia proposed to be raised within the United States has been stricken out, and if the President should not march them into the Provinces of England at the north or of Spain at the south it will not be because he is prohibited by any provision in this act.

This, then, sir, is a bill for calling out the militia not according to its existing organization, but by draft from new created classes—not merely for the purpose of repelling invasion, suppressing insurrection, or executing the laws, but for the general objects of war—for defending ourselves or invading others, as may be thought expedient; not for a sudden emergency or for a short time, but for long stated periods; for two years if the proposition of the Senate should finally prevail; for one year if the amendment of the House should be adopted. What is this, sir, but raising a standing army out of the militia by draft, and to be recruited by draft in like manner as often as occasions require?

This bill, then, is not different in principle from the other bills, plans, and resolutions which I have mentioned. The present discussion is properly and necessarily common to them all. It is a discussion, sir, of the last importance. That measures of this nature should be debated at all in the councils of a free government is a cause of dismay. The question is nothing less than whether the most essential rights of personal liberty shall be surrendered and despotism embraced in its worst form.

II.

I have risen on this occasion, with anxious and painful emotions, to add my admonitions to what has been said by others. Admonition and remonstrance, I am aware, are not acceptable strains. They are duties of unpleasant performance. But they are, in my judgment, the duties which the condition of a falling state imposes. They are duties which sink deep into his conscience, who believes it probable that they may be the last services which he may be able to render to the government of his country. On the issue of this discussion I believe the fate of this Government may rest. Its duration is incompatible, in my opinion, with the existence of the measures in contemplation. A crisis has at last arrived, to which the course of things has long tended, and which may be decisive upon the happiness of present and future generations.

If there be anything important in the concerns of men, the considerations which fill the present hour are important. I am anxious above all things to stand acquitted before God and my conscience and in the public judgments of all participation in the counsels which have brought us to our present condition and which now threaten the dissolution of the Government. When the present generation of men shall be swept away and that this Government ever existed shall be a matter of history only, I desire that it may then be known that you have not proceeded in your course unadmonished and unforewarned. Let it then be known that there were those who would have stopped you in the career of your measures and held you back as by the skirts of your garments from the precipice over which you are plunging and drawing after the Government of your country. * * *

It is time for Congress to examine and decide for itself. It has taken things on trust long enough. It has followed Executive recommendation till there remains no hope of finding safety in that path. What is there, sir, that makes it the duty of this people now to grant new confidence to the administration and to surrender their most important rights to its discretion? On what merits of its own does it rest this extraordinary claim? * * *

Let us examine the nature and extent of the power which is assumed by the various military measures before us. In the present want of men and money the Secretary of War has proposed to Congress a military conscription. For the conquest of Canada the people will not enlist, and if they would the Treasury is exhausted and they could not be paid. Conscription is chosen as the most promising instrument, both of overcoming the reluctance to the service and of subduing the difficulties which arise from the deficiencies of the exchequer. The administration asserts the right to fill the ranks of the Regular Army by compulsion. It contends that it may now take 1 out of every 25 men, and any part or whole of the rest whenever its occasions require. Persons thus taken by force and put into an army may be compelled to serve there during the war or for life. They may be put on any service, at home or abroad, for defense or for invasion, according to the will and pleasure of the Government. This power does not grow out of any invasion of the country or even out of a state of war. It belongs to the Government at all times, in peace as well as war, and is to be exercised under all circumstances according to its mere discretion. This, sir, is the amount of principle contended for by the Secretary of War.

Is this, sir, consistent with the character of a free government? Is this civil liberty? Is this the real character of our Constitution? No, sir; indeed it is not. The Constitution is libeled, foully libeled. The people of this country have not established for themselves such a fabric of despotism. They have not purchased at a vast expense of their own treasures and their own blood a Magna Charta to be slaves. Where is it written in the Constitution, in what article or section is it contained, that you may take children from their parents and parents from their children and compel them to fight the battles of any war which the folly or the wickedness of Government may engage in? Under what concealment has this power lain hidden which now for the first time comes forth, with a tremendous and baleful aspect, to trample down and destroy the dearest rights of personal liberty? Who will show me any constitutional injunction which makes it the duty of the American people to surrender everything valuable in life, and even life itself, not when the safety of their country and its liberties may demand the sacrifice, but whenever the purposes of an ambitious and mischievous Government may require it? Sir, I almost disdain to go to quotations and references to prove that such an abominable doctrine has no foundation in the Constitution of the country. It is enough to know that that instrument was intended as the basis of a free Government and that the power contended for is incompatible with any notion of personal liberty. An attempt to maintain this doctrine upon the provisions of the Constitution is an exercise of perverse ingenuity to extract slavery from the substance of a free government. It is an attempt to show by proof and argument that we ourselves are subjects of despotism and that we have a right to chains and bondage, firmly secured to us and our children by the provisions of our Government. It has been the labor of other men at other times to mitigate and reform the powers of government by construction; to support the rights of personal security by every species of favorable and benign interpretation, and thus to infuse a free spirit into governments not friendly in their general structure and formation to public liberty.

The supporters of the measures before us act on the opposite principle. It is their task to raise arbitrary powers, by construction, out of a plain written charter of national liberty. It is their pleasing duty to free us of the delusion, which we have fondly cherished, that we are the subjects of a mild, free, and limited Government, and to demonstrate by a regular chain of premises and conclusions that government possesses over us a power more tyrannical, more arbitrary, more dangerous, more allied to blood and murder, more full of every form of mischief, more productive of every sort of misery than has been exercised by any civilized government, with one exception, in modern times.

III.

The Secretary of War has favored us with an argument on the constitutionality of this power. Those who lament that such doctrines should be supported by the opinion of a high officer of Government may a little abate their regret when they remember that the same officer, in his last letter of instructions to our ministers abroad, maintained the contrary. In that letter he declares that even the impressment of seamen, for which many more plausible reasons may be given than for the impressment of soldiers, is repugnant to our Constitution.

It might, therefore, be sufficient answer to his argument in the present case to quote against it the sentiments of its own author and to place the two opinions before the House in a state of irreconcilable conflict. Further comment on either might then be properly forborne, until he should be pleased to inform us which he retracted and to which he adhered. But the importance of the subject may justify a further consideration of the argument.

Congress having by the Constitution a power to raise armies, the Secretary contends that no restraint is to be imposed on the exercise of this power except such as is expressly stated in the written letter of the instrument. In other words, that Congress may execute its powers by any means it chooses, unless such means are particularly prohibited. But the general nature and object of the Constitution impose as rigid restriction on the means of exercising power as could be done by the most explicit injunctions. It is the first principle applicable to such a case that no construction shall be admitted which impairs the general nature and character of the instrument. A free Constitution of government is to be construed upon free principles, and every branch of its provisions is to receive such an interpretation as is full of its general spirit. No means are to be taken by implication, which would strike us absurdly if expressed. And what would have been more absurd than for this Constitution to have said that to secure the great blessings of liberty it gave to Government an uncontrolled power of military conscription? Yet such is the absurdity which it is made to exhibit under the commentary of the Secretary of War.

IV.

But it is said that it might happen that an army would not be raised by voluntary enlistment, in which case the power to raise an army would be granted in vain, unless they might be raised by compulsion. If this reasoning could prove anything it would equally show that whenever the legitimate powers of the Constitution should be so badly administered as to cease to answer the great ends intended by them, such new powers may be assumed or usurped as any existing administration may deem expedient. This is a result of his own reasoning to which the Secretary does not profess to go. But it is a true result. For if it is to be assumed that all powers were granted, which might by possibility become necessary, and that Government itself is the judge of this possible necessity, then the powers of the Government are precisely what it chooses they should be. Apply the same reasoning to any other power granted to Congress and test its accuracy by its result. Congress has power to borrow money. How is it to exercise this power? Is it confined to voluntary loans? There is no express limitation to that effect, and in the language of the Secretary it might happen—indeed, it has happened—that persons could not be found willing to lend. Money might be borrowed then in any other mode. In other words, Congress might resort to a forced loan. It might take the money of any man by force and give in exchange exchequer notes or certificates of stock. Would this be quite constitutional, sir? It is entirely within the reasoning of the Secretary; and it is the result of his argument, outraging the rights of individuals in a far less degree than the practical consequences which he himself draws from it. A compulsory loan is not to be compared, in point of enormity, with a compulsory military service.

If the Secretary of War has proved the right of Congress to enact a law enforcing a draft of men out of the militia into the Regular Army, he will at any time be able to prove quite as clearly that Congress has power to create a dictator. The arguments which have helped him in one case will equally help him in the other. The same reason of a supposed or possible state of necessity which is urged now may be repeated then with equal pertinency and effect.

Sir, in granting Congress the power to raise armies, the people have granted all the means which are ordinary and usual and which are consistent with the liberties and security of the people themselves, and they have granted no others. To talk about the unlimited power of the Government over the means to execute its authority is to hold a language which is true only in regard to despotisms. The tyranny of arbitrary government consists as much in its means as in its ends, and it would be a ridiculous and absurd constitution which should be less cautious to grant against abuses in the one case than in the other. All the means and instruments which a free government exercises, as well as the ends and objects it pursues, are to partake of its own essential character and to be conformed to its genuine spirit. A free government with arbitrary means to administer it is a contradiction; a free government without adequate provisions for personal security is an absurdity; a free government with an uncontrolled power of military conscription is a solecism, at once the most ridiculous and abominable that ever entered into the head of man.

V.

Sir, I invite the supporters of the measures before you to look to their actual operations. Let the men who have so often pledged their own fortunes and their own lives to the support of this war look to the wanton sacrifice which they are about to make of their lives and fortunes. They may talk as they will about substitutes and compensation and exemptions. It must come to the draft at last. If the Government can not hire men to voluntarily fight its battles, neither can individuals. If the war should continue, there will be no escape, and every man's fate and every man's life will come to depend on the issue of the military draft. Who shall describe to you the horror which your orders of conscription shall create in the once happy villages of this country? Who shall describe the anguish and distress which they will spread over those hills and valleys where men have heretofore been accustomed to labor and to rest in security and happiness? Anticipate the scene, sir, when the class shall assemble to stand its draft and to throw the dice for blood. What a group of wives and mothers and sisters, of helpless age and helpless infancy, shall gather round the theater of this horrible lottery, as if the strokes of death were to fall from heaven before their eyes on a father, a brother, a son, or a husband. And in the majority of cases, sir, it will be the stroke of death. Under present prospects of a continuance of the war, not one-half of them on whom your conscription shall fall will ever return to tell the tale of their sufferings. They will perish of disease and pestilence or they will leave their bones to whiten in fields beyond the frontier. Does the lot fall on the father of a family? His children, already orphans, shall see his face no more. When they behold him for the last time they shall see him lashed and fettered and dragged away from his own threshold like a felon and an outlaw. Does it fall on a son, the hope and staff of aged parents? That hope shall fall them. On that staff they shall lean no longer. They shall not enjoy the happiness of dying before their children. They shall totter to their graves bereft of their offspring and unwept by any who inherit their blood. Does it fall on a husband? The eyes which watch his parting steps may swim in tears forever. She is a wife no longer. There is no relation so tender or so sacred that, by these accursed measures, you do not propose to violate it. Into the paradise of domestic life you enter, not indeed by temptations and sorceries, but by open force and violence. * * *

Nor is it, sir, for the defense of his own house and home that he who is subject to military draft is to perform the task allotted to him. * * *

VI.

I would ask, sir, whether the supporters of these measures have well weighed the difficulties of their undertaking? Have they considered whether it will be found easy to execute laws which bear such marks of despotism on their front and which will be so productive of every sort and degree of misery in their execution? For one, sir, I hesitate not to say that they can not be executed. No law professedly passed for the purpose of compelling a service in the Regular Army, not any law which under cover of military draft shall compel men to serve in the Army, not for the emergencies mentioned in the Constitution but for longer periods and for the general objects of war, can be carried into effect. The operation of measures thus unconstitutional and illegal ought to be prevented by a resort to other measures which are both constitutional and legal. It will be the solemn duty of the State governments to protect their own authority over their own militia and to interpose between their citizens and arbitrary power. These are among the objects for which the State governments exist, and their highest obligations bind them to the preservation of their own rights and the liberties of their people. I express the sentiments here, sir, because I shall express them to my constituents. Both they and myself live under a Constitution which teaches us that "the doctrine of nonresistance against arbitrary power and oppression is absurd, slavish, and destructive of the good and happiness of mankind" [New Hampshire bill of rights]. With the same earnestness with which I now exhort you to forbear from these measures I shall exhort them to exercise their unquestionable right of providing for the security of their liberties.

In my opinion, sir, the sentiments of the free population of this country are greatly mistaken here. The Nation is not yet in a temper to submit to conscription. The people have too fresh and strong a feeling of the blessings of civil liberty to be willing thus to surrender it. You may talk to them as much as you please of the victory and glory to be obtained in the enemy's Provinces; they will hold those objects in light estimation if the means be a forced military service. You may sing to them the song of the Canadian conquests in all its variety, but they will not be charmed out of the remembrance of their substantial interests and true happiness. Similar pretenses, they know, are the graves in which the liberties of other nations have been buried and they will take warning.

Laws, sir, of this nature can create nothing but opposition. If you scatter them abroad like the fabled serpents' teeth, they will spring up into armed men. A military force can not be raised in this manner, but by the means of a military force. If the administration has found that it can not form an army without conscription, it will find, if it venture on these experiments, that it can not enforce conscription without an army. The Government was not constituted for such purposes. Framed in the spirit of liberty and in the love of peace, it has no powers which render it able to enforce such laws. The attempt, if we rashly make it, will fail, and, having already thrown away our peace, we may thereby throw away our Government.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, it is evident to my mind that the bill in substance as presented here by the Committee on Military Affairs will be enacted into law. It is not my purpose to discuss that measure at any length. I wish, however, to acquaint the Senate with the feeling regarding this measure which obtains in my State and which I believe obtains throughout the great western portion of this country.

In the last few days since this bill has been under consideration I have received a number of letters, telegrams, and resolutions all of the same import, and in every one is an earnest urging of the passage of this measure without the volunteer system.

I have here a letter from the president of the University of New Mexico, in which he states:

I am writing to assure you that the people of New Mexico are practically unanimous in their support of all the President's recommendations. Criticism and opposition is only found in occasional individuals. I make this statement after a trip that included Raton, Des Moines, Clayton, Tucumcari, and Clovis. You may, therefore, be assured, Senator, that the people of New Mexico will be almost as one man behind you in supporting the President.

And so with various other letters.

The people of that State have been getting together in patriotic meetings. They are thinking of these questions. They are considering them. They realize their importance to the country and the individual share which they may be called upon to bear, and in these meetings without a dissenting voice they are favoring this measure. They believe that every citizen of this country should feel that he should do his duty and do it whenever the country calls.

I have here resolutions passed by mass meetings in the cities of Albuquerque and Las Vegas and the town of Park View, in the county of Rio Arriba, one of the Spanish-American counties, where resides the former Member of Congress from my State. All these places passed resolutions of the most patriotic character. Without further referring to them I ask unanimous consent that these resolutions may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The resolutions referred to are as follows:

Announcement of the purpose of this mass meeting of citizens, by Clark M. Carr, chairman citizens' committee:

This meeting has been called by the mayor and city council of Albuquerque, inspired by a desire on the part of the people to show our confidence in the President of the United States, and our strong and loyal devotion to the flag of our country, and to reaffirm our belief in and to resolve to stand for democracy throughout the world.

This mass meeting of 7,000 of our people—Spanish, American, Negro, Indian, foreign-born citizens, every race, creed, and political party here represented—demonstrates to-night that they are all Americans, loyal to the flag and the Constitution of the United States, which they have either been born under or have sworn to defend; and that, if called upon and their country needs them, they will offer their property and their lives that freedom, equality, and justice shall prevail.

CLARK M. CARR,
Chairman Citizens' Committee.

Resolutions.

Whereas the chosen Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, acting at the behest and recommendation of our eminent and honored President, have voiced the sentiment and opinion of more than 100,000,000 Americans by a declaration of war against the policy of world-wide despotism adopted by the imperialistic Kaiser and have thus dedicated this Nation to the suppression of ruthless autocracy and tyranny, to the overpowering of murderous monarchs who play with the lives of their subjects and drench continents with blood; and

Whereas such declaration of war comes not in the spirit of hatred for the misgoverned German people, lead by a lust-maddened ruler, but in the spirit that answers the call of civilization; in the spirit that moves a free people to give their lives, if need be, that righteousness shall prevail on earth and that the brotherhood of man shall at last become a reality: Now, therefore,

We, citizens of Albuquerque, in mass meeting assembled, with grateful thanks to Almighty God that our Nation has been consecrated anew to the cause of mankind, do hereby

Resolve:

1. That as loyal Americans, even though there may be those among us whose hearts are wrung by such war, we pledge our men to be ready and willing to do a man's part in giving their substance and their lives that democracy and free government shall not perish; and greater still, our women are pledged to give their loved ones and themselves into the service of their country, that ultimate peace shall come as a blessing to the peoples of the world.

2. That forgetting each and every line of national policy which may have a political basis, we, with one accord, indorse the recommendations and actions of the chosen leader of our people, and with glad hearts are ready to submit to each governmental command, knowing it to be the voice of a free Nation and a free people, speaking through duly chosen leaders.

3. That we indorse the policy of universal service under contemplation, for it is only by the service of each citizen that all may enjoy equality, freedom, and happiness in our country.

4. That, fully appreciating the splendid conduct of our National Guard in their past border service, we urge that such organization be given proper recognition in this crisis when deemed advisable, and, if the same is possible, that boundary protection be continued, for past experience has shown there are ruthless outlaws who would violate our unprotected border towns, whose people, as citizens of this, though one of the youngest States in the Union, are nevertheless bound by lines as true and firm as were those holding the original Colonies to a common cause.

5. That, believing the moral effect of this Nation in entering war for the cause of humanity to be a factor of greatest import, we urge on our President to proclaim to the German people, as set forth in his message to Congress, that this is not a war against them as such but for the dethronement and overpowering of such despots and monarchs as do not respect the will of the governed nor the ideals of civilized society.

6. That a committee of our citizens be appointed to properly transmit these resolutions to the President of the United States and to our Representatives in Congress.

COMMITTEE ON RESOLUTIONS,
By PEARCE C. RODEY.

Resolutions.

DEAR SENATOR: I, M. A. Equibel, secretary of a town meeting held at Park View, in the county of Rio Arriba, N. Mex., on the 18th day of April, A. D. 1917, hereby certify that the following is a true copy of a set of resolutions passed by unanimous vote of said meeting:

"Whereas our country is facing the greatest crisis that has confronted it since our Civil War, a crisis the manner of meeting which must vitally influence our future as a Nation; and

"Whereas American citizens have been murdered, our commerce has been disorganized, and, contrary to all tenets of international law, our rights on the high seas have been ruthlessly violated and attempts have been made to conspire with Mexico to disrupt our sisterhood of States; and

"Whereas our President and the National Congress, in the face of these intolerable indignities, have maintained a long-suffering patience, in keeping with our national love of peace, further toleration of the transgression of our rights can no longer be endured and decisive action is imperative: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we pledge our loyalty and support to our President and the leaders of our country and stand as one with them in the upholding of the honor and dignity of our sovereign Nation and the rights of her citizens on land and sea. We believe that thorough military and naval preparedness are of the utmost necessity, not only to give weight to our ideals of peace and the rights of humanity but also to maintain and protect our institutions and to enforce our rights.

"To this end we urge the enactment of such laws as will expedite and make most efficient the means of national defense and preparedness

"Be it further resolved, That we fully indorse the stand taken by our Senators in Congress, also our Representatives from this State, in the present crisis; that a copy of these resolutions be sent to each one of them and a copy thereof be published in El Nuevo Estado, a weekly published in the town of Tierra Amarilla, N. Mex.; also a copy be forwarded to our State executive, the Hon. W. E. Lindsey, governor of New Mexico."

Unanimously adopted by the committee on resolutions appointed by the chairman of said meeting, Hon. Eliseo Martinez.

PARK VIEW, N. Mex.

EAST LAS VEGAS, N. MEX., April 18, 1917.

Hon. A. A. JONES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: On Tuesday night, April 17, there was held under the auspices of the Symphony Orchestra of this city a public, patriotic mass meeting, which filled the Opera House to overflowing.

Addresses were delivered by Hon. W. E. Lindsey, governor of New Mexico, and others.

In all addresses the action of the President and Congress in the war measures adopted were fully indorsed.

At the close of the meeting, by a unanimous moving vote, the declaration hereto attached was adopted with great enthusiasm; and in compliance with the directions therein we herewith hand you a copy of same.

Very respectfully,

FRANK H. H. ROBERTS, President.
E. V. LONG, Secretary.

Declaration of the people of Las Vegas, N. Mex., in mass meeting assembled.

We, the people of Las Vegas, N. Mex., in a public patriotic mass meeting assembled at the opera house in the city of Las Vegas April 17, 1917, to hear patriotic addresses from the Hon. W. E. Lindsey, governor of New Mexico, and other public speakers, do hereby declare:

First. We send greetings to the President and the Congress of the United States and express to them and to the country at large our most earnest approval and indorsement of the declaration which the President and Congress have made and the action which they have taken in the defense of the Nation against the unjustifiable, wanton, and murderous attacks made by the German Government upon our sailors and citizens on the seas, upon our commerce, and as well upon the sovereign and international rights of this country.

We assure the President and Congress and all others in authority that New Mexico and the great Southwest will give enthusiastic support both in men and in material resources to every measure adopted to maintain the rights, honor, and dignity of the Nation in the war forced upon us and now on, with the Emperor of Germany and his Government; and we urge that the most aggressive means be taken to place and continue the Army, Navy, and country in the best possible condition, not only for defense but as well to conquer this new common enemy of republican institutions and to force an enduring and lasting peace.

Second. We pledge to the governor of New Mexico our undivided and loyal support in every effort he may make to place New Mexico in the front rank of the Nation's defenders and to thoroughly prepare this State to take an active and honorable part in the conflict that is now upon us.

Third. The time has come when every citizen of this country who is here enjoying its benefits and protection, without reference to his place of birth, owes it to himself, to his family, and to his country to "show his colors" and to take his stand loyally and earnestly with the great Republic now engaged in a war for the protection of its ideals, rights, and institutions and to give open and loyal support to every effort that is made to defeat our enemies, from whatever country they may come.

Fourth. The president and the secretary of this meeting shall transmit to the President of these United States a copy of this declaration and as well a further copy to our Representatives in Congress to be presented to that body.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I feel that when we passed joint resolution No. 1 of this session of Congress that we took perhaps the most important step in the history of the country. I am inclined to believe that some of the Senators who have been discussing these measures fail to realize the scope and the importance of that resolution. It contains this language:

That the state of war between the United States and the Imperial German Government which has thus been thrust upon the United States is hereby formally declared; and that the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to employ the entire naval and military forces of the United States and the resources of the Government to carry on war against the Imperial German Government, and to bring the conflict to a successful termination all of the resources of the country are hereby pledged by the Congress of the United States.

Under this resolution we have already placed upon the President, the Commander in Chief of our Army and Navy, the full responsibility of conducting this war, and we have pledged ourselves to place at his command all the resources of our country. By the passage of this bill, which is indorsed by the President, we are only assisting him in the organization and use of one of the important resources of the country in accordance with the pledge already given. If we are willing to trust the President to order our soldiers into battle we should not hesitate to accept his suggestion as to the method by which our forces should be organized. The country demands that we shall follow our leader.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from New Mexico has expired.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, we have fully realized from the discussion of the pending measure and from the history of our country that American patriotism has never in the past been wanting, and I, for one, do not care to prejudge the American people at this time in the early stages of this conflict, and to place upon them the stigma of a lack of patriotism, as I fully believe the policy which it is intended to enact in this measure proposes to do. I do not believe that there is any necessity of resorting to the conscript plan. I believe that the American people will rally to the cause of their country and to their flag, as they have done in days gone by.

We have heard a great deal of argument here in regard to the conscript system or the selective-draft plan, as to its being a system for the training and for the equipping of those who are to fight our battles; but in no instance has there been an argument suggested here or any sound reasoning supporting the idea that a recruit who is brought into the service of his country as a volunteer is not as capable of being trained to become an efficient soldier as is a recruit who is brought in under force, or under the conscript plan.

As an illustration that patriotism is not yet dead in America, note, if you please, how the people throughout this country have rallied to the call and the suggestion of Col. Roosevelt, that he go forth with a division to represent this country upon the soil of France. There appeared in yesterday morning's Post an article coming from New York, which reads as follows:

FLOCK TO ENLIST UNDER ROOSEVELT—OF 123,000 APPLICANTS 60 PER CENT ARE FROM THE SOUTH.

NEW YORK, April 25.

Approximately 123,000 men have applied thus far and been found to meet the necessary requirements for membership in Col. Theodore Roosevelt's proposed army division, it was announced here to-night at enrollment headquarters, which were opened some time ago with the former President's approval.

Only 50 of the applicants, it was said, were under 25 years old. None below this age are now being accepted.

Sixty per cent of the volunteers are from Virginia, North and South Carolina, and other Southern States, while in New York City not more than 1,000 have enrolled.

Mr. President, I say that if American patriotism will so rally around one of the distinguished citizens of our country, how much more would it rally to the call of our country itself? I believe that we should try out the volunteer plan. I believe that there would be no trouble in raising the quota of soldiers which is called for under the measure now pending. For this reason, I shall support the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR].

Time will not permit going into any lengthy discussion; but we all realize that a man who goes about any work, whether it be upon the battle field or in the ordinary vocations of life, when he is interested in it, when he is doing it as a matter of love, serves better and renders more faithful service than when he is doing it from compulsion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR].

Mr. REED and Mr. THOMAS called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FALL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], but upon this question I have his permission to vote, he having stated before leaving here that, if present, he would vote as I shall vote. I therefore vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] has indefinite leave of absence. I am requested to announce that if he were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. JAMES. The senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] is detained from the Senate by illness. If he were present he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 69, as follows:

YEAS—18.

So Mr. McKELLAR's amendment was rejected.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 21, strike out the words "draft as herein provided," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "a call for volunteers, which is hereby authorized under the provisions of an act to provide for the raising of the volunteer forces of the United States in time of actual or threatened war," approved April 25, 1914.

On page 4, line 9, strike out the words "by draft," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "by a call for volunteers, which is hereby authorized."

On page 5, line 3, beginning with the words "or if," strike out down to and including the words "this act," in line 13, on page 5.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I will only take a few moments for the purpose of explaining the amendment to those Senators who may not have been able to catch its purport as read.

This amendment seeks to establish, in lieu of the conscript plan as provided by the pending bill, the volunteer system. It strikes out the word "draft" where it appears and provides that the 500,000 soldiers required shall be raised by a call for volunteers. That is really the substance of the amendment.

I do not think it is necessary to occupy the time of the Senate in discussing the matter, but I wish to offer this amendment and submit it as representing my views upon the subject under consideration.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I want to say one last word in favor of the volunteer system in America. I want to raise my voice once more in behalf of American young manhood. We have talked here to-night about equal benefits imposing equal burdens. That is what we have always been taught to believe; that is what we have believed and understood to be Democratic doctrine. Great meetings of boards of trade, great meetings of presidents of banks, great meetings of all kinds of commercial interests throughout this great country of ours have been held, and they have declared that we must have a universal service system for raising an Army, and they have wired their Representatives in Congress and their Senators to stand by the President in support of the universal military system or the system of universal military service.

What have we here to-night? We have a bill that was proposed and presented that required military service only of boys from 19 to 25 years of age. Is there anything universal about that, and is it any wonder that all these great representatives of great aggregations of capital and business could afford to sit down and send word to the United States Senate and to the Members of the House of Representatives to support this sort of proposition when not one single man of them can be required to go to war?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. KIRBY. Now, they have said it is best for certain individuals and certain classes of individuals to remain in certain service, and that it is best for the industrial conditions of the country. I say to you here and now that in the light of the experience of all the world heretofore the best men we can have in time of war are needed on the firing line; that in time of war the best that can be had are needed on the firing line for the Nation's protection.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. KIRBY. Yes.

Mr. POMERENE. Does not the Senator recognize the fact that under the conscript plan the sons and young brothers of these bankers can be compelled to go, while under the volunteer system not one of them would be compelled to go?

Mr. KIRBY. They can be compelled to go if they are not excused as belonging to one of the classes that are called on for only partial service. There is more cause for and more corroboration of the old statement "A rich man's war and a poor man's fight" in the passage of this bill than in anything which has ever come to my observation in the whole history of my life. One-fourth of the boys from 19 to 25 have never yet been allowed to vote. The age limit has now been changed so as to include those between the ages of 21 and 27, embracing six years, but I venture to say here to-night that the whole 6,000,000 who are included in these ages do not own $1,000 worth of direct interest in the over-seas commerce, for the protection and the promotion of which this war is primarily waged. To say that not 5 of every 1,000 of them have a dollar in the bank, and not 10 in every 20,000 of them own an acre or a foot of land in the United States of America. Yet it is said that that is universal service and that it ought to obtain.

What else is there wrong about the system? We have always believed that American manhood and American prowess were amply sufficient to take care of and protect American rights and American interests, and, by the living God, I believe it yet.

Now, it would be better to let this American manhood be called upon, to let them volunteer, and not to take the glamor of romance and of adventure and of chivalry, the glory of dying for one's country, away from it all. When a man goes out to lay down his life for his country I say he ought not to be conscripted; he ought not to be branded with odium and disgrace by a law that shows a lack of faith in his patriotism by the Government to start out with. I say this in behalf of all of young America, in behalf of these young men, who do not seem to have been considered fairly.

It is said, "Yes; but in the case of taxation you do not ask a man to pay his taxes. You require him to do it." True, but you make every man that has property pay taxes, the man who has most pays most, and you only make a few boys who have lives go and defend their country, excluding all other men not in the Army from military service. It is not universal, equal, fair, nor just.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I support the amendment proposed by the distinguished Senator from Florida because it is the way that a nation of free men fights a war, as opposed to the way that a nation of subjects and of serfs fights a war. I support the amendment proposed by the distinguished Senator from Florida because it proposes the American way to fight a war and not the Prussian way. I support the amendment proposed by the distinguished Senator from Florida because it presents an appeal that will not be made in vain to American manhood and to American patriotism.

Conscription? It is the line between freedom and slavery; between a free Republic and a despotic autocracy. Conscription? When was it ever invoked in this country to send its sons 3,000 miles away across the ocean to fight a foreign war? When it was invoked in this country on both the Union side and the Confederate side men fought for their firesides and for their homes, for their soil. But never yet among a free people, in a land dedicated to liberty, has the monstrous doctrine been laid down that freemen may be dragged against their will across foreign seas into a foreign war.

Why, even in Prussia, if I may credit the statement that I heard once—I think from the distinguished chairman of this committee—prior to this war, at least, a Prussian soldier could not be carried out of the realm except by his voluntary consent, conscript though he was.

Senators, the verdict is made up. The result in this Chamber is certain, but you go to face a people whose rights you surrender by this proceeding. Then there will come another day, when the verdict, in my judgment, will be different. There will come another day when outraged American manhood shall demand of you: "Why did you put this stigma on me? Why did you not at least give me the opportunity to volunteer? Why did you not let me go to this war, if go I must, as a freeman and not as a slave; as a citizen and not as a subject?"

Answer, Senators, each of you according to your own responsibility to your own God, to your own conscience, and to your own people.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I have listened with a good deal of interest and a good deal of amusement, as everybody does always, to the Senator from Georgia, and I heard him say that conscription was a sort of a badge between freedom and subjection of some sort. As I understand it, a draft upon the people at large between certain ages to go to the defense of the country is a call in every way to every man to do his duty.

Robert E. Lee said that the noblest word in the English language was the word "duty." I can not understand the mental attitude of a man who would brand as a convict or a traitor or a fool or a slave a man who, when he was called upon by his country on a draft bill to serve his country, went forward to serve that country.

I have heard a few words very recently about this being a "foreign war" and "foreign seas." The high seas of the world are not foreign seas to the American people. The high seas do not belong to the Kaiser of Germany. He has no right to demark certain boundaries within which or without which we shall or shall not sail.

So far as this country is concerned, this is not a "foreign war"; it is an American war. America did not go into this war until America had had the Lusitania sunk upon the high seas, the Arabic and the Sussex afterwards sunk, and then, after that, had our own flag at the foremast of the Algonquin sunk, and then, after that, had had two more of her ships sunk. Those of you who are in subjection to German thought or German power, philosophically or financially or otherwise, may take your stand wherever you please, but I take my stand in behalf of the American people and in behalf of the rights of the American people upon the high seas.

The Senator talks about "another day" and "another chance" to volunteer. You have had 35 days to volunteer up to about last Wednesday—I have not followed it much since—and you have volunteered to the extent of 35,000 men; that is, to the tune of about a thousand men a day. It would take at that rate about three years to enroll an army.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Mississippi has expired. The five minutes are up.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I intended to say that it would take about three years to collect an adequate army to go to Europe at that rate.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, on the 4th day of April the Senate passed a bill providing for the declaration of war with the Imperial Government of Germany. This same measure was passed by the House on the following day, and was approved by the President on the 6th day of this month. We have been in a state of war with the Imperial Government of Germany for nearly a month.

While I was opposed to the passage of that bill, I have made no opposition to any legislation necessary to successfully carry on and as speedily as possible end this war.

I was opposed to the bill providing for armed neutrality. My opposition to that measure was, I think, well understood, and I might say that those of us who opposed it feel justified in our opposition, because the friends of the measure, from the President down, have since acknowledged that "at best it was an ineffectual measure."

Since the enactment into law of the declaration of war we have had other important measures before us. The revenue bill, providing for the vast sum of $7,000,000,000 was passed in this body without a dissenting vote. Personally I feel responsible for the passage of that measure, and while I had serious objections to some of its provisions, and felt that the bill should have been amended, I made no effort to oppose its passage, as I remember the only amendment offered, upon which a vote was demanded, was lost by a tie vote. That was the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. This amendment provided that the bonds to be issued should be serial bonds, providing that they should mature within a certain definite period of time. I voted for that amendment, but it was suggested by the Members of this body that there was nothing in the bill to prevent the Secretary of the Treasury from issuing serial bonds, and I believe that under the provisions of the bill he is authorized to issue bonds in any form that he sees fit; so that the responsibility for the class of bonds issued will rest upon the Secretary and not upon Congress.

As I have said, I was opposed to the declaration of war, but I also realized that after war was declared there was but one thing for us to do and that was to furnish money and men to carry on the war. We have been in a state of war with Germany for 22 days. We have provided the administration with money to carry on the war. We are now asked to pass a bill that will give the President the power to draft the young men of our country between the ages of 21 and 27 years into service. I fully realize the necessity of raising an army. I am not opposed to any plan that will enable the President to equip an army at the earliest time possible; but I am opposed to the enactment into law of any measure which provides for involuntary service. For several reasons I am opposed to it. In the first place, I do not agree with the friends of this bill that the best way to raise an army is by conscription. Military conscription is involuntary servitude. It is drafting men into service against their will; it is challenging their patriotism without justification and cause. We might debate this question for weeks, months, and years without being able to prove or justify the statement that the volunteer soldier and the voluntary system have been a failure. We have the evidence of many of the greatest military men of the country to the effect that they are opposed to conscription. The pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD are filled, page after page, with testimonials of the ablest statesmen and patriotic men of this country, testifying that they are opposed to compulsory service. We have the testimony of Gen. Miles and the late Gen. Kitchener. We have the testimonials of Washington, Jefferson, Webster, Lincoln, and Grant, all approving of the volunteer system.

I am opposed to compulsory service, because it is undemocratic and unjust. I am opposed to compulsory service, because that is the system which breeds despotism and autocracy and is opposed to democracy.

Senators who are opposed to the volunteer system say that that system has been a failure, and yet they admit that every war that has been won by this country has been won by the valor and the patriotism of the volunteer.

The American War of Independence was fought by volunteers. When, on the 19th day of April, 1775, at Lexington, the first battle was fought, it took but a short time to call to arms, without compulsory service, 16,000 men. For six years these gallant soldiers were fighting for independence, and it was not until the 19th day of October, 1781, that the fighting ended. The last battle was fought at Yorktown on that day, and the volunteer soldiers had fought and won a glorious victory for independence and for humanity. It was one of the most famous struggles in history, and it is remarkable that the raw recruits of the backwoodsmen of a colonial dependency should defeat their powerful colonial parents, who had an abundance of trained officers and soldiers. It is true that the American volunteers lost battles, and they lost men by the hundreds and thousands. The loss of 5,000 troops at Charleston was a tremendous blow to the American cause, but they were neither discouraged nor subdued. They refused to surrender until a full victory was won, and it was won at Yorktown, in 1781.

The War of 1812, a war between the United States and Great Britain for the freedom of the seas, was fought by the American volunteers, and while it is contended that this war ended without a victory for the American soldiers, it was ultimately completed and successfully finished under Jackson and 5,500 volunteer soldiers against the trained soldiers of England, who soon thereafter, as part of Wellington's picked army, defeated Napoleon in the Battle of Waterloo.

If this war is not a fight for humanity and for a world democracy, then what justification is there for carrying it on? Is it in accordance with American principles or with the principles of any free government to say to the soldier that he must serve; that he must be enlisted into service under a system of conscription? You might just as well say to him, "We doubt your patriotism. We do not believe you are sincere. We do not believe you will defend your country, unless by law you are compelled to enter the service."

Mr. President, I am as much in favor of raising an army as any Member on this floor, but I am opposed to the method; I am opposed to any plan that will fasten upon this country Prussian militarism which has been so emphatically denounced. We admit that we have no ill feeling against the German people. We acknowledge that the people of Germany are as patriotic as the people of any other country. We recognize the ability and efficiency of the German people; but we are waging a war against the military system of Prussia and the Kaiser. Yet we forget that by the passage of this bill we are laying the foundation for the same kind of a despotic and autocratic government which we now stand ready to pour out our money and sacrifice the precious lives of this country to crush.

We can only judge the future by the past, and the records stand unchallenged. Five American wars have been won by volunteer armies. The volunteer system has been approved by the British Government. Men of Great Britain and its dependencies have responded promptly and volunteered to serve their country under the volunteer system.

Let us give the American boy an opportunity to show his patriotism. Let us give him an opportunity, without compulsion, to serve his country's cause. If we are fighting a war to crush militarism and autocracy, in order that the people shall enjoy freedom and a republican form of government should we do it at the risk of establishing in our own country a despotic autocracy? Involuntary service is not democratic but despotic. Military conscription gives to a few men too much power, power which can and will be abused.

I well remember what was said on the floor of the Senate when the war measure was pending. It seemed to be the opinion of distinguished Senators that the American people were overwhelmingly in favor of this war. If that is true, why do you mistrust the people now? Why do you question the patriotism of this overwhelming majority which you said you knew were in favor of war? The American people do not change their opinions over night on as important a matter as this. If the majority of the American people were in favor of the war then, is it not reasonable to suppose that they are in favor of prosecuting the war now?

Mr. President, I am greatly concerned about the future welfare of our country, and I am somewhat familiar with its history; and when I think of the sacrifices made by the fathers who made it possible for us to be free and enjoy the blessings of liberty for which they fought and for which so many of them died, I am prone to be cautious about advocating measures that will disregard the rights, the liberties, and the freedom of my fellow men.

I sympathize with the people of foreign nations who have been made to unjustly suffer at the hands of a tyrannical foe. I wish it were possible for this Nation to democratize all the nations of the earth. I sympathize with the weaker nations who suffer unjustly at the hands of their despotic and selfish neighbors, but I can not forget the importance of preserving our own country, our own sacred institutions, and our own Constitution and laws, which gave to us our liberty and freedom.

Mr. President, I am mindful of the fact that certain organizations are waging a campaign for a system of conscription. I doubt if these men are as patriotic as the fathers who gave us our freedom and our liberty, but we shall soon have an opportunity to test their patriotism, because if it is only for the love of their country that they are carrying on this campaign then, sir, we shall soon be receiving telegrams from these same organizations asking us to conscript the wealth of this country in order to carry on the war. Is it possible that these men will shirk, that they will fail to do their duty; that they will fail to call to the attention of the country that the men who give their lives, those who leave those who are nearest and dearest to them, who sacrifice upon the altar of freedom their lives in order that this Nation shall live—is it possible that these men will fail to carry on this same kind of a campaign, calling attention to the fact that it would be unjust to tax the families of the soldier? Will these men go out over the country and carry on the same campaign that they are now carrying on for conscription of men, and advocate the conscription of wealth? Is wealth to be placed above human lives? Those who sacrifice their lives in defense of their country give their all. Would it be unjust to ask the men of wealth, the men who have the money, to finance and to pay as we go the expense and cost of this tremendous war?

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, there has been some very vehement denunciation of conscription by some of the southern Senators in the Senate. I do not believe there was ever any better fighting done in the world than was done by the soldiers of the southern Confederacy. I believe my friends of the South will agree with me on that; and yet, from the 2d day of April, 1862, until the close of the war every man who fought in the Confederate Army was fighting as a conscript, according to the terms of the law which the Confederate Congress enacted in April, 1862. That law not only conscripted to service all white male citizens from 18 to 35 years of age who were not in the service——

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. MYERS. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator is greatly mistaken. There was a conscript law, but there was a comparatively small number of conscripts. The volunteers——

Mr. MYERS. I have not yet finished my explanation. That law of April, 1862, not only called to the colors of the southern Confederacy all white male citizens between the ages of 18 and 35, those who were not in the service, but it also made conscripts of all who had volunteered and were already in the army.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In that statement the Senator from Montana is absolutely correct.

Mr. MYERS. I thank the Senator for confirming me. I have now not only the authority of history but the authority of the Senator from Mississippi. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The occupants of the galleries are forgetting the admonition. They were all notified. The galleries will be cleared the next time this occurs.

Mr. MYERS. Most of the soldiers enlisted for either one or two years; most of them for one year. The law provided that they could not drop out at the end of their enlistment. They had to fight on until the end of the war.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, that is so; but they were already in the army fighting, and they had only volunteered for one year from that time. I do not know how it was in Mississippi. They were conscripted in the law, but they were not conscripted from their homes. They were in the army fighting.

Mr. MYERS. They were conscripted to stay for the war.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is right.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator if it is not a fact that these men's term of service was only extended by the law? And I resent the assertion that they were conscripts.

Mr. MYERS. I can not help the Senator resenting it. Gen. Upton says they were made conscripts by provision of law. I do not say that they were not good soldiers, but they were compelled to stay. Does anybody say that they were not less able soldiers, that they were not less patriotic on that account? I think that answers the argument made by Senators.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARDING. I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 1 add a new paragraph, as follows:

Seventh The President is further authorized to raise and maintain by voluntary enlistment, to organize, and equip not to exceed four infantry divisions, the officers of which shall be selected in the manner provided by paragraph 3 of section 1 of this act: Provided, That the organization of said force shall be the same as that of the corresponding organization of the Regular Army: And provided further, That there shall be no enlistments in said force of men under 25 years of age at the time of enlisting: And provided further, That no such volunteer force shall be accepted in any unit smaller than a division.

In section 2, page 5, line 6, after the word "authorized," insert "except as provided in the seventh paragraph of section 1."

In section 8, page 11, line 18, strike out the word "and" and insert after the word "sixth" the words "and seventh."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, Senators who have the amendment on their desks will note a change in the original draft, made necessary because of the amendment to the age provision in the universal-service clause of the bill. As the amendment was originally drawn it was designed to exclude from eligibility to this proposed volunteer army all who were liable to the universal-service draft. When the age limit was advanced to 27 years it was thought best to provide in the amendment that none should be eligible to the volunteer army or divisions proposed herein except those who were 25 years or older at the time of the enlistment.

Mr. President, having addressed myself to this amendment and the measure this morning, I have no desire to continue now even to the allotment of five minutes at this time. I only want to say that I think this is the one provision on which the two wings of the Senate, which has divided on the question of universal service, may now agree. It is not at all inconsistent. I grant that it is an irregularity, but it is an irregularity that will give expression to the great American wish of to-night. The arguments offered in opposition to this amendment, which, as you know, means the so-called Roosevelt division, have not been stated yet which can appeal to any Member of this body. The one reasonable argument which might have prevailed, if the amendment had been pending earlier in the session, was that it might interfere with the adoption of the universal-service plan. The House has already voiced its approval of universal service. The Senate, by its vote on the amendments which were just now defeated, has committed itself to universal service. So the acceptance of this proposition does not in any way interfere with the great plan recommended by the Army and by the Chief Executive.

I have yet to hear one single objection offered by anybody openly; and I dislike to say, Mr. President, that the one objection which is current beneath the surface is unworthy of anyone in this body or anyone connected with the Government in this period of national crisis. I believe the acceptance of this amendment will answer the great American wish, vibrant in millions of hearts to-night.

I listened to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] this morning when he spoke so forcefully of a soul for the American Army. This proposition, Senators, will set aglow the American soul, the soul of both civilians and soldiers. This amendment, if adopted, will give an immediate and tangible expression of America's committal to the cause we have undertaken in this war.

Let us adopt this amendment. There is but one Theodore Roosevelt in the world, and I am glad all know of him as a citizen of the United States of America. We are not availing ourselves of his services as an army commander, but as a great personality around whom can be gathered the many men already trained for almost immediate service on the western battle front of Europe. It is the one thing, as I said this morning, which will destroy the opposition to a conscripted force being sent to the European battle fields. Somebody, if there is an objection, ought to state it upon this floor. Somebody ought to give——

Mr. KIRBY. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HARDING. For a question.

Mr. KIRBY. Is there any more reason why we should let a man raise a volunteer army than that we should allow a State to raise a volunteer army?

Mr. HARDING. Certainly. Mr. President, there are only two living ex-Presidents in the United States. There is only one of them who has seen actual military service, and there is but one personality in all the United States that can attract about him, as he already has been tendered, 121,000 offers of service on the battle fields of France. Let us accept this tender, and these eager Americans will be ready to go abroad, and give an actual and effective expression of the great task to which we are committed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Ohio has expired.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, this is a volunteer proposition. First let me say I am sorry for the temporary absence of the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. I have always listened with a great patience and sometimes with long-suffering patience to that distinguished Senator, seldom with amusement, never with profit.

Now, passing on to something really important I want to say that I am for this proposition. I do not see why we should not let Col. Roosevelt go and take with him all the fine young Americans who want to plant the Stars and Stripes in sunny France. We can spare him from the industrial and political activities of this country. It may be that, like Catiline, he can say, "I shall go but go to return again." If so, we will speed his parting and we will welcome his return.

For one, although I have never agreed with him politically, although I have never had any very great admiration for his political ideas, political ideals, and political conduct, I do think he is a great, big, red-blooded, patriotic American citizen, and a forceful personality at that; a man who commands the respect and love and admiration of millions of people who live in this country. I say "Let him go, and God bless him and his cohorts when they go." For one, I will vote for the amendment with pleasure.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, this amendment is designed to permit the foremost American citizen in private life to raise a division and to be part of a division of American troops to go upon the fighting line in France.

If I could paint the lily or gild refined gold, I would draw for you a picture that would, indeed, enthrall even the jaded imaginations of those of us who have sat here with attentive ears and listened for the past eight days. If I were able to, if I had the eloquent tongue of some of the gentlemen upon the other side of this Chamber, I would try to tell you not alone how this particular amendment enlists my sentiment, how it fires my imagination, but how it convinces cold reason and judgment as well in its behalf.

Here we are in war. Here we want to demonstrate something in behalf of America and in behalf of Americanism. We want as well to say to those with whom we are now allied that our aid, aid of every kind, of every character that a patriotic nation can give, will be theirs.

Roosevelt's was the clarion voice that first demanded preparedness in this land. We listened with little attention at first, and then you, and we, embraced his doctrine. Roosevelt's tongue was the first to demand Americanism undiluted in the United States. At first little did we heed him, but finally all of us adopted all that he said. Roosevelt typifies to-day Americanism and American citizenship in its highest type.

We are now asking simply that in these late years of this great patriot's life he be permitted to give that life, if it need be, to the country that he loves and to the country he has served. Was there ever a time in any nation's history when a man knocked at the door of the council chamber of that nation and begged merely that he might lay down his life for his country that he was denied by the nation that he had served?

And so we ask you, you on the other side of this Chamber and those upon this side as well, that you second the voice of the people of this great Nation of ours and send this man of dynamic force, of ability, of virility, and of red-blooded courage, typifying the American Nation, over to France, there to bear aloft the American flag for world democracy.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, so far as the man Roosevelt is concerned, I shall have naught to say to-night. I restrain whatever impulse I have to express my opinion in that respect, for I would not speak in this presence and on this occasion anything about any individual that might be offensive to his friends here.

Mr. President, we are engaged upon the great and really solemn business of providing an army to wage war. This enterprise should not be smeared by paint that would give to this service of ours a political coloring, and especially not a partisan political coloring.

The amendment itself, by its exclusive provisions, supplemented by the speeches which have been made here in its support by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING], who offered the amendment, by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and just now by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is proof conclusive that the purpose of the amendment is personal in its character and purpose. It is intended to promote the fortunes of an individual, and through him the fortunes of a political party. There is nothing else to it, and considering the fact that the individual in question is one of the most conspicuous politicians of this country, always in the front of political enterprise, is proof conclusive to my mind that Senators have thrust in upon our deliberations a partisan political situation exceedingly unbecoming.

There is no reason under heaven why this one man, even though he be an ex-President, should be singled out on the floor of the Senate as the one man of all this country signally fitted for a service of this kind. The proposal means that Roosevelt and those grouped about him are to be made the dominant force in this war. The President is to be reduced to a secondary or subordinate position. The Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Missouri has expired.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, no man can accuse me of being either personally or politically a follower of Mr. Roosevelt. The personality of the man has nothing whatever to do with my support of this amendment. Whether he is to be selected in the event the amendment shall carry as one of the officers of the division is a matter I think of secondary consequence. If it be true that there are at present in this country 123,000 men who want to volunteer for the service of their country and go to the front where they may be needed, I want to see them have the opportunity to go, to exercise their sovereign right of citizenship, and to testify their loyalty and devotion to the country by this great voluntary act of sacrifice. I care not who may lead them; I do not believe an inexperienced man like Col. Roosevelt would be given such a commission; but if the personality of any man at this time can be utilized for the purpose of securing the immediate enlistment of 123,000 men, it would seem to me to be the greatest eulogium—living eulogium—of men in support of the great American principle of volunteering when the country is in danger that could be afforded in this nation; and I know of nothing that would more completely and signally vindicate the strength and integrity of the American volunteer than an opportunity which can come only through such an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING].

Mr. GALLINGER. I call for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary called the roll.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have a general pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], and, therefore, withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 56, nays 31, as follows:

So Mr. HARDING's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN and Mr. SMITH of Georgia addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, in line 11, after the word "deficient," it is proposed to strike out the period and to insert a colon and the following:

Provided, That medical students shall be exempted until graduation and shall thereupon be subject to draft for the same period of time as other citizens.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the purpose of this proposed amendment is to utilize in the medical service of the Army medical students after they have graduated instead of using them in the ordinary Infantry line. The experience of both Great Britain and France is that there has been a great dearth of men to take care of the wounded and sick. To have an efficient service requires 10 active medical officers of the line to a thousand troops and 10 in reserve, making 20 in all. In the United States we have only provision for 7 to the thousand. There will be need for these young men in that particular service, and, therefore, I propose this exemption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator if this amendment is proposed after consultation with the officers of the War Department or of the Surgeon General's office?

Mr. OWEN. The matter was sent down to the Surgeon General's office several days ago, but no report has come back upon it as yet.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the only inquiry that occurs to me about it is whether or not it would not be advisable to have medical students subject to draft in the Medical Corps of the Army?

Mr. OWEN. That is the intention of the amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I thought the Senator's amendment provided they should be exempted after they had graduated.

Mr. OWEN. They are exempt until their graduation.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Why should they not be subject to the draft, even if they have not graduated? A medical student probably has some considerable medical knowledge, even though he may not have obtained his degree.

Mr. OWEN. It may be advisable to do that; but these men are pursuing their medical education, and I thought it would be better to allow them to complete it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am not prepared either to advocate or oppose the amendment. I simply wanted to ascertain whether the medical authorities of the department had passed on the question.

Mr. OWEN. I thought we had better allow medical students to complete their education before imposing upon them the responsibility of safeguarding the life and the health of the soldiers.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, we will need more men in the Medical Corps if this war is to be prolonged, and, while the amendment may not be sufficient to carry out the purpose of the Senator, we can try to formulate it in conference so as to make it do what the Senator intends to have done by it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, after line 15, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 9. The President is hereby authorized, and the Secretary of War directed, to call into the service of the United States, by enlistment for the term of the present war, three or more regiments of mounted volunteers, in addition to any other forces herein or otherwise provided, such mounted volunteers to be selected from men between the ages of 18 and 45 years, and under the provisions of section 3 hereof, and to be used in protecting property and citizens along the southern border of the United States, and also to be used in any foreign country, as the President may direct.

SEC. 10. The President is hereby authorized to appoint officers for such volunteer force, making appointment from the members of such volunteers as shall have heretofore served in the Ranger or police forces of the southern border States or as peace officers of the counties or municipalities thereof.

And amend the bill by changing the numbers of the sections to conform accordingly.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment can be, of course, readily understood by anyone who cares to understand it. It is useless to think of using infantry along the southern border of our country for its protection. That protection is needed everyone understands.

In my State of New Mexico the coal mines furnish the coal and the coke to the great copper mines and for all of the railroads near the border. For 800 miles from the border back into the States the railroads are entirely in the hands of Mexicans of old Mexico. Every section hand on every mile of road from the border to the State of Kansas, east through Texas into Louisiana, up into Colorado, and out into California, is in the hands of old Mexico Mexicans, a majority of them being ex-bandits recently in the service of one leader or another in the Republic of Mexico. It is perfectly easy at any time to put out of commission every coal mine, every copper mine, and every railroad by concert of action.

It is absolutely impossible, I say to you now, as everyone knows, for the present force on the border adequately to protect the people along that border. With the establishment of a force such as these mounted men selected from that country, knowing the country, knowing with whom they are dealing, you can take your Regular Army from the border, and the people will then from the troops to be selected among them protect themselves.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. FALL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. I do not see him in his seat, and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 53, nays 25, as follows:

YEAS—53.

Ashurst	Gore	McKellar	Smith, Mich.
Borah	Hale	McLean	Smoot
Brandegee	Harding	Nelson	Sterling
Broussard	Hardwick	New	Sutherland

Hughes	Newlands	Smith, Md.

So Mr. FALL'S amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I move to amend on page 6, line 23, by adding, after the word "only," the words "from those covered by section 2," so that it would read:

Or to draft for partial military service only, from those covered by section 2.

As the language now reads, it is certainly questionable as to whether the right given to the President is to draft for partial military service from any of the people in the United States or from those covered by the ages 21 to 27. I do not believe it was intended to give the right of draft for partial military service at this time to any citizen of any age in the United States. I can not believe that that was the purpose.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. JAMES in the chair]. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to ask the Senator from Georgia a question. What does "partial military service" mean?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The partial military service, I think, is defined in the following language in that section. It describes certain classes of work. I suppose it means for anything that was considered necessary in preparation for the war other than active military service. I think it applies to the language further on in the section, where the President is authorized to detail men or to exempt the men named from active military service for certain other lines of work. Now, I want the section to show clearly that this right of detail for partial military service—just what that means I do not undertake to say——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If the Senator will permit me, it means noncombatant service, hospital work, and work of that kind. I will say to the Senator that I have no objection to that amendment. I think the language ought to be made clear.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I will suggest to the Senator that that ought not to be section 2. It ought to be section 3.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is section 3, is it not?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think it is section 3. We are wrong. Section 2 is the section preceding it, which gives the right to enlist men. Then I would say paragraph 3, section 1.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire the attention of the chairman of the committee. I should like to ask the Senator what is the meaning of this term "draft for partial military service"?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I understand that it is a noncombatant service—service where a man is not doing actual combative service, but is doing a service that a soldier might perform.

Mr. BORAH. What might a soldier be performing under this?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Well, take the Quartermaster's Corps; take the Hospital Corps; they are noncombatants.

Mr. BORAH. Is that the meaning of "partial military service"?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I understand that that is what it means.

Mr. BORAH. It does not mean that you can draft a man to put him into a particular kind of industrial service as "partial military service"?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not understand it so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, there is one other amendment I desire to offer, on page 7, at the end of line 10:

and in making selection for active service, married men shall be relieved as far as practicable.

It does not relieve them, but it gives authority to do so. I understand the chairman of the committee will accept that amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, at the end of line 10, it is proposed to add the words:

and in making selection for active service, married men shall be relieved as far as practicable.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, do I understand that that amendment was accepted by the chairman?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes; I have no objection to it so far as I am concerned. I think the married men ought to be exempted, and under the rules and regulations now they are not accepted for the Regular Army.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the amendment reads that married men are to be exempted "as far as practicable." It is practicable to exempt any married man. All you have to do is to exempt him; so it really amounts, in my humble judgment—my consideration of it has been very hasty—to an explicit and a complete exemption. Of course, it is a fact, however, that many married men are entirely able to go in an economic or industrial sense.

Mr. GALLINGER. For example, these slackers who are now getting married.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, does the Senator think a man should serve in two wars? [Laughter.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not adopt that amendment without a good deal of consideration.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the language of the amendment may not be as happy as it ought to be in using the words "as far as practicable," but I do not think married men ought to be enlisted or drafted into the service. It has cost us a good deal of money in this Mexican mobilization because of the fact that many of the men were married and had dependents at home.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes, Mr. President; that is perfectly true. I should have no objection to the exemption of men who had dependent families or dependent relatives; but this goes further than that, and certainly creates the impression that whether the married man's family is dependent upon him or not he is to be exempt. The language already in the bill covers this point exactly, according to my view of it. It authorizes the President, in his discretion, to exempt—

Those in a status with respect to persons dependent upon them for support which renders their exclusion or discharge advisable.

That includes every married man whose wife and children are dependent upon him; and those are the only married men that should be exempted. But the amendment of the Senator from Georgia goes a good deal further, and states that every married man shall be exempt so far as practicable. It is going to be entirely practicable to exempt them all. There is no difficulty about that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I think the language which defines the man to be exempted as one who has others dependent upon him for support is sufficiently broad. If a man is married and his wife is not dependent upon him for support, it seems to me he is perfectly free to go to war or anywhere else, and I see no reason why the exemption already provided in the bill should be enlarged in this way. It leaves it all indefinite. It would put the department in a peculiar situation for one married man to be denied exemption because they said it was not practicable to exempt him and for another one to be given exemption; and the determination of the question of whether it is practicable or not would involve the department in an immense amount of trouble and annoyance.

I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia has spoken once upon this amendment.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, it strikes me that if the amendment should be so written that the married man whose condition was such that he could not with safety to his family go could claim the exemption, it would not be apt to be abused, but a man who was able to go, whose condition was such that he could leave his family well provided for, ought to have the privilege of going if he desires to go. He ought not to be compelled to go if his obligation to his family, his home, required him to stay.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of the bill, the following:

There is hereby created in the Department of the Navy a board which shall be known and designated as the "board of merchant shipping defenses." Said board shall consist of the chief constructor of the Bureau of Construction and Repair of the Navy Department, the naval constructor of such bureau, the Commissioner of Patents, and the following other persons to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to wit: One with the highest recognized skill and experience in the construction of merchant ships; one with the highest recognized skill and experience in the navigation of such vessels; and two with the highest recognized skill, experience, and knowledge of mechanical devices used in the great steel manufacturing plants of the country. The chief of construction shall be the chairman of said board.

Each member of said board shall receive a salary of $5,000 per year and reasonable expenses while employed in the duties of said board: Provided, That officials receiving salaries from the Government shall not have their salaries diminished by reason of services on said board.

The duty of said board and the purpose of its creation is to provide for and perfect in the shortest possible time such mechanical device or devices as can be successfully used and employed upon a merchant ship while navigating the seas to check or deflect the course of a submarine torpedo and to prevent the same from coming in contact with the hull of the merchant vessel, or to explode the same before such contact, or the perfection of any other mechanical device to protect merchant vessels from destruction by submarines other than by use of defense guns.

The said board, immediately upon its organization, shall advertise for suggestions from mechanics, inventors, and others, and shall examine into and pass upon the practicability or feasibility of any proposed mechanism. For the purpose of directing the inventive genius of the people of this country toward the protection of merchant shipping against the menace and enormous devastation of submarine torpedoes the sum of $5,000,000 is hereby appropriated as a reward to any person or persons who shall succeed in inventing or producing any mechanism that will accomplish the purpose aforesaid, said sum to be divided among those who have furnished material assistance in the perfecting of any such mechanism in accordance with the degree of services rendered by him or them and to be apportioned by said board.

The said board shall furnish all reasonable assistance and opportunities for testing such proposed means and appliances for accomplishing this end.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I regret very much that there were so few of the Senators present yesterday when I was discussing this matter, when I presented facts and figures and arguments from the admiralty of Great Britain and from France showing that unless we could check the U-boat ravages within six months it would be impossible for Great Britain to continue this war. I showed that within the last week the submarine ravages have more than quadrupled over two weeks ago; that the highest number of British shipping that was destroyed in one week, except the week ending February 10, 1917, was 28 ships; that last week 65 of them went to the bottom of the sea, and an equally greater number of neutral ships; that, taking the food products that are going down to the bottom of the ocean daily, unless checked it is impossible for these nations to continue in the war.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield for a question.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to ask the Senator whether he knows that in one of the appropriation bills we appropriated a large sum of money for what is known as the Edison Board to look into such questions as he is discussing? I do not know whether it would cover it or not.

Mr. McCUMBER. It would not; it is not the same.

Mr. President, since speaking yesterday I pick up this morning's Washington Post and notice an article which is headed, "World-wide famine threatened by war; Europe unable to replace ships as fast as U boats sink them." Then there is quite a lengthy article under that heading.

I desire to read into the RECORD a letter which I received yesterday after making my address on this subject. The heading says "Torpedo Deflector Co. of America." I will just read a portion of it.

> On offering my invention to protect merchant ships against torpedoes to the Navy Department, I was informed by Capt. Smith, who passes on inventions for Secretary Daniels, that the Navy Department is not interested in the protection of merchant ships, and that I must offer my invention to the merchant-ship owners. I have taken this matter up with the president of the International Mercantile Marine, with Mr. J. P. Morgan, and other ship owners, and they all pass the decision over to the Navy Department.
> For the protection of battleships only this invention is under consideration by the Naval Consulting Board.
> Since neither the Navy Department nor the ship owners will make any decision in regard to the matter for protection of merchant ships the creation of your "Board of Merchant Shipping Defenses" is, as your able address shows, vital to the country.

I appeal to the Senator from Oregon who himself has been considering an amendment of this character. I appeal to him in the name of the thousands of people who are manning these merchant vessels, that he give an opportunity to the inventors of this country to have a board where they can get an opportunity to put to a practical test their inventions. They can not do it to-day, and hundreds and hundreds of them are waiting for the opportunity.

It means, as I stated yesterday, Mr. President that this war will be won or it will be lost by the use of U boats, and if we do not conquer the enemy in less than six months, if they increase their powers of destruction as they have in the last three weeks, in six months we can neither get food nor an army over to Europe; the shipping will be so diminished that famine will stare our allies in the face.

Every week means something; every day means something; and if we can give an opportunity for these people to put to the practical test the many inventions I believe they will solve the problem of the U-boat by protecting the merchant ship itself against the submarine.

It matters little, Mr. President, though we create a thousand extra ships every month, if we can not take our surplus across the ocean; and any little diminution in the surplus that we can supply will reduce the shipments to such an extent that it will not meet the demand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I hope this amendment will not be adopted. This bill will be followed by the naval bill, and that is the proper measure on which to discuss naval matters and pass naval legislation. I would like to say for the information of the Senator that there is now a consulting board in the Navy, with Edison at the head, investigating this matter thoroughly. It has all the money that is needed. Capt. Taylor, Chief Naval Constructor, handles the details of the matter. All inventions are tested and examined that are worthy of it. There is no occasion to place this amendment on a bill that contains only expenditures for the Army. Next week the naval bill will be up——

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator yield in his time? Mine is exhausted.

Mr. SWANSON. I yield in my time.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have just read a letter which shows that it is impossible for the department——

Mr. SWANSON. I read that letter. I can not yield to the Senator in my short time for that purpose.

Mr. McCUMBER. Well, I asked permission of the Senator to do it.

Mr. SWANSON. I say I can not yield further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia declines to yield.

Mr. SWANSON. My time will soon be up. It requires no more to discover protection for a merchant ship than a naval ship. The one requires the same protection from a submarine that the other does. Anything that will protect one ship will protect another ship. All the genius of the Navy, all the money that can be expended is now authorized, and there is absolutely no occasion to put this amendment on an Army bill. Next week we will have up the naval bill, when this matter can be fully discussed and explained. I hope that the Senate will not include the amendment in an Army bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I was informed at the Navy Department that shields can be used in battleships to protect such ships from being torpedoed, and they said they could be used upon the merchant ships, but they were too expensive to be used and the owners of the merchant ships would not put them on, and on that account they are prey to the torpedoes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, this bill has entire reference to the Military Establishment. The amendment proposes to establish in the Department of the Navy a board to be known as the board of merchant shipping defenses. That is a matter entirely distinct and separate from the matters involved in this bill. If it is to be considered at all, it certainly should be offered to some bill appertaining to the Navy Department and not to the Army. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CURTIS. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state it.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 2, after the word "Senate," insert the following:

> Provided further, That the President may recommission persons who have heretofore held commissions in the Coast Guard department and have left the service honorably, after ascertaining that they are qualified for service, physically, morally, and as to age and military fitness.

Mr. CURTIS. I would like the attention of the chairman of the committee. This amendment simply extends the law of 1914 which is now applicable to the Army to the officers of the Coast Guard. The exact language of the act of 1914 is used in the amendment.

Mr. STONE. Why not apply the amendment, if it should be agreed to, to officers in the Navy? I know one or two very excellent young men now in the prime of life, in the thirties, who for reasons important to them resigned from the Navy and are in private life, and they desire to go back into the Navy.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I drew the amendment to this bill because I thought it was applicable, and did not make it apply to the Navy because I thought the officers in the Navy would be cared for in the naval bill, which I understand will be taken up next week. I thought this amendment was germane to this bill and therefore I offered it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Coast Guard is now under the War Department. I see no objection to it, but I can ascertain a little more fully the necessity for such an amendment if it is permitted to go into the bill and allowed to be considered in conference.

Mr. CURTIS. That will be perfectly satisfactory to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STONE. I wish to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Following section 8 insert as a new section:

SEC. 8a. That the service of all persons selected by draft under the provisions of this act shall be for the period of the emergency, unless sooner terminated by discharge or otherwise. Whenever said emergency shall cease by the conclusion of peace between the United States and its enemies in the present war, the President shall so declare by a public proclamation to that effect, and from and after the date of said proclamation the provisions of this act, in so far as they authorize compulsory service by selective draft or otherwise, shall cease to be in force and effect.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I am supporting the bill as it came from the committee. I shall vote for it, whether it shall be amended or not, but I wish to state again what I stated the other day, that as a matter of principle and as a permanent policy of the Government I am opposed to compulsory military service. I vote for this bill as a war measure, to meet a great emergency pressing upon us. I vote for it because it is necessary as speedily as possible to create an army sufficient to meet the demands made upon this Government.

This amendment provides as expressive of my view that at the conclusion of the war, when the President shall proclaim that peace has been entered into between the United States and its enemies, the provisions of the bill soon to be a law requiring compulsory service in the Army of the United States shall cease to be operative. In other words, I limit the compulsory service to the emergency before us.

The chairman of the committee, the Senator from Oregon, said to me that the last section of the bill covers this case. I can not so see it. That section provides this—now listen:

All laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby suspended during the continuance of the present war.

But, Mr. President, the suspension of existing law for a given period does not concern, as it seems to me, the question involved in the amendment. You can suspend the operation of existing laws and yet the law we are about to pass may go on after the war. There is nothing in the closing section of the bill which accomplishes the end I seek to accomplish by this amendment.

Senators, unless you wish to engraft this as a permanent policy of the Government you should support this amendment. That is all I have to say.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I called the Senator's attention to the concluding section because it suspended laws that were in conflict with it during the period of the war. But in nearly every section of the bill it discloses on the face of it that the provisions are only to remain in force and effect during the emergency. For instance, on page 2, lines 18, 19, and 20, it provides:

And said members so drafted into the military service of the United States shall serve therein for the period of the existing emergency unless sooner discharged.

There are one or two other sections in the bill where the same language is used.

There is no particular objection to the language of the Senator's amendment; but it is simply tautological, because the bill shows that it is for the emergency.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will allow me, the trouble about it is that if the language means just what the Senator means—and I think possibly he is right—in the last section the word "war" is used, and that is evidently different. It may be contended that the word "emergency" does not mean exactly what the word "war" means, because they are both used in separate sections of the bill. Would it not be better to say that wherever the word "emergency" occurs in the bill the word "war" shall be substituted?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to that when the amendment is proposed, because that is what the whole bill means.

Mr. STONE. Will not the Senator let this amendment go to conference?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There are a great many things which have been put on the bill now that it seems to me encumber it a good deal. If I thought there was any doubt about the meaning of the language of the bill I would consent without a moment of hesitation to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will yield for a question.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to ask the Senator if the words which he has read on page 2 do not apply only to the part of the military service that comes in through the National Guard? There is no language applying to the part of the service raised through the draft system.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask the Senator to look at section 6, on page 9:

That the qualifications and conditions for voluntary enlistment as herein provided shall be the same as those prescribed by existing law for enlistments in the Regular Army.

Mr. NORRIS. That is, "voluntary enlistment." Still, that does not apply.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me call the Senator's attention to page 6 of the bill, lines 4 and 5, where it says:

And those drafted shall be required to serve for the period of the existing emergency, unless sooner discharged.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Oregon has not expired.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield the floor. The Senator from Georgia will call attention to the part of the bill where the word "emergency" occurs, because he has them marked.

Mr. HARDWICK. I have them marked in the bill. There are nine places where the word "emergency" occurs. It is applied to all provisions of the bill—for the men we draft, for the Regular Army, for the militia, and for this extra force. I will submit my proposition, and I think we can secure it by unanimous consent, probably, if the Senator from Oregon agrees. The Senator says that the word "emergency" means war. I hope he is right. There ought not to be room for the slightest doubt or dispute on that question. I therefore ask the Senator to consent to substitute the word "war" for the word "emergency" wherever it occurs in the bill. That should cure the trouble and serve the purpose.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to consent to it. I talked with the Senator from Georgia about it and expressed a willingness to assent to that change if the Senate was willing to have it made. That is what is intended by the bill, that it should be during the period of the war. I ask that the bill be amended in that respect.

Mr. HARDWICK. I can indicate every place.

Mr. NORRIS. Do I understand the Senator from Oregon——

Mr. HARDWICK. Let us get through with this request. It is important to get the change made so that there may be no dispute about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Georgia that wherever the word "emergency" appears it shall be stricken out and the word "war" inserted? Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Has the amendment of the Senator from Missouri been withdrawn?

Mr. STONE. No; it has not been withdrawn.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me the amendment of the Senator from Missouri certainly would make plain what I think every Senator wants the law to mean.

I have voted in favor of most of the amendments which have been offered. There are a great many things in this bill which I dislike very much. One of the reasons why I object to the conscript method of getting soldiers is because I believe it is going a step toward a permanent compulsory universal service, to which I am opposed. I am not going at this time to give the reasons why I favored the amendment which provided that, in addition to conscription, we should permit voluntary service and raise an army, if we could, by voluntary enlistments; but that would have been the way that I would have done if I could have raised this army.

My own idea is that the day after we passed the declaration of war we should have provided for a volunteer army. Had we done so, perhaps we would have had 500,000 men now in training. However that may be, and however much I dislike many of the provisions which are in the bill, and however often I have voted to change them, the facts remain, as I look at them, that we are at war, and one of the necessary things to carry on the war is to raise an army. I therefore do not feel myself justified in voting against a method of raising an army that is even very distasteful to me, if that is the only method that is left to me. So I expect to vote for this bill because I believe that we ought to do everything that we can to bring the war to a successful issue, and to do that we must have an army. I should vote for a method of raising it, even though I very much disliked the method.

One of the serious objections, however, to my mind is the conscript method of raising an army of compelling men to serve when there has been no opportunity offered for anybody to volunteer. It seems to me that the amendment of the Senator from Missouri makes clear what I believe we all desire in this bill, and that is, that the conscription of an army shall cease just as soon as the war is over. I can, therefore, see no reason why we should not adopt the amendment and make certain what now is somewhat uncertain, although it may be that the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from Georgia are right in their view of the matter.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri certainly can do no harm to the bill, if the purpose of the bill is that upon the termination of the war all of the provisions of the bill shall cease to be operative. The terms of the bill are such as to leave unmistakably the meaning, but if it is the intention of the Senate that there shall be no compulsory draft after peace is declared I, for one, should be very glad to see the amendment incorporated in the bill, for then it will leave no possible doubt in the minds of any of those who enter into this conflict at what time this system shall cease.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I shall vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri for the reason that it eliminates all doubt on this subject and because in voting for this measure in time of war I do not mean in any way to commit myself to universal service, military training, or compulsory training of any kind in time of peace.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE].

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment may be once more reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The Secretary again read the amendment proposed by Mr. STONE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 13, on page 7, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That notwithstanding the exemptions herein enumerated, each State shall be required to supply its quota in the proportion that its population bears to the total population of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be inserted on page 12, line 20, after the word "Army." I ask, in connection with the amendment, to strike out the period and to insert a colon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, at the end of section 9, line 20, after the word "Army," it is proposed to add the following proviso:

Provided, That on and after April 1, 1917, the basic pay of all men with the rating of enlisted men during the continuance of the war shall be increased $15 a month over and above the rates of pay proper as fixed by law for times of peace: Provided further, That this rate of pay shall apply to enlisted men of the National Guard called or drafted into the service of the United States during the war.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I want to say that this amendment—I think in exactly the same terms—has been adopted by the House this evening without a dissenting vote.

Mr. President, we all know and must concede that the pay of the enlisted men of the Army is ridiculously low. It was fixed back in the time when the wage compared with the wage paid to farm hands. That wage has increased now until farm hands receive from $30 to $35 per month. We are now going to draft men out of industry, possibly some from the farm, if they are not excluded under the exemption clause of the proposed act, and put them into the Army. I submit it is not fair or right to take these men and not pay them something like a decent compensation.

In this connection, I desire to say that I hold in my hand the hearings before the House committee on the fortifications appropriations bill. A very interesting item is the subject of limbers. We ourselves pay at the arsenals where we make these limbers about $680, while to the private contractor with whom we deal we pay about $1,500. Those are some of the things that are needed in war. There is a profit to the man at home of about 300 per cent. When we send men into the trenches, into battle, and into war, using the same instrumentalities that are made by these people who are securing a profit of some 300 per cent, we ought at least to be willing to pay these men $30 per month.

I am not going to argue the matter, for I think the proposition is so self-evident and so just. It has been previously argued a good many times here, and I will not take all my time now in discussing it.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, Australia pays her enlisted men $45 a month; Canada pays hers $33 a month, with $20 additional allowance for a dependent wife. During the Civil War the loyal States paid in bounties to their volunteers the immense sum of $289,000,000, and the Federal Government paid $363,000,000 for the same purpose—a total of $652,000,000. Would it not be better to pay $150,000,000 a year in additional compensation to our soldiers to assist them in obtaining some of the comforts of life while they are fighting side by side with the Canadian and Australian troops in France, who even then will be receiving more pay than do our men? Is it well for this great, prosperous Nation of ours, Mr. President, to have our soldiers receiving less pay than the soldiers of other countries performing like service on the same fields?

Many men will volunteer or be drafted for this war who will leave behind them wives, mothers, younger sisters or brothers, and this Nation can do no less than to pay its private soldiers $30 a month so that they may contribute a little to take care of those left at home.

I hope this amendment will be agreed to. It is a meritorious one and ought to receive the unanimous vote of the Senate.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I desire to suggest to the Senator from Iowa that his amendment does not provide for increasing the pay of the enlisted men of the Regular Army. Of course they are going to perform exactly the same kind of service that the volunteers and the conscripted men perform, and, unless their pay is made the same, we will not have any Regular Army after this war is over.

Mr. KENYON. I agree with the Senator, and if he will propose such an amendment I will be very glad to accept it as part of my amendment.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I want to ask the indulgence of the Senate for just a moment to voice my very hearty approval of the amendment of the Senator from Iowa and to express the hope that it may be adopted by the Senate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa says the amendment is almost verbatim with the one adopted by the House this evening.

Mr. KENYON. I think it is verbatim.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am not familiar with the technical language employed in drafting provisions of this kind in military bills. I will read the amendment, and then ask the Senator a question:

Provided, That on and after April 1, 1917, the basic pay of all men with the rating of enlisted men during the continuance of the war shall be increased $15 a month over and above the rates of pay proper as fixed by law for times of peace."

I want to ask the Senator if he can tell me what is meant by "basic pay" and "rates of pay proper"?

Mr. KENYON. This amendment was prepared by the War Department, as I understand, and that is the language the War Department uses.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course I assume, then, that it is properly drawn, but it is not entirely plain to me. It seems, so far as covering the Regular Army is concerned, that the amendment does it now if they have the rating of enlisted men. Although proposed as an amendment to this bill, I do not think it is restricted to the men drafted under this bill; but all men having the rating of enlisted men, I think, will be covered. However, I am not certain about that. If it means that the $15 the enlisted men now get is their basic pay and that that will be raised to $30 a month, I understand it; but if it means anything else I should like to have it explained.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will ask the Senator does it refer to officers at all?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; simply to those who have the rating of enlisted men.

Mr. FLETCHER. The amendment has not been printed, I believe.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not know what men have the rating of enlisted men except enlisted men, but I am perfectly willing to vote for the amendment and let it go to conference. The trouble is, if we agree to it and it is verbatim as the House has passed it, we will not be able to correct it in conference. That is the reason I thought it was necessary to have it accurately drawn now.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, at present the enlisted man of the United States Army on his first enlistment gets from $15 to $75 a month. That is the base pay. For his second enlistment period he gets from $18 to $79 a month; for his third enlistment period he gets from $21 to $83 per month; for his fourth enlistment period he gets from $22 to $87 per month; for his fifth enlistment period he gets from $23 to $91 per month; for his sixth enlistment period he gets from $24 to $95 a month; and for his seventh enlistment period he gets from $25 to $99 per month. That is the rate of increase, and when on foreign service they get 20 per cent increase.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. So that the amendment provides a flat increase of $15 a month to all enlisted men, no matter what they are getting now?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir; as I understand the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa, that is the case.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the Senator will pardon my saying so—and then I have done—I am very much in favor of raising the pay of enlisted men by such an amount as will be fair and just under the circumstances; but I wish the Senator would give this amendment enough attention now or else change it in order that attention can be given to it in conference so as to make sure that it may accomplish the purpose intended.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It will not be the subject of conference if the same amendment has been adopted by the House.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It will not be; and if this is not what ought to be adopted, then we will be prevented from changing it by the fact that the two Houses have agreed to identical provisions.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I took the question up with the Secretary of War after the discussion on the subject in the Senate at the last session, and I received a letter from him under date of April 18, 1917, which I will not have time to read, but will put in the RECORD. I am satisfied that the Senate is going to increase the pay of the enlisted men anyhow, but I want the letter to go in the RECORD.

The Secretary of War disapproves of the increase, and I think he is right in opposing the increase.

Mr. President, it has been claimed that the enlisted man is poorly paid. I admit that. I say that the enlisted man does get small pay; there is no question about that, but hardly any one in figuring the pay that the enlisted man receives stops to think that he is employed the year round, an advantage which the average laborer does not have. Then, he receives his clothing, hospital and medical attention, and board. He has everything that any man can have, and, as I have said, is constantly employed. So that, taking into consideration all that he does get, it amounts to a good deal more than $15 a month. Everything considered, it would probably amount to from $70 to $75 a month. That is small pay; but the character of men in the enlisted personnel of the Army, as a rule, would not earn any more than that in private employment. I believe that may safely be said.

This subject has been a matter of discussion in the Senate a great many times. The sentiment of the Senate has been in favor of increasing the pay; and while I do not think it ought to be done, for, as I said the other day, there is a duty that every citizen owes to his country in time of war, I feel the Senate is going to increase it anyhow. I ask to have printed in the RECORD the letter from the Secretary of War to which I have referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 18, 1917.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
United States Senate.

SIR: In reply to your letter of April 14, transmitting the resolution of the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate requesting the War Department "to furnish the committee its suggestions with reference to a schedule of pay based upon the increase of the basic pay of an enlisted man from $15 to $20, from $15 to $25, and from $15 to $30 a month," I have the honor to submit the following as the view of the War Department on this important matter:

When the national-defense act approved June 3, 1916, was under consideration by Congress the question of pay for enlisted men was given very careful consideration by the General Staff and the War Department, and the schedule of pay at that time recommended is now contained in section 28 of the national-defense act.

To meet the changed situation due to the state of war the War Department has recommended in a bill now before the Senate (S. 1786) "that in time of war the wife or, if there be no wife, the children or, if there be no children, a dependent relative of an enlisted man designated by him as his beneficiary under this bill, shall be paid a monthly separation allowance of $15."

It is believed by the War Department that the above proviso furnishes the best solution of the question during the war, and that the question of an increase in the basic pay of an enlisted man in time of peace can be well postponed for consideration until the conclusion of the war. As it is important that soldiers be relieved from anxiety regarding the care of those dependent on them while they are absent in the military service, the War Department strongly urges that this monthly separation allowance of $15 be granted.

In the draft of bill now under consideration by the Military Committees of the House and the Senate, which the War Department has recommended to Congress "to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States" and intended to provide the armies needed for the conduct of the war with Germany, the application of the principle of universal obligatory military service in time of war is recommended. In recommending the application of this principle the War Department gives frank recognition to the fact that no adequate monetary consideration can be paid to the soldiers of the country who risk their lives in its defense in time of war. Under the sections of this bill providing for exemptions, among others, the President is authorized to excuse from service "those in a status with respect to persons dependent upon them for support which renders their exclusion or discharge advisable." It is not the present purpose of the War Department to accept the volunteer enlistment of married men with families of children, and should they be selected under the application of the principle of universal service in case the War Department measure recommending this principle becomes a law, it is the intention of the War Department to excuse such men from military service.

For the reasons given, it is believed that the present basic pay, with the addition of the separation allowance, will prove sufficient to meet the needs of the situation during the present war they can be foreseen at this time.

Very truly, yours,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I wish to address a question to the Senator from Oregon in my time, so that it will not embarrass him to answer it, if he cares to do so. Does he understand that by doubling the pay of enlisted men of the Army the pay of the higher grades of noncommissioned officers would be raised accordingly?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think it would be raised accordingly. I do not see how it can be otherwise.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now, Mr. President, if that is true—and I assume that it is—let me call the attention of the Senate to the fact that a first sergeant or a quartermaster sergeant or a sergeant of the Signal Corps—and particularly a sergeant employed on electrical work in the Signal Corps—who now gets $75 a month, and in one grade gets as high as $92 a month, will, if this amendment goes through, be receiving in the neighborhood of $175 or $185 per month, which is more than a second lieutenant receives.

Mr. KENYON. I think the Senator is mistaken as to that. There would be a flat increase of $15 a month.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Fifteen dollars flat? As I understand, the base pay is to be increased $15. When you increase the base pay you increase the entire schedule, up through the grades of corporal and sergeant and sergeant major. They are all enlisted men.

I myself am in favor of a substantial increase in the pay of the enlisted men of the Army; but I suggest, in order that the conferees may work out with the advice of the War Department a proper schedule for the pay of the different grades of enlisted men and avoid making a sergeant major, we will say, receive considerable more pay than a second lieutenant, and even a first lieutenant, that the language of the amendment of the Senator from Iowa be changed to read "$14."

Mr. KENYON. I will say to the Senator that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] will offer an amendment which I will accept. Otherwise I am perfectly willing to accept the Senator's suggestion to make it $14.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, after the word "Guard" in the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa, I move to insert the words "and to those in the Regular Army new enlisted," and then continue.

I think that amendment, with all due respect to whoever prepared it, is badly drawn. This, however, will throw it into conference, and I assume that the conferees will understand that the purpose is to raise the pay of all enlisted men $15 a month.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, as to the other, it will only throw the language into conference, but not the amount.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Why not change the amount by a dollar, as the Senator from New York has suggested, so that injustice will not be done by having disproportionate pays for different ranks?

Mr. KENYON. That is a very wise suggestion. I accept the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts and also ask to amend by inserting "$14" instead of "$15" a month. That will leave it so as to go to conference.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I think this amendment is a wise one, and I hope it will be adopted. Of course it is utterly impossible to estimate on any commercial basis the true value of the services of men who go to war in defense of their country. Nevertheless, this will in a measure take care of their material needs and is obviously just.

We are just on the point, however, of voting upon the bill itself. It institutes a new departure in the military policy of the United States and, I think, a wise one. I want to say a word, before casting my vote, upon the distinguishing features of this bill and the occasion which demands it.

We must win this war, Mr. President, in cooperation with our allies or fight alone against consolidated Europe.

If Germany succeeds in conquering France and Russia and England, she will proceed to Belgianize them. Having established her autocracy in control of amalgamated Europe, she will exploit the resources in money and men not only of herself and her allies, but of these conquered lands in the equipment of an expedition against America. The State Department has in its possession ample proof that one of the plans of Germany, long nurtured and regardless of the existing war declared against her by the United States, was to establish a base for naval and military operations in this hemisphere. There is ample proof at hand that German policy and German culture promoted the doctrine of German rule and authority ultimately to be established over her colonies in the New World, and through them to be indefinitely extended in this sphere of action. German colonies already established, owning land and carrying on a vast business in Mexico, Brazil, and other American States were centers and nurseries of this propaganda.

Our war with Germany is not a disinterested one; it is a fundamental struggle for liberty and for democracy, not in the abstract only or for other people, but in the concrete, and for our own people. If Germany wins in Europe and establishes her flag and military control over that Continent, she will readily extend her power into Asia and Africa. When once this is established, it is perfectly clear that we would have to fight the resources of those lands consolidated under German direction—not only for the Monroe doctrine, but for our independent national existence and our institutions.

To allow Germany to destroy her enemies in detail and turn their own resources against their allies would be the most stupendous blunder in history. If we are to strike at all—and we have decided that we will—we should strike with all the power at our command, in coordination with the power of our allies. In no other way can the resources opposed to Germany's ambition be properly utilized.

The argument has been made that compulsory universal military service or training would establish a system of militarism in this country. The only way in which this war can be conducted is by a system of militarism. War means militarism. And so long as we are in a state of war the object to be desired is the development and effective use of a powerful military machine. It is argued against the extraordinary powers conferred upon the President and the executive branch of the Government by pending bills that they are infringements upon the liberty of the people. War demands a concentration of control. The ultimate test of democracy is its ability to concentrate its resources and efficiently direct its power when attacked. The democracies of the ancient world met this demand by the creation of dictators. It is not necessary for us to establish a dictator. The ultimate power and control is retained by Congress as the representatives of the people and by the people themselves. They exercise this power in the frequent elections provided by the Constitution. These acts, vesting essential means of efficient war in the hands of the President, make him the agent, merely, of the people, but an agent vested with adequate powers. The people have the means of recalling these powers or of removing this agent, under the wise provisions of our fundamental law.

We have learned on many bitter occasions that there is only one way in which the full power of the Nation can be put into our military endeavors, and that is by bringing into the service of the Nation, whether in the Army at the front or in the essential industries behind the front, everyone able to contribute his ounce to the weight of our blow. In individual contests and in the struggles of nations disaster has often come from partial efforts. A close analysis of the campaigns of every great military leader the world has produced will demonstrate the proposition that their victories were due to the concentration of all available resources and power in their main objective and in the movements subsidiary to it. In democracies there is a just preference for civil over military authority. It is but natural that the people should be careful of the growth and maintenance of great standing armies as a power which might readily become independent of them. Should such great military establishments become independent of the people it would be but an easy step to the control of the civil authorities by the military, and liberty would be lost.

It is for this reason that I am opposed to the permanent establishment and maintenance of great standing armies, and for this reason that I am in favor of universal military training. Present as well as past experience demonstrates that the ultimate test of the endurance of liberty is physical force. Virtue bereft of power is the easy victim of vice. The old struggle between good and evil still permeates the universe. It has been depicted in the imaginations of men in the highest form of human expression, in the dramas of writers, and the pictures and music of the artists of the world. There is an ideal that has done much to bless mankind—that the devil can be conquered by kindness, and that evil will yield to good. Unfortunately, however, notwithstanding the progress that has been made, we are yet far from attaining that ideal. On every hand we see proof that tyranny and oppression, avarice and cruelty are still rampant in the world, and that they will not yield to argument or fair speech. They base their claims on might, and might alone. There is only one way in which they can be fought, and that is with their own weapons. No other argument will appeal to them. If liberty and the right of every man to pursue happiness according to his own tastes and desires, within limitations of reasonable laws which he himself has a voice in enacting, we must be able to oppose force with force and to defend ourselves against the exploiters of the world.

There are only two alternatives by which we can be able at all to survive in such a test. The first is by the establishment and maintenance of a great permanent standing army to be kept at all times, in peace or in war, ready for any emergency. I am opposed to this, not only because it unnecessarily saps the economic resources of the people and produces various incidental evils, but because it is a menace to its own creator. It may, like some fearful Frankenstein, turn and rend the people who formed it.

The other alternative is a system by which a great army can be produced when needed in time of war or great national emergency. This was Washington's plan. He was opposed to large, permanent military establishments; but urged, with all the convincing power of his matchless judgment, the training of our citizens so that they would be fit material for armies in case of need. Under reasonable restrictions and regulations, with the ultimate power constantly in the hands of the people, a system of universal training will increase our resources rather than diminish them, even in time of peace.

It will cure many of our young men of habits of idleness. It will foster the spirit of democracy by putting all upon an absolute equality—distinction being based upon merit only, exemptions being denied to wealth alone, and hiring of substitutes prohibited. It will be a benefit to the health of our people. It will inculcate in our young men those essential habits of self-control and discipline, which are essential to success in any difficult undertaking, whether there is ever a war or not. If properly regulated it will not take them away to any injurious extent from their normal work. It will be but a reasonable part of our system of public training and education. We already have compulsory education in most of the States. Compulsory military training is but the application of this same principle. It is, in fact, but an adoption of what many successful people of ancient and modern times have made a part of the regular education of their youth. Sparta in ancient times and Switzerland to-day are examples of it. The modifications of the principles to suit the conditions of a great continental Nation such as this are under the control of Congress and of the people.

This is the material, or should be, out of which there would be formed, with an equal call upon all, an army in such an emergency as this. Unfortunately we have heretofore had no such system. That training which should have been a part of their regular education we must now give to our young men in the face of a great emergency, while the destiny of the world is hanging in the balance on the decision of the struggle now shaking the plains of France. Our independence and institutions being at stake in its ultimate decision, why should we make a partial effort? Why should the part which we are to take be left to the voluntary choice of individuals? It is not an individual matter. It involves not only the integrity and the essential rights, but the existence of the Nation itself. Instead of depending upon voluntary contributions, the Nation itself, in its corporate capacity, should organize its strength and furnish it forth without a day's delay, hestitation, or uncertainty, to cast its deciding weight into this decision.

The only way that the full national strength can be exerted is by eliminating in our principal system the idea of voluntary contribution of service, just as we have eliminated as any part of the main machinery of State voluntary contributions of money. The idea of national action is inconsistent with voluntary individual action, except as merely incidental or supplemental to the main system.

Some confusion of ideas frequently arises from the words compulsion or conscription, as though it were a force imposed from the outside upon an unwilling people. This is the opposite of the truth. The compulsory service proposed by this bill will be established, if it is established at all, by the people, upon the people, for the people. It is an act of self-discipline, of self-service. It is nothing more than a thorough coordination and concentration by the people, through their free institutions, of their own power. Compulsory military service is spoken of by some, even distinguished leaders of this Congress, as a state of servitude, and comparison has been made between the conscript and the convict. It would be a state of servitude if it were imposed by an alien power and such may well be the case if democracy proves unable to defend itself against its enemy; but to say that an essential and vital service to the Nation, imposed upon themselves by the people, in a great emergency, is comparable to the base servitude of a felon, or that state of slavery which would be imposed by an alien enemy is a perversion of reason and equivalent to saying that service of the country in obedience to law is the same as an offense against society in violation of law.

It can not be said that an education in arms of the citizens of a free Republic is a menace to liberty. On the contrary, it is a bulwark of liberty. Liberty is in the heart. It is in the heart of our citizens, and when, for its defense, they train themselves to meet their enemies, that same liberty, so long as the love of it remains, will direct their armies and make use of this training which they have imposed for the preservation of their independence.

The expression "a citizenry trained to arms" is often heard, but has never yet in this country, in time of peace, been put into practice. All that is proposed, either by this bill or others intended for a permanent system of military training, is to carry out in practice what even the pacifists have claimed to rely upon in years past—and to have in truth as well as in mere expression "a citizenry trained to arms." It can not be said that such organization in defense of their rights has destroyed democracy in Switzerland or Australia or any other free democracies of the world, which, rather than depend upon professional soldiers, have taken into their own hands the defense of their rights and liberty.

The life and property and essential rights of a citizen are but tokens of the integrity of the nation. They may be insignificant in comparison to the whole, and some may say that we should not endanger ourselves for a few individuals, and yet, because they are tokens of the whole and are branded with the flag and name of their nation, their neglect or unjust destruction by an alien enemy strikes at the heart of the nation itself. The purpose of government is the protection of its citizens. That does not mean protection of a majority of the citizens only—it means the protection of all—and the power to act to save and defend the life and the essential rights of one, by a physchological reaction, is in itself an act of defense of the life and property and essential rights of every individual under the flag.

It is the boast of democracy that it guarantees equal rights. But equal rights and opportunities necessarily involve correspondingly equal obligations. How can there be equal rights in a nation which allows some of its citizens to shirk and depend for its defense upon the voluntary sacrifices of a few? All can not be equal in condition, but all are supposed to be equal in right and opportunity. So all can not be equal in service. If there is an autocracy in a democracy, it is an autocracy of service. Some are more able to serve than others, and no limitation can be placed upon the measure and ability to serve. The obligation to serve, however, is equal, or ought to be made equal, and that is particularly true of the supreme sacrifice of service in war and the giving of life, if need be, that the nation may survive.

Mr. CURTIS, Mr. WADSWORTH, and Mr. HARDING addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The unanimous-consent agreement requires that there shall be a final vote upon this bill by 12 o'clock. The Chair does not believe that any further amendments can be considered.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, may I offer a slight——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not believe that any more amendments can be received. The bill is in the Committee of the Whole——

Mr. KENYON. Can not this amendment even be voted on?

The VICE PRESIDENT. All in favor of the amendment will say "aye"——

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. There is an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HARDING. I am trying to offer an amendment to the pending amendment that will put it in conference.

Mr. KENYON. And I accept this amendment, striking out two words.

Mr. HARDING. The proposed amendment strikes out the word "April" and substitutes "May," and it strikes out the word "basic" modifying "pay."

Mr. KENYON. I accept that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I rise to offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair believes there will not be sufficient time, under the unanimous-consent agreement, to consider the amendment. The Chair is therefore compelled to rule it out of order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Well, it will be a long time before another unanimous-consent agreement is made.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is not to blame for the agreement. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill be engrossed and read a third time?

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. LODGE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when Mr. GOFF's name was called). I desire to announce the absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], on account of illness. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. I am authorized to state that were my colleague present he would vote "yea" on this question. I understand that the Senator from South Carolina would vote "yea" likewise.

Mr. WARREN (when Mr. KENDRICK's name was called). I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. KENDRICK], and to state that he is paired with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. I am authorized to say that if my colleague were present and at liberty to vote he would vote "yea."

Mr. PITTMAN (when Mr. NEWLANDS's name was called). I have received a telegram from the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] asking me to announce that he is necessarily absent, but that he is heartily in favor of universal service and would vote for the bill if present.

Mr. OVERMAN (when Mr. TILLMAN's name was called). The senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] has indefinite leave of absence. I have been requested to announce that if he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. VARDAMAN (when his name was called). I ask to be excused from voting.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the Senator from Mississippi be excused from voting on this question? [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and the Senator from Mississippi is excused from voting.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES]. I have been requested also to announce that were he present he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 81, nays 8, as follows:

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The House bill will reach the Senate, I am informed, in about 10 or 15 minutes, and I hope Senators will remain until it is here, so that the bill may be referred. I therefore move that the Senate take a recess——

Mr. OVERMAN. Before the Senator moves a recess, I should like to call up Senate bill No. 2, not for the purpose of consideration, except to make it the unfinished business.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I object. I do not know what the bill is, but I will just take an objection as a matter of safety.

RECESS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate take a recess for 30 minutes.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 12 o'clock midnight) the Senate took a recess until 12 o'clock and 30 minutes a. m., when it reassembled.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 3545) to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

INCREASE OF MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

H. R. 3545, an act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the Committee on Military Affairs has had a copy of the bill as it passed the House, and I am authorized to report back the House bill with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert in lieu thereof the provisions embodied in the bill as it has passed the Senate. I ask that the bill may go to the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to have printed in the RECORD a telegram embodying resolutions in favor of the bill just reported.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered.

The telegram referred to is as follows:

Mr. JONES of Washington. I present a resolution from the Chamber of Commerce and Commercial Club of Seattle, Wash. It is very short and, being somewhat different from any resolution which I have heard here, I ask that it be read to the Senate.

Resolutions.

We, the citizens of Pineville, Bell County, Ky., in mass convention assembled, resolve as follows:

That we approve the call, the purpose, and the spirit of this meeting.

That we approve the conduct, public and private, of our President, Woodrow Wilson, with respect to the present world war. That we feel assured that our country has been drawn into the terrible struggle only after every effort of our President to avert a conflict has proven unavailing.

That we express here our confidence in the patriotism and sincerity of our President and in the motives which have inspired him in dealing with our relations with foreign countries. That we know that his sole aim is to establish a lasting peace among the men of the world.

That we approve the wisdom of our Congress in providing adequate funds and placing them for the country's use.

That we here and now pledge our support to our Nation and its Chief, to our Army and her soldiers, and asking God to judge our hearts we pledge every effort that our cause may triumph to the upbuilding of His kingdom in the hearts of men.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented petitions from the congregation and the brotherhood class of the Central Methodist Episcopal Church South, of Fort Worth, Tex., praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. McLEAN presented a petition of the Grand Council of the Royal Arcanum of the State of Connecticut, praying for universal compulsory military training and service, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Central Labor Union of Norwich, Conn., praying for the punishment of any person or persons found guilty of cornering the food market, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY WAR PAPERS.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have a directory of service prepared by Hon. John G. Coos, of Columbia University, which indicates how and where each member of the community may find work for the Nation. The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in Heaven, from whom cometh all good, enrich our minds and hearts with heavenly gifts that we may abhor that which is evil and cleave to that which is good; that we judge not our brother, but do unto him as we would have him do unto us, keeping a conscience void of offense toward Thee and toward our fellow men; that Thy ways may be our ways; that we go about our Father's business this day and all days in the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

Mr. DENT. I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

TAX ON IMPLEMENTS OF WAR.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD certain resolutions adopted by about 3,000 people in Carnegie Hall, relating to taxation, which resolutions every Member of the House should read.

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House the gentleman has a perfect right to extend his remarks.

Mr. MANN. This is on another subject.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. This has no relation to the pending bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The communication containing the resolutions is as follows:

APRIL 13, 1917.

Hon. WALTER M. CHANDLER,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: On April 10, at a meeting of the Humanitarian Cult, the following resolutions were adopted by a unanimous rising vote of 3,000 Humanitarians:

"Whereas Congress in its wisdom has declared a state of war between Germany and this country; and

"Whereas this will involve the expenditure of billions of dollars and will mean a large tax upon the people of the United States for years to come: Be it

"Resolved, That it is the sense of the Humanitarian Cult that Congress should immediately enact laws which will place the largest share of the tax burden upon industries that manufacture implements of war, allowing these industries only sufficient profits to pay good living wages to the workers and a reasonable income on the capital invested, certainly not more than 10 per cent; and be it further

"Resolved, That Congress should enact laws and appoint a governing commission with authority to regulate the prices of all commodities, and that a minimum wage be established that can at all times be advanced to meet any increase in the cost of living, and that this commission prevent manipulation in all commodities which vitally affect the cost of living; and be it further

"Resolved, That Congress should immediately enact laws so that every family, when the breadwinner is doing military or naval duty, will be taken care of and kept from want, and in case of the death or injury to the breadwinner decent pensions will be allowed to them, which we believe will result in a more united country and in greater devotion on the part of the people; and be it further

"Resolved, That we go on record as favoring the immediate enfranchisement of women as a necessary development of democracy in this hour of stress."

May I ask you to spread this on the records?

I think that these bills ought to be introduced immediately. The moment the masses see that this is not a capitalists' war patriotism will become rampant, and a unified America will be the result.

Yours, sincerely,

MISHA APPELBAUM,
Founder and Leader of the Humanitarian Cult.

PRESENTATION OF A PETITION.

Mr. LUNN. Mr. Speaker, I have had presented to me as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs this morning a petition circulated by William R. Hearst, of New York, containing over 2,000,000 signatures. It is altogether too bulky to place in the basket.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman should put it in the basket. There will be no favorites played here about petitions.

INCREASE OF THE MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

On motion of Mr. DENT, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3545) to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States, with Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia in the chair.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the committee for about four minutes. I have not had any time yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks there is a unanimous-consent order that the vote on the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] shall be taken immediately after going into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALMON. Unanimous consent could be given to me in the face of that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that he may be permitted to address the Committee of the Whole for four minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The question now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from California

[Mr. KAHN] to strike out the provision authorizing the President to call for volunteers.

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. DENT. I ask for a division, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANN. Let us have tellers.

Mr. DENT. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. KAHN and Mr. DENT.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 279, noes 98.

Accordingly the amendment of Mr. KAHN was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Fifth. To raise by volunteers or draft, organize, equip, and officer, as provided in the third paragraph of this section, in addition to and for each of the above forces, such recruit training units as he may deem necessary for the maintenance of such forces at the maximum strength.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. KAHN: Page 5, line 19, strike out "volunteers or," so that the paragraph will read as follows:

"Fifth. To raise by draft, organize, equip, and officer, as provided in the third paragraph of this section, in addition to and for each of the above forces, such recruit training units as he may deem necessary for the maintenance of such forces at the maximum strength."

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, this simply perfects the legislation in accordance with the amendment that has just been adopted.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak on this matter, but before doing so I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 15 minutes.

Mr. MANN. I think I shall have to object to that.

Mr. SEARS. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. MANN. I will reserve the right to object.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I think perhaps the House will save time by allowing me to proceed for 15 minutes, although I do not think I will speak more than 5 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not like to object, but, after all, a very liberal time has been allowed for debate. On two nights the House remained in session as long as anybody desired to talk. The convenience of the great mass of the membership of the House will be better preserved by finishing the bill to-day, and it ought to be disposed of to-day. If we get along so that there is plenty of time, I will not object; but I do not think we can set a precedent at this time, and therefore I object.

Mr. SEARS. This is a sad hour to me, Mr. Chairman, and I regret more than anyone that I must assume the attitude that I shall assume.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SEARS. I refuse to yield to the gentleman or any other gentleman. Fickle fate has indeed been unkind, Mr. Chairman, when it selected the distinguished gentleman from California to lead the fight for Prussianism. I have read of the oppression of his people, and as an American citizen my heart has gone out to them, and it ill befits that gentleman to try to place upon my people, and now his people, the militarism that will, in my opinion, be harder on them than any his people have ever been subjected to.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I listened to the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BACHRACH] in which he said:

I have reached my conclusion on this very important question, I am frank to say, with a great deal of reluctance and after many stormy engagements with my own conscience, for I have heretofore been opposed to conscription or draft in any form, and so publicly stated in my remarks upon the military bill passed by Congress last year

Let me say to the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey that he need not worry about his conscience, for in the future, having once caused it to submit, he will have no trouble in laying his conscience aside. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, this is not a new question. One hundred years ago in the Halls of this Congress this question was before the American people. The identical question of conscription was being considered by the Representatives of the American people, and Daniel Webster stood upon the floor of this House and in part said as follows:

But, sir, there is another consideration. The services of the men to be raised under this act are not limited to those cases in which alone this Government is entitled to the aid of the militia of the States. These cases are particularly stated in the Constitution—"to repel invasion, suppress insurrection, or execute the laws." But this bill has no limitation in this respect. The usual mode of legislating on the subject is abandoned. The only section which would have confined the service of the militia, proposed to be raised, within the United States has been stricken out, and if the President should not march them into the Provinces of England at the north or of Spain at the south, it will not be because he is prohibited by any provision in this act.

That measures of this nature should be debated at all in the councils of a free government is cause of dismay. The question is nothing less than whether the most essential rights of personal liberty shall be surrendered and despotism embraced in its worst form.

It is time for Congress to examine and decide for itself. It has taken things on trust long enough. It has followed Executive recommendation till there remains no hope of finding safety in that path.

Is this, sir, consistent with the character of a free Government? Is this civil liberty? Is this the real character of our Constitution? No, sir; indeed it is not. The Constitution is libeled, foully libeled. The people of this country have not established for themselves such a fabric of despotism; they have not purchased at a vast expense of their own treasure and their own blood a Magna Charta to be slaves. Where is it written in the Constitution, in what article or section is it contained, that you may take children from their parents and parents from their children and compel them to fight the battles of any war?

An attempt to maintain this doctrine upon the provisions of the Constitution is an exercise of perverse ingenuity to extract slavery from the substance of a free Government.

The supporters of the measures before us act on the opposite principle. It is their task to raise arbitrary powers, by construction, out of a plain written charter of national liberty. It is their pleasing duty to free us of the delusion which we have fondly cherished, that we are the subjects of a mild, free, and limited Government, and to demonstrate by a regular chain of premises and conclusions that Government possesses over us a power more tyrannical, more arbitrary, more dangerous, more allied to blood and murder, more full of every form of mischief, more productive of every sort and degree of misery than has been exercised by any civilized government, with a single exception, in modern times.

Who shall describe to you the horror which your orders of conscription shall create in the once happy villages of this country? Who shall describe the distress and anguish which they will spread over those hills and valleys where men have heretofore been accustomed to labor and to rest in security and happiness? Appreciate the scene, sir, when the class shall assemble to stand its draft and to throw the dice for blood.

In my opinion, sir, the sentiments of the free population of this country are greatly mistaken here. The Nation is not yet in a temper to submit to conscription. The people have too fresh and strong a feeling of the blessings of civil liberty to be willing thus to surrender it.

Laws, sir, of this nature can create nothing but opposition. If you scatter them abroad, like the fabled serpent's teeth, they will spring up into armed men.

Ah, Mr. Chairman, on the floor of the Halls of Congress those extracts from the speech which I have just read were delivered more than a century ago, but, thank God, the sentiments expressed still live, and to-day there are those who have had the courage, in the face of one of the most powerful and one of the largest monetary propagandas this country has ever witnessed, to stand faithful as marks to be criticized, jeered, and perhaps forced to retire to private life. I again warn you of the dangers of the course which you seem determined to pursue.

But what is political future preferment if conscience is to be stifled? By this no criticism of those who disagree with me is intended. Far be it from me to criticize a man for exercising that right which I demand for myself.

Mr. Chairman, feeling as I do about this question, if I should longer remain silent and if I did not raise my voice in opposition thereto, I would lose my self-respect and would deserve nothing but jeers from my colleagues. I know a thousand miles is a long way from home, but it does not cause me to forget the rounds of the ladder by which I did ascend, nor has it caused me to forget the brave, young, true, loyal American manhood who made it possible for me to satisfy, in part, my ambition. Not having forgotten and knowing their temperament, their loyalty, their patriotism, their willingness to die for their country if need be, as I believe I do, never will I by my vote agree to disgrace them by having conscription placed on them contrary to the Constitution until they have first had a chance to volunteer. Ah! But you say conscription will not be looked upon in that light. Let us see.

I read you in part an editorial, which recently appeared in one of the leading daily papers of my district, as follows:

That will leave something like 4,000,000 men from which to raise the first armies. Five hundred thousand of these men will be in camp by August 1. You stand one chance in eight of being among those men, for when the lists are made out your Uncle Samuel will send out strong-arm men to take those selected to the camps, whether they are pleased over their selection or not. If you are selected, you will go, mind that. But if you escape the first draft there will be others and still others until you are finally reached. The chances are seven to one that you will finally be called upon. Now, wouldn't you rather be an honorable volunteer than a confounded slacker, bound at last to serve his country? In a few days you will have no choice in the matter. You now have the choice. Which will you take?

In view of the above, where is the badge of honor conscription will confer? In view of the above, I have reached the conclusion that the people of this country have confused universal military service with the bill now before us, and that even believing that universal military service should be followed by conscription they do not know nor would they indorse the Prussian conscription service that is proposed by the minority.

I presume it is easier to swim downstream than it is to stem the current; that it is easier to take the course of least resistance than it is to fight for what you believe is right in face of what appears a powerful opposition such as is the case here, where same through the guise of universal military service and universal training and other erroneous and misleading reasons have been given to the public.

Why do I make this statement? Time will not permit me to discuss this. I will therefore only read you a few of the many telegrams which I have received: "Urgently request your support of universal military training, Spanish War Veterans"; "Urge your support and vote for universal training"; and "I trust you will vote and work for the passage through the House of the Army bill as favored by President Wilson." I have received many telegrams similar to these.

Mr. Chairman, in all of my political career, covering a period of 19 years, I have always fought for the rights of the people as I saw it, regardless of what appeared at the time to be public opinion; and that is why I can say with some pride, but with no egotism, I have never lost at any election my home precinct, where I have lived for 36 years. Now, as I see it, when the very life of my country, which I love so well, is at stake, I refuse to depart from the course which I have always followed and which I always expect to follow regardless of what the future has in store for me. Suffice it when I say, if it means my retirement to private life by so doing, I will smilingly accept the verdict of my people—grateful to them for the support they have given me in the past—and with a conscience which is clear, I will return to them and continue my efforts in their behalf. This I would rather do than to stultify myself, for I will at least retain my self-respect and I trust the admiration, if not the commendation, of my friends.

Mr. Chairman, I trust I am not an alarmist; nor am I a prophet; nor am I the son of a prophet; but with your forbearance, I will make this guess. Step by step State rights have been set aside and taken away. Step by step the liberties of the people have been set aside and taken from them. Slowly, it is true, but creeping paralysis has been no more certain and no more sure. Now, if this step is taken you practically, with one fell swoop of the pen, wipe out some of the most sacred traditions for which our forefathers died and for which, in that event, they fought in vain. If you will establish for my people a precedent more fatal and more grinding than the despised and hated Prussian militarism, in my judgment, it will only be a question of time until more of the rights and the liberties of the people will be taken from them.

But let us go back briefly to the misnomer—universal military service and conscription. You may fool yourself, my colleagues, but methinks when it becomes generally known among the young men of 19 to 25 that the entire burden of the war is to be thrown on them, and that out of about 4,000,000 names of those placed in the wheel, the men that in the future the Government must look to and rely on, only 500,000 names will be drawn, I fear those who are talking so loud for universal military service and universal conscription will have a hard time convincing those young men so unfortunate as to be conscripted that there is anything universal about said conscription.

I fear you will also have a hard time convincing them that the burden of defending their country is falling on all alike. This being true, and the burden still being unequal, why not first give them a chance to volunteer, as their forefathers did. Why not first give them a chance to offer their services, yes, their lives if necessary, in defense of the country which they love. Oh, but you say that will upset business. That would take from industries men that can not be spared. When you use that argument you know you are not fair, for under the terms of the bill reported by the majority of the Military Committee you know those who will be in charge of the volunteer system will have exactly the same power to refuse those who may be more useful at home, as they will have under the conscription bill which will be proposed. They tell us of the fairness of conscription. They tell us it will get the slacker and the coward. If it was true, Mr. Chairman, and I had a brave young son of the proper age, I would not care for him to go and fight the battles of his country surrounded by slackers and cowards. But is it true? Methinks to-day I can see the wheel containing the 4,000,000 names slowly but surely turning, and out of that wheel, as certain as we are standing here to-day, will come the names of the poor young men of this country and the names of those who would gladly have volunteered, but to whom you refuse that sacred privilege. I fear the consequences and result of the conscription plan and methods you seem determined to follow; but in this great trying time of my country I do not believe it wise to go into this matter fully and will only, therefore, warn my people, to my mind at least, of the dangers of said system which the minority proposes. Yes, you can, if you will, conscript the youths of our country and send them to a certain death, but you will not do so by my vote until, as contemplated by the Constitution, all of the plans have failed and conscription is necessary for the preservation of my country.

Strange arguments, Mr. Chairman, have been used on the floor of the House during this debate. Distinguished gentlemen have urged their colleagues to stand by the administration when it comes to the question of conscription, but when it comes to the question of sending young men to foreign soil severely criticize their colleagues because they would not agree with them. Yet, when the same administration demands that the age be limited from 19 to 25 years, distinguished gentlemen have stated on the floor of the House that they would resign their seats before they would consent to any such unfair proposition. I want to commend them for their stand on that proposition. They are willing to stand by the administration to the extent of sending young men of their districts to an almost certain death, but on the mere question of years refuse to stand by the administration, and demand that their own intellect be permitted to work.

We have spent much time in arguing this and other questions, and much of our time has been spent in preparing for war. Mr. Chairman, desiring to be fair, no other course was left open to us, as Germany forced the war on us.

Briefly I want to call my colleague's attention to the fact that the high cost of living is getting higher, the price of clothing is increasing, the price of groceries continues to soar, and flour will soon pass the high-water mark established of approximately $15 per barrel. I trust the day is not far distant when the able statesmen upon the floor of this House will give their best thought and lend their best efforts in working out some relief.

Mr. Chairman, there are many reasons why I am for the Dent bill, but most of these have been advocated by others and there is no reason for repetition.

Mr. Chairman, I have always been an optimist and have always endeavored to look upon the bright side of life. Permit me, therefore, to say in conclusion, I truly believe, or is it a hope, that the war across the ocean will soon come to an end, and that it will not be necessary to send our young men to fight in the trenches. My life has largely been spent in the open. To camp and hunt and mingle with nature has been one of my chief pleasures, and I have always noticed just before the dawn the hour is the darkest.

If I could have had my way, with so much opposition to the minority report, I would have agreed upon a compromise rather than have endeavored to jam down the throats of a large number of the Members of Congress a proposition which I believe they honestly do not indorse.

To you, my colleagues, again warning you of the seriousness of the step you are about to take and the importance of the proposition upon which you soon will vote, I will only say that I yield to no one when it comes to loyalty, allegiance, and love for my country. God grant that the flag of the brave may forever wave, but that it will wave over free men and not over slaves. God grant that the flag of the red, white, and blue may forever wave over patriotic men, loyal and true. Wave on, wave on, O Flag; wave on forever!

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent for five additional minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. TALBOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and, as a part of my remarks, I wish to have printed in the RECORD the following resolution by the citizens of Delta and lower York County, in the State of Pennsylvania, and of Cardiff and upper Harford County, in the State of Maryland, in support of the President.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to have inserted as part of his remarks the matter referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was as follows:

Whereas on April 2, 1917, the President of the United States addressed a joint session of the Senate and House of Representatives directing attention to the conduct of the Imperial German Government in its challenge of the freedom and liberty of the democracies of the world, reciting the many assaults upon the patience of neutral countries, the instances of horrible, ruthless destroying of lives of women, children, and noncombatants, the utter disregard of law and right of mercy and justice, and, with patience and forbearance at the breaking point, the President advised that the Congress declare a state of war against the Imperial German Government; and

Whereas on April 6, 1917, the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled formally declared a state of war between the United States and the Imperial German Government, authorizing and directing the President to employ all the resources of the country to bring the conflict to a successful termination: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we meet at this time of national peril to express our loyalty to our country and prepare ourselves for any sacrifice; that when the inalienable right of man to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness has been challenged by an unscrupulous enemy, we, the citizens of Delta and of lower York County, in the State of Pennsylvania, and of Cardiff and upper Harford County, in the State of Maryland, do here and now renew our oath of allegiance to the Constitution and laws of the United States of America; that to the President we offer our loyal support and encouragement in the exercise of his constitutional duties and power; that we applaud his every effort for the peace of the world, and we accept his guidance and decision to engage the foe of justice, humanity, and righteousness; that we offer our warmest approval of the actions of our Representatives in Congress, Hon. J. F. C. TALBOTT and Hon. A. R. BRODBECK, in their supporting the President during these trying times—they best represent us when to the President they give their fullest service and cooperation; that with the destruction of Belgium and Armenia on our minds, the cries of the innocent and defenseless in our ears, God helping us, the United States of America must fight and win for humanity.

Upon motion, duly made and seconded, the aforegoing resolutions were unanimously adopted at a meeting held in the town of Delta, Pa., this 16th day of April, 1917.

CHAS. A. HAWKINS, Chairman.
CHARLES H. MACNABB, Secretary.

Mr. TALBOTT. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words of the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida moves to strike out the last two words of the Kahn amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. SEARS. Further, he says, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Just one moment. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS] to the fact that the regular order is insisted upon, which means that the gentleman must confine himself to the discussion of his amendment, which is to strike out the last two words of the Kahn amendment.

Mr. SEARS. This is in that connection, I think, Mr. Chairman, because I think Daniel Webster was opposed—— [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the amendment of the gentleman from California.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves to strike out the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that motion is not in order.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the motion to strike out a pending amendment can hardly be considered as a motion for the reason that the vote itself will strike out the amendment if it be in the negative.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition. The gentleman from Florida is not entitled to recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. MANN. It is for recognition in reference to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. To the pending amendment of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. MANN. Any amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman rises in that indefinite manner, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman from Florida has just had five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair refers to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. MANN. Oh, I beg the Chair's pardon.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out all but the first word in the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. MANN. I submit the gentleman is not entitled to recognition at this time in preference to any other gentleman who desires recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves an amendment to the amendment, which is to strike out all of the Kahn amendment except the first word.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOWARD. Under that rule of procedure the gentleman could get the floor under the five-minute rule and move to strike out the last word, and at the expiration of the five minutes he could move to strike out the last two words and retain the floor for five minutes longer, and have just as many five minutes as there are words in the amendment. The gentleman has just consumed five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will make this statement: When a Member gets the floor under a motion to strike out the last word, which is a purely conventional motion, he can not get the floor again for the purpose of making a speech by moving to strike out the last two words.

Mr. HOWARD. And the gentleman from Florida, after having made a motion to strike out the last two words, now moves to strike out the paragraph except the first word, which under that course of procedure would give him another five minutes.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, the supporters——

The CHAIRMAN. Just one moment. The motion is to strike out all of the Kahn amendment except the first word. That is one of these conventional motions, and unless it is a motion that can be really spoken to, the gentleman will find himself in the same situation as if he moved to strike out the last two words. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending amendment and all amendments to the pending paragraph be now closed.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman can not take me off the floor in that manner.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I submit as a point of order that the gentleman can not take my colleague off his feet by making a motion after my colleague has made a motion which was entertained by the Chair and is ready to discuss it.

Mr. LANGLEY. He is not entitled to recognition for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. If the committee will remain in order the disposition of these parliamentary questions will be made much easier. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS] has made one of these formal motions, which is to strike out the last word. Under the rule and the universal practice of the House he gets time under that motion, if no objection is made, and he can talk about anything; but if objection is made, he must confine himself to his amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Would it not be time enough to cross that river when we get to it?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is right at that river now. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS] now makes another one of these conventional motions, and he will have to speak purely to that amendment. He can not get general time by making a conventional motion.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. What does the Kahn amendment, now pending, embrace?

The CHAIRMAN. That can be answered by having the amendment reported from the desk.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. It strikes out the volunteer system in a particular part of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it to the gentleman, if there be no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. It strikes out the volunteer system in a particular part of the bill. If my colleague's motion to strike out all of the Kahn amendment except the first word prevails, then it nullifies the Kahn amendment, so that it is not a conventional motion which he makes at all, but it goes to the very life of the Kahn amendment, and he has a right to discuss it.

The CHAIRMAN. If the amendment is a real amendment, of course——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order the gentleman is not entitled to recognition. First, he moves to strike out the last word of the Kahn amendment. The Kahn amendment consists of two words, the words "volunteers or." Now, the gentleman having finished his five minutes on the original motion, which he made, now proposes to strike out of the Kahn amendment all except the first word, which is identically the same motion that was made before——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Not at all.

Mr. MANN (continuing). Is not entitled to recognition under the rule always followed in practice. A man making a pro forma amendment can not get more than five minutes when anyone else demands the floor.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, my colleague spoke originally to the Kahn amendment. Now he offers an amendment of his own, striking out all of the Kahn amendment except the first word in it. Now, the Chair I do not think ought to assume that this is not a real motion, that it is a conventional motion. It seems to me the Chair ought to assume my colleague is proceeding, and if he does not argue the motion he has made, if he does not discuss it and some gentleman raises the question, that will be time enough to pass upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not going to assume anything to the prejudice of the rights of any member of the committee. There are exactly two words in the Kahn amendment, and the gentleman from Florida has already moved to strike out one of them, which would be the last one, and in making the motion to strike out all of the Kahn amendment except the first word he is simply making a motion already made.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CALDWELL. If the gentleman has made a motion to substitute an amendment by striking out the word "draft" instead of the word "volunteer," he would have another proposition before the House, but as long as he made the motion to strike out the word "volunteer" he is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. That is disposed of.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Just one thing further. The Chair states there are only two words in the Kahn amendment, that my colleague made a motion to strike out the last word, but now he makes a motion to strike out all except the first word, and they are identical, but the Chair did not permit my colleague to discuss the amendment he made to strike out the last word, and he has not discussed it yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman that it is precisely the same thing. The Chair would not want, of course, to interfere with the rights of this House; but a man can not make a motion like that and speak to it without being subject to continual points of order that the gentleman should confine his remarks to his amendment. The gentleman could not discuss what he wants to discuss under that motion. The Chair thinks that he had just as well make that ruling to that effect, without any desire whatever to cut off the gentleman from Florida. We will now proceed with the business of the House. What is the motion of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MANN. I move that all debate upon the paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sixth. To raise, organize, officer, and maintain during the emergency such number of ammunition batteries and battalions, depot batteries and battalions, and such artillery parks, with such numbers and grades of personnel as he may deem necessary. Such organizations shall be officered in the manner provided in the third paragraph of this section, and enlisted men may be assigned to said organizations from any of the forces herein provided for or raised by selective draft as by this act provided.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 6, after the word "by," strike out the word "selective."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, this amendment, which is offered for discussion, might be passed without in any way prejudicing the bill. This is the first place in which the word "selective" appears, although it appears more effectively in subsequent paragraphs. I am offering this amendment with a view of obtaining some information as to the meaning of the word "selective" if members of the committee care to give it. There is an impression throughout the country that the word "selective" means, in some respects, a possible favoritism on the part of the selecting power; that one man having influence might be exempted from the service and that another man lacking in influence might be selected.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, there is a prevailing opinion that the word "selective," as used in this bill, means that an influential man may be able to take his son out of the service, while a man with no influence may be obliged to give his son to the service. I assume we do not want to pass a bill that smacks of favoritism in any sense. True, there are subsequent paragraphs in this bill which provide for certain exemptions. The President is given the power to exempt certain classes. Members of Congress are exempt, customhouse clerks are exempt, pilots and mariners are exempt, persons engaged in industries found to be necessary for the maintenance of the Military Establishment are exempt. These may be proper exemptions, but the word "selective" apparently permits of a further class of exemptions as to which the House ought to be better informed, it seems to me, before this bill is passed. On page 9 the bill says that persons engaged in industries found to be necessary to the maintenance of the Military Establishment may be exempt.

How is that to be determined? It may be that a man working upon the farm in a broad sense is engaged in perpetuating the Military Establishment, and therefore would be exempt according to the opinion of the selecting power. A man working in a shipyard building a ship for naval purposes undoubtedly would be exempt under this provision, but it is not quite clear, except that the President is given power to establish throughout the United States tribunals for the purpose of enforcing and carrying into effect the terms and provisions of this act, just how the selection is to be made.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I have been unable to hear the gentleman. Will he permit an interruption for a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. For the question.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I merely wish to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I am exceedingly interested in the statement and I wish the House to hear him, because I believe it is not the sense of this body that there should be any favoritism shown in the selective draft, and I want every man to hear what you are saying.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am sorry the gentleman is so far away. I am trying to make it clear that I believe it to be the sense of Congress that there should be no favoritism with regard to the men selected for service in the Army and Navy of the United States.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I wish the gentleman would make a short statement to show what you are proposing to do.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am trying to do that, but the House has been in disorder so that I have not been heard on the gentleman's side, as I would like to have been.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word in regard to this amendment relative to selective draft, because I have received a telegram, which I will read in my time of five minutes, from patriotic American citizens who are now residing in Canada. It says:

COBALT, ONTARIO, April 27.

Senator WILLIAM MASON,
Washington, D. C.:

Americans resident in northern Ontario conversant with experiences of Canadian Government with voluntary enlistment strongly in favor of conscription. Advise see resolution mailed to Representative WALTER HENSLEY, of Missouri, signed by American citizens resident here, urging compulsory service.

H. S. ROBINSON.

To that I have answered:

H. S. ROBINSON,
Cobalt, Ontario, Canada:

You say you are American citizens residing in Canada, and in no danger of a draft either there or here. Won't you please come back and take your chance under the law you so highly recommend?

WILLIAM E. MASON.

[Laughter and applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, if there is anybody under God's sun who is willing to sacrifice all of his wife's relatives in enforcing the draft, it is the patriotic American citizen who goes to Canada to escape the draft and then telegraphs you and me how we can secure an army here.

As a matter of fact, I feel that after the Canadian Government has offered fine opportunities to 50,000 American boys to come up and till its farms, where they would have high wages, with steady work and free from draft, I was wondering whether we could not spread a little more democracy up that way. Take away the word "selective" and you take away the sugar coat that has made the American people swallow the bitter pill of servitude to militarism. Take away that word and leave it to the naked truth. "Selective" means that a horde of petty officers may say to your boy "go" and to my boy "stay," and you know it. I do not care whether you strike out the word "selective," but I am in favor of having some plan so that there may be some rule announced by the military department and the General Staff, so that we may know what it means. You apply to-day the rules laid down by the General Staff as they come out. Let us know what those rules are. Do they exempt a man with five children depending on him? Do they exempt any one man that has a large family? It is wholly and entirely left to the War Department.

Mr. Chairman, my time has expired, but I wish to say that I am in favor of volunteering. Lincoln was a volunteer, Washington was a volunteer, Jesus of Nazareth was a volunteer on the cross, and the gentlemen on each side of him were conscripts. [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, when the Secretary of War appeared before the Committee on Military Affairs I asked him for a specific definition, because I told him that many Members of the House were in doubt as to just what the selective draft is. I read from the testimony——

Mr. DILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. DILL. Do I understand the gentleman to say that we have voted for something here in this House and do not know what it means?

Mr. KAHN. The majority of the Members of the House know what it means, and they voted their conviction that the amendment should prevail.

The explanation in as few words as possible is this: The names of all those of military age are to be placed in wheels or boxes. Then at the appointed time the names of those who are to be called to the colors are selected from the names in the box. That is all there is to it. The selection is to be made in that way by the drawing of the names from the box.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I can not yield just now.

Mr. BURNETT. By whom are they to be drawn?

Mr. KAHN. By the local officials in the various States. They will not be drawn by military officers, but by civilian officers. The sheriff, the county clerk, and the medical officers of the county are to comprise the board.

Mr. ANTHONY. The politicians?

Mr. KAHN. Oh, the gentleman himself is a politician, and so am I. Men in public life are all politicians, but they are as honest as the average run of American citizens. [Applause.]

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KAHN. Not just now. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS].

Mr. KEARNS. Where does the gentleman get this information? It is not written in the bill, is it?

Mr. KAHN. Oh, no. The Secretary of War sent me a letter, which I read yesterday, which did not go into details, but I had an interview with him, in which the entire plan was given to me. Regulations to that effect are already drawn, and as soon as this bill is enacted into the law the machinery will be put into operation.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for just one more question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I can not yield. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the paragraph close.

Mr. BURNETT. Oh, no. Let us have a fair show.

Mr. DENT. I hope the gentleman from California will not make that motion until I can be heard.

Mr. KAHN. Then, I will withdraw the motion, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, the proposition raised by the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is the very point that I have been trying to get this House to understand ever since this bill was reported. There is no question in the world but that under the plan which the majority of this House seems to be willing to adopt there must be a power somewhere, an arbitrary power, more or less, to say whether a man whose name is drawn out of the box shall or shall not be exempted from military service, and favoritism is bound under any such system to creep in. [Applause.] It can not be absolutely prevented. We went as far as we could in attempting to protect it by providing that the tribunals which are to pass upon the names drawn out of the box should be constituted of a majority of civilians.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I wanted to ask the gentleman how favoritism could creep in when the names are drawn by chance out of the box?

Mr. DENT. Because section 3 of the act provides that persons engaged in industries found to be necessary to the maintenance of the Military Establishment or the effective operation of the military forces during an emergency may be exempted. That is just as indefinite as can well be.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The gentleman recognizes that there must be exemptions. Can he not trust his own administration? [Applause.]

Mr. DENT. Why, of course I can trust my own administration, and I am glad that if this law is going into effect it is going to be carried into effect by a Democratic administration. [Applause.]

Mr. SLAYDEN, Mr. KAHN, Mr. BORLAND, and Mr. SHALLENBERGER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. DENT. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER].

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. It was stated by the Secretary of War, and it is in the record, that it is the opinion of his experts that 42 per cent of the men liable to the draft will have to be exempted. Then, if that board is made up of three county officials they will determine who are to stay and who shall go to war. They admit that 42 per cent, almost one-half, of the men drawn out by lot are going to be exempted for one cause or another.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. DENT. I will yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL], a member of the committee.

Mr. MANN rose.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I have the floor, I believe.

Mr. DENT. I yielded to the gentleman only for a question.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Is this the amendment that the gentleman from Nebraska referred to in the bill which he voted to favorably report?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. Does it not apply to the volunteer forces, too? Have you not given them the same discretion as to the volunteers?

Mr. MANN. Is not this in the bill, I say, that the gentleman voted to report?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes; it is in the bill; but I wanted the gentlemen to understand that when you vote to inaugurate this selective draft you are placing this power in the hands of that board.

Mr. KAHN. You voted for it in the committee, and voted to report it to the House.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. DENT. I yield.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Provision is made on page 9 for "tribunals for the purpose of enforcing and carrying into effect the terms and provisions of this act." Is there any information that can be given to the Members of the House as to how they are to be constituted, whether they are to be civil or military tribunals and whether it is possible that there may be such favoritism as has been indicated might prevail?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask for one minute in which to answer the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENT. The bill constituting these tribunals provides that the majority members of the tribunals shall be citizens of the United States, not connected with the Military Establishment, so that of the three members of the board two would be civilians.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It has been stated that some of them will be sheriffs. Is that the understanding of the gentleman?

Mr. DENT. It was stated before the committee by the Secretary that he proposed to use the civil authorities of the States as well as the officers of the United States Government in order to carry out this measure. Just how he proposes to use them, I do not know.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Let me ask this question: Suppose the sheriff is an intense Republican and he has to make the selections, or is an intense Democrat, and he has to make the selections. Would it not be possible for such officers to exercise favoritism?

Mr. DENT. Unquestionably.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has again expired. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph be now closed.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield to me one minute?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California moves that all debate on this paragraph be now closed. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is called for. Those in favor of the motion will rise and stand until they are counted.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the Members understand the question we are voting on.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is to close debate. Those in favor of that proposition are now being counted. [After counting.] Eighty-nine gentlemen have risen in the affirmative. Those opposed to the motion will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] One hundred and thirty-seven have arisen in the negative. On this vote the "ayes" are 89 and the "noes" are 137. The "noes" prevail, and the motion to close debate is lost.

Mr. MONDELL rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is recognized.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, when this bill shall have become a law and there shall have been fastened on the Republic the conscript system adopted from the monarchies of the Old World, those who benefit by that military conscript system should contribute to raise a monument higher than that which towers to the glory of the Father of his Country and more imposing than that which stands in immaculate whiteness to bear testimony to the virtues of the savior of his country to the memory of the man who invented the phrase "selective conscription," for that has been the magic term which has made conscription—a word as hateful as the English language contains, detested through all the history of all free people—palatable to those who imagine that by the working of this magic selection they and those they love may be excused and the burden may fall upon those without political, social, or capitalistic influence. [Applause.] Gentlemen say they want to bring into the armies of a free people the cowards, the slackers. Aye, if any gentleman takes any pride in his desire to make the armies of the Republic out of that kind of material, he is entitled to all the satisfaction he gets out of it. [Applause.]

I want the armies that are to fight the battles of a free people to be composed of those who freely volunteer for that patriotic, glorious service. [Applause.] Yet when under this bill there are drawn on the village green the 100, 200, or 500 men who are brought under it by the terms of your conscription, whom do you think will be drawn—the slacker who can file affidavits higher than a mountain, the coward who can outrage high heaven with his oaths that he is weak and incapacitated and necessary to the industries of the country, or will it be the man with the blood of the volunteer in his veins who comes forward and says, "As for me, I am well, I am sound, I am willing, and my country needs me more than the munition factory does." [Applause.] There are many who under your selective conscription are laying the soothing unction to their souls that the slacker who is the son of the man of wealth and influence is going to be left at home, and that the son of the farmer and the villager and miner without influence will go, whether he is willing or no. And they will not be entirely disappointed. That will, in fact, be the inevitable result in all too many cases under your proposition of conscription, for if the minds of those who have the selection to make were purged of every selfish instinct, if there were no disposition to be unfair or temptation to be corrupt, still it would inevitably come out that the men who would be drawn would largely be the men willing to go, and the men who would stay would be the coward and the slacker. This word "selective" was invented, as the gentleman from Illinois has well said, for the purpose of sugar-coating the hatefulness of as mean a word as the English language contains. I hope that when the selection comes, some of those who wanted it will be among those who are drawn, but I doubt if they will be. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having assumed the chair, a message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On April 24, 1917:

H. R. 2762. An act to authorize an issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend credit to foreign governments, and for other purposes.

On April 25, 1917:

H. R. 1771. An act to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes," relative to the Fleet Naval Reserve;

H. R. 2008. An act to provide for the extension of minority enlistments in the naval service;

H. R. 2338. An act to authorize the detail of additional officers to the Hydrographic Office;

H. R. 2339. An act to increase the number of midshipmen at the Naval Academy until September 1, 1918; and

H. R. 2340. An act to increase the age limit for persons appointed as officers in the Naval Reserve.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 1800. An act to amend an act approved June 29, 1906, and entitled "An act to authorize the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of the District of Columbia to sell, hold, and convey certain real estate."

INCREASE OF THE MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, of course in my opinion this is the most difficult proposition to deal with in the operation of this law. The manner of the selection of the men conscripted is a difficult problem to carry out. The members of the committee endeavored to learn from the War Department as much as we could of the proposed plan. The gentleman from Illinois raises the question whether or not selective volunteering was not in substance the same thing as the selective draft. I think the gentleman must concede that it is an entirely different thing, because the volunteer presents himself voluntarily, but the conscript is brought forth by the force of the law, and whether he be compelled to go or not is an entirely different thing.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I yield.

Mr. DEWALT. Let me answer that the only provision in the bill in reference to the selective mode is that which is contained on page 9, stating that the board shall be constituted and established by the President, and that a majority of the members of each board shall be citizens of the United States not connected with the Military Establishment.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes; and that amendment to the bill was put in on my motion. I asked the Secretary of War how these boards were to be constituted. I learned that there are 900 or more of these boards operating in England, and in my opinion, from the best information I could get, there will have to be several thousand boards operating in the United States. The Secretary of War could not assure me that these boards were to be civilian boards, and so I offered the provision that at least a majority of them should be civilians. I have since learned that in England every member of the local board is a civilian. In that country, a kingdom, fighting for its life, the people are so insistent upon subordinating the military to the civil department of the Government that they have provided that every man who decides upon the right of a man to go to war or to stay at home shall be a civilian.

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KEARNS. I understood the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] to say a few moments ago that the War Department had assured him that the sheriff and clerk of the county——

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. And the medical officer.

Mr. KEARNS. And the medical officer will make the selection. Does the gentleman from Nebraska understand this plan is going to exempt the sons of the sheriff, clerk, and medical officer of each county? Is that true?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I can give the gentleman no information as to that, but I was told that in England they found a great deal of difficulty in administering this law to the satisfaction of the public so long as they had political officers administering the law.

Now, a great many people suppose that we are going to have some sort of a military census to find out who is going to serve and who is not. The best information I can get from the minority of the committee is that the War Department contemplates requiring every man to enroll himself in 24 hours; that a lack of knowledge of the law will be no excuse; that he is to present himself for enrollment; and if he does not present himself he will be subject to imprisonment of from six months to a year, and the case will be tried before a Federal judge. In the district which I represent they will have to take a man 250 miles in some cases to get before a Federal judge to find out whether or not a man is violating the law. The committee inserted in the bill the word "willfully."; that is, a man must willfully refuse to present himself.

But we will say that they have all enrolled themselves. Now, suppose we have, say, 2,000 men in a county who are subject to this law. As nearly as I can understand those names are to be put into a jury wheel, out of whom 200 men are required, under the allotment, to serve the Nation from that county. Every tenth name that is drawn, of these men from 19 to 25, will be selected. In other words, he stated to us that under his plan they would draw out all the names of the men from 19 to 25 before the selection would be made. Now, when the first 200 men are drawn out and ready, then it shall be decided by the tribunal and the medical officer whether each man drawn is physically fit to go or not, and it shall be decided by this tribunal or board whether any of these 200 men shall be exempted for any reason under law or regulation. Whether they are essential to the industries, whether they are essential to agriculture, the final determination in individual cases does not rest with the President or Secretary of War but with the board, who shall enforce regulations and the law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will not the tribunal determine the question under uniform regulations prescribed by the President, so that there must be uniformity of determination whether particular industries are exempt? It is not to be left to the local board to determine whether an industry is of sufficient importance to exempt these men by determination in advance.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That was not the explanation made to the committee. As a practical example, we were told that a man might be drawn who is essential to an industry; that one particular man might be necessary to the maintenance of the whole factory, and that he might be exempted, while many men below the age of 25 would not be essential and would be required to go. So, after all, the decision must be made as to whether or not the man is essential to the industry. It was suggested that it would be possible to exempt the entire agricultural interests, but the Secretary stated he did not think that advisable at present. I do not believe it is the intention under the operation of this law to except all the employees of any industry. So the question of exemption is going to come up to the tribunals to decide upon.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the gentleman think that should be done?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. No; I do not think so.

Mr. LENROOT. Why does the gentleman favor this provision in the bill?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I did not favor the provision. I do not say that the bill represents my views. I supported it as the best judgment of a majority of the Military Committee of the House. I am willing to accept the decision of the House. I am a Democrat.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will.

Mr. REAVIS. Would the liability or likelihood of favoritism be minimized if the board were composed of men strangers in the community where the exemption is to be given?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I think it would be.

Mr. REAVIS. Then why should not that be put in the bill by way of an amendment?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That is a matter for the House to act upon.

Mr. DENTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. DENTON. If the matter of selection is left to the local officers in the community, will not that afford an opportunity to build up a political machine?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I am told that political influence operates in other countries.

Mr. McCORMICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. McCORMICK. How would the gentleman have the selective board constituted if not by local officers elected by the suffrages of the people in the several communities?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I would not have a board at all to select the men; I would have volunteers.

Mr. McCORMICK. Has the gentleman a suggestion which would be more equitable in operation than the one selected or suggested by the Secretary of War?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. We are attempting to apply the principle of universal liability to service. If we had a universal system of service like that in every country of continental Europe, the men last under in arms, those most recently trained, would be the ones that would be called; but in this case we have ten times as many men liable as we need, and none of them trained, and therefore some system of selection must be had. Exemption is a great power to put in the hands of 3,000 boards, constituted as they may be throughout the country. I believe that men ought to have an opportunity to volunteer until the plan is put in operation, with a system of universal training until we could get men fit for service. We are trying to apply an untried system, in my judgment.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CRAMTON. I understood the gentleman from California to state that the regulations which are to govern these selections have already been drawn by the department. Does the gentleman from Nebraska know anything about them?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. He has been informed of something that the majority of the committee has not.

Mr. CRAMPTON. That was the statement of the gentleman from California. If so, he has been given information not available to others of the committee or of the House.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The majority of the committee has not been furnished these plans.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GORDON. Is it the gentleman's understanding that men that go into the box or are drawn out of the box are subject to the arbitrary will of these boards?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I think after they are drawn the question whether they shall be exempt or not is still to be passed upon by the board.

Mr. GORDON. The gentleman from California said that this committee would decide who would be drawn out of the box.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Oh, no.

Mr. GORDON. I so understood him.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McKENZIE. I wish to suggest to my colleague on the committee that while discussing the feature of the board in the bill that he ought to say in fairness, for the information of the House, that section 5 of the bill provides penalties for any man who would violate any confidence or trust placed upon him.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That is very true; penalties are provided for the things we are talking about.

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will.

Mr. POWERS. I would like to inquire whether the decision of the board is final?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I am glad the gentleman asked that question. We have the experience of England to guide us. In England they have two boards of appeal. The first decision of exemption is made by the local tribunal. Then if the man thinks he has not been treated fairly he has an appeal to the second tribunal, and if he thinks that is unfair he appeals to a third. When the bill was brought before us no appeal was provided, and in the judgment of the committee we thought that was unwise, and so the amendment offered by Judge HARRISON was placed in the bill providing that an appeal from the board to the local court with proper jurisdiction was to be allowed.

Mr. LUNN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. LUNN. Will my colleague answer this question: Whether the same difficulties would not follow the decision under the volunteer system?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Not at all; because the man under that system is not compelled to serve. Suppose he wants to go; if you put him out you are not imposing the same penalty upon him as if you take him in in violation of his will and compel him to fight. It is an entirely different principle.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I understood the gentleman to say that as proposed by the Secretary of War the composition of the committee to make the selection does not meet with his entire approval?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. No; I did not say that. I am not passing any judgment at all, but I am trying to give the House information.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. May I inquire if the committee considered the advisability of having this board consist entirely of Army officers?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The Secretary of War stated that he did not think, according to my recollection, that it ought to be composed entirely of Army officers.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. May I ask what is the gentleman's individual opinion upon that?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I do not think Army officers ought to have the final right to pass upon exemptions.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Could we not rely upon Army officers to be more free from prejudice and favoritism than any other class?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I do not think so; not upon a question of this sort. I think this plan will be accepted much more willingly by the country if the tribunal is a civil body.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended for one minute in order that I may ask him a question.

Mr. COX. Make it five minutes, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is requested that the time of the gentleman from Nebraska be extended for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. COX. The gentleman put a mathematical problem a moment ago, but my mind has never been clear upon the proposition. Let me put a hypothetical case to the gentleman. Suppose, as an illustration, there are 2,000 men in my county between the ages of 21 and 40 years, and suppose that the quota to be drawn from my county is 200 men. The 2,000 names are put into the box, and only 200 are finally drawn out?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. They are all drawn out, but the first 200 are taken.

Mr. COX. The question is this: Will the entire 2,000 names be first drawn out of the box, and then the local committee or board select from those 2,000 names the 200?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Not at all. As I understand the Secretary, he would put the entire 2,000 names into the box and he would draw them all out, and the first 200 that were drawn out would be the first taken.

Mr. COX. He would take out the whole 2,000.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The first 200 that came out would come first and the next 200 would be marked No. 2. Now, we have 200 men who, under the bill, are required to go, but of those 200 men some will be found to be deficient in some way, or they should be exempted, and those are told to stand aside, and then the next 200 are taken up, and from them are taken enough to make up the first 200.

Mr. COX. Then they keep on until they get the 200?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. HULBERT. The gentleman has stated there is a right of appeal?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. HULBERT. That appeal, of course, being accorded to the person selected?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. HULBERT. Is there any method of review provided by which the action of the board in excusing any person may be reviewed?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The penalty provided in the bill is all I can say about that.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. The paramount reason for the use of the word "selective" in this bill, as I have understood the purpose of it, is to maintain the proper economic condition at home, with the men behind the lines, we will say—the maximum amount of efficiency for the support of the Army at the front.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. In response to the question of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] the gentleman stated that if 200 names were drawn out of the box of the 2,000, and those men were found fit for service, it would necessarily follow that those 200 men would go on the firing line?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Not necessarily.

Mr. HOWARD. Then I misunderstood the gentleman. As a matter of fact, the board can take into consideration the rules and regulations prescribed by the President?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Exactly.

Mr. HOWARD. For the maintenance of the highest industrial and agricultural efficiency?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes. The gentleman has stated it exactly. Of those 200 men the board will, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, find 42 per cent necessary to be rejected for physical or other reasons.

Mr. HOWARD. If that is true, why should not this word "selective" be incorporated in this bill?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. It will be incorporated in the bill.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I would like to ask the gentleman, in view of the fact that even the majority report of the committee agrees to an alternative selective draft, why, if the gentleman can tell, the committee did not place in the bill some tribunal by which these men are to be selected, and what discretion they may have in the selection or rejection of them?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. We have, as far as possible, and there is no way under this proposition that we have before us to avoid this selective principle. I have been advocating volunteering as a first line for the Army, because I think it is going to be a difficult thing to administer the selective draft. If all would be called and taken, that would be universal service, and for that I am standing before this House.

Mr. KINCHELOE. You have no tribunal in this bill?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. No; the tribunal is to be appointed by the President.

Mr. RANDALL. I understand that the gentleman estimates that 3,000 of these tribunals will be necessary in this country, and that one Army officer is to be assigned to each of these tribunals. I would like to ask the gentleman whether we can spare 3,000 Army officers from the fighting line?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I think it is better than making the whole entire board out of Army officers.

Mr. MASON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will.

Mr. MASON. We are getting letters almost every hour asking this question, and I think we ought to have plenty of time to understand it, although I have no desire to delay the committee. In the first place I have heard it stated by one Member, who gives a statement as to what his understanding is, as to the rules to be adopted by the War Department. Now, is there anything in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD or anywhere else so that a plain Member of Congress can know what these rules are before we vote upon this bill?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Not that I know of.

Mr. MASON. Does not the gentleman think it would be fair that we should know, so we can answer our constituents who are writing and telegraphing us before we are asked to vote on a bill for selective draft, so that we be informed at least as to the plan of the War Department. what that plan is to be, who are to be exempted, and what the rules are?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I can only suggest that the gentleman refer his inquirers to the War Department; that is all.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would like to know whether or not all the names that are set forward by the enumeration which is taken are put in the box to be drawn from before their fitness has been passed upon?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That is my understanding.

Mr. HOUSTON. One other question. What is the use, and would it not be a much better plan to put the names in the box after they have been tested for fitness, and then they could draw from among only those that have been passed upon?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. If I have time, I will explain to the gentleman; for instance, say I have 2,000 men in my home county liable to service under this bill. It will take a long time to examine every one of those men. On the contrary, if only 200 are drawn, having done that they only examine the 200; if they pass, the others do not have to be examined.

Mr. MONDELL. What do they do in the case that they find some of those are not fit?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. They can take the next 200.

Mr. HOUSTON. That will be determined by the names that are first drawn?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, boiling this controversy down, the whole objection that is being urged by some gentlemen here is that somebody who ought to serve may possibly escape. Yet the objection seems to be made by the very gentlemen who desire that everybody who does not want to serve could escape at the very beginning. Now, how on earth are these gentlemen going to object that a few men will lie themselves out of the service when the same gentlemen were urging the plan of voluntary enlistment by which only the brave and willing were to go in the first place? [Applause.] It is true that some men might perjure themselves out of the service.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I will.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does not this thing open up the broadest possible opportunity for both corruption and lying?

Mr. BORLAND. I do not doubt there will be plenty of corruption and lying.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And buying out?

Mr. BORLAND. I do not doubt there will be, but I think it is the duty of this Congress to minimize that opportunity as much as it can and to do it by uniform regulations established by the War Department. If such regulations are not effective, they can be strengthened afterwards by the judgment of this House. I do not want to see any of these men escape, and I am confident that the War Department, under the President, is not going to form regulations that will permit favoritism in localities and among individuals. The President is going to establish uniform regulations if possible, and see that men are tested according to a uniform rule, and if the uniform rule is evaded by perjury, we must see to it that it shall stop when we find it out. It is a solution of that question.

Mr. KREIDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. KREIDER. I do not think it is necessary for anyone to perjure himself in order to get out of this service, but it seems to me the subject is such a broad one it is almost impossible to enforce this law without favoritism. Now, for instance, we said we were going to exempt farmers. If we are going to exempt all farmers, well and good; but we have to have some farmers, and who is going to say which one shall come and which one shall not come?

Mr. BORLAND. I am sorry I can not yield for the extension of the gentleman's remarks, but I will yield for a brief question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman states, although we have no War Department authority for it, that the department intends to establish a uniform system?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the gentleman willing to insert the word "uniform" in lieu of the word "selective"?

He will discover further that the President has authority. It says:

> And the President is hereby authorized to exclude or discharge from said selective draft and from the draft under the second paragraph of section 1 hereof, or to draft for partial military service only, persons of the following classes.

I can not put any construction upon that language except the President in exercising that must do it by virtue of certain regulations which he lays down.

If the committee would consent to the word "uniform," I would be satisfied.

Mr. BORLAND. If the gentlemen have now come around to the view that we must not allow any qualified person to escape, I want to say that I am heartily with them. And if they are arguing anything by this proposition, they are arguing that very thing.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That was the argument I made; to make the draft uniform.

Mr. BORLAND. Just a moment. I do not see that the giving of the President power, as we have frequently done, for the regulation and the enforcement of an act means anything on earth but that he proceed by Executive order, which must be uniform in its general character. The word "uniform" would add nothing whatever to it. But, gentlemen, we have this to consider: This House has to-day by a most unmistakable declaration told the world that we are going to raise an army by a real system, by scientific methods, and will not allow any qualified man to escape, and we propose to have our resources fully marshaled to carry on this war to an early and successful termination. That declaration that has gone out over the wires to-day is worth more than a thousand, aye, more than 100,000 volunteers, in that the world will know that we have determined to go into this with all the resources that we pledged to the President at that time.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, all of this debate is as to another section of the bill, and I move that the debate on the pending amendment be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion relates to the pending amendment.

Mr. DENT. We can discuss this when we reach the proper place. I am perfectly willing the gentleman should debate it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman's motion directed to the pending amendment?

Mr. DENT. The pending amendments and all amendments to this paragraph.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman from Alabama withhold his motion until the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] can be heard on this particular paragraph?

Mr. DENT. I have no objection to that if nobody else makes a request.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It can be closed in five minutes.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, then I move that debate be closed in five minutes on the pending amendments and all amendments to this paragraph.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman include in that request the gentleman who is to have the five minutes? Does the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] want to have enough time to offer an amendment?

Mr. STEVENSON. I have an amendment on the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. Not to discuss, but to have it offered?

Mr. STEVENSON. I desire to have five minutes. I have had but five minutes in this whole cataclysm of oratory.

Mr. DENT. I make the motion in this form, that at the expiration of five minutes all debate on the pending amendment be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves that at the expiration of five minutes debate on the pending amendment be closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] is recognized.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the pending motion is to strike out the word "selective," in the sixth line on the sixth page of the printed bill.

Now, this section of the bill has passed the committee and the House has a right to assume it has the indorsement of the committee. To strike out the word "selective" here accomplishes nothing, for the word "selective" is used here not as one conferring power in and of itself, but stands merely as one in harmony with what follows in the bill. It says "by selective draft as by this act provided." The operative words are "as by this act provided." Therefore, you must turn to the succeeding paragraphs, which we have not yet reached, in order to understand what "selective" means. The succeeding paragraphs define wherein the draft is "selective," and that must be the determination of this question.

I care not what conversations members of the committee may have had with the Secretary of War, with British officers, or anybody else. What this House is concerned with is the enactment of this language, the language of the proposed law; and hereafter the only thing that will be used in its construction will be the language of the law as printed and published by this House with the concurrence of the Senate. When you read the succeeding paragraph, you can understand what the word "selective" means. There are certain classes that are excluded. You are to say hereafter whether the report of the committee as to who shall constitute those classes will remain unchanged in the bill or not. That is a subsequent consideration.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. No. Furthermore, the President is authorized in this bill to designate on the score of utility, on the basis of efficiency, certain other classes which are to be excluded from the effect of the draft. They are to be excluded because in marshaling the assets of the Nation they can serve their country better in other places. Surely this House can repose in the Executive the discharge of an executive function. He will by proclamation, doubtless, designate some general rules by which the local draft tribunals must be governed. As to the detail of how this draft is to be worked out, you by this act put the responsibility upon the President of the United States. He must make the appointments of the subordinate draft tribunals, just as he does in discharging every other executive function with which he is clothed by law. This House can never undertake to legislate upon the details of the operation of the draft under the provisions of this bill. We only legislate; we do not execute the law; and it is better to leave the bill as reported by the committee in this respect than attempt to change a single line.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 6, noes 96.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment that I desire to have read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STEVENSON: In line 7, on page 6, after the word "Provided," insert the following: "That in registering those who are liable for Army service, those who are not engaged in any useful occupation at least four days in each week shall be kept in one class to themselves and drawings shall first be made from said class, and not more than 20 per cent of the laborers of war age shall be drawn from any one farm or from any one textile factory."

Mr. STEVENSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, we have had a propaganda to the effect that this was a measure to put the pool-room loafer and the man who was doing nothing into the Army first.

That proposition is embodied in this amendment, which is purely a constitutional classification, recognized by our Supreme Court. Classify them into those who are at work and those who are not at work, and then first draw from the pool-room loafers that we have heard so much about and put them into the Army first. That is the doctrine that has been sent all over the country, and the doctrine that has bombarded us with telegrams. There may not be many of them. The farm labor of this country will be wonderfully accelerated if you adopt this amendment and let the notice go out. [Applause.] The farmers of Kansas will have all the labor they want about July to gather their crops, and there will be a tremendous abrasion on the palms of the hands of a great many of our citizens instead of on the seat of their pants, where it has generally been. [Laughter.]

Now, the other proposition has been spread all over my district, that the Army bill of the War Department intends to keep the farmer boy out of the Army and put the other people in. I want to say that if that is what you mean to do, I provide here that you can not take more than 20 per cent from any one farm of the laborers of war age. That is just about the per cent that the farmer ought to bear, because there are 20,000,000 of men liable within the ages fixed in this bill, and the farmer represents about 4,000,000 of them, and you will get about the right percentage if you put that in; and then the fellow down in South Carolina——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. STEVENSON. No; I do not yield at the present time. When I get through I will be delighted to yield to the gentleman.

There is another proposition about that. The demoralization that is going to ensue in the farm labor of this country because of the uncertainty as to how many laborers are to be taken off the farms is going to be such as to seriously embarrass the production of our crops next year and the garnering of them this fall. Now, you fix it so that every farmer who has labor on his farm liable to go to the Army, and fix just how many are to be taken, and provide that no more than that can be taken, and you put it on a business basis.

Mr. Chairman, the other proposition is one that deals with the textile plants. You passed a bill, the Keating bill, in the last Congress, which is going to take from 10 to 15 per cent of the labor out of the textile plants of my district after the 1st of July. Then you write the proposition so that a large number will be taken out of these plants by this conscription system, and the operators of those plants will then have no basis on which to calculate the manufacture of those supplies which are absolutely necessary for the existence and maintenance of our Army. I say put that on a business basis and allow that they may calculate that not over 20 per cent of their labor shall be taken by conscription, and then they will know how to supplement and provide against the day of evil.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. Is it not true that a great deal of that child labor that has been taken out of the textile mills by the Keating bill has been returned to the farms and is now available there?

Mr. STEVENSON. That may be true in the gentleman's country, where I do not think they have got any textile mills, but in our country those people belong to families in the mill villages and work in the mills and have no chance to go to the farm, because they have not been brought up to farm labor and are unable to do farm work, and they are turned into the streets of the mill villages to run wild and become the poolroom loafers that we have heard so much about from the distinguished gentlemen who are so anxious to put those fellows into the fighting line.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. RANDALL. I understand from the gentleman's amendment that he would like to encourage the drafting of the pool-room loafer?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the gentleman know that this bill specifically excludes the pool-room loafer from the operation of the law on page 9, line 9, where "those found to be physically and morally deficient" are exempted? [Laughter.]

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes. My amendment will either put him to work or put him in the ranks. He might get killed on the firing line, but he will get killed a good deal quicker when he goes to work, because he will not survive it long, and it does not make much difference to him whether you put him to war or put him to work. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. MEEKER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MEEKER] is recognized.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a word in reply to what was said here just a little while ago—something that was taken with a great deal of laughter.

The name of Jesus of Nazareth was brought into this discussion by a gentleman of iron blood from Illinois. Jesus of Nazareth, in the Garden of Gethsemane, pleaded with all the power that He had not to be compelled to take the cup, but He submitted to a superior will.

He once discussed volunteers who talked volunteering but did not go. He said, "A father had two sons, and he told one of them to do something, and he said 'I go,' but he did not." I am not getting personal at all. "He had another son that he ordered to go, and the boy at first refused to go, but later went," and He put his commendation on the second son.

In the next place, when He was talking to his disciples, He said, "Many are called, but few are chosen." And in the last, when He selected 12 men to send to death, He said, "You did not choose me; I chose you." That is all. [Applause and cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to close debate on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to close debate on the amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk began the reading of section 2.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment in line 7, page 6. If I understand, the Clerk has read to the end of section 1.

The CHAIRMAN. He has begun the reading of section 2.

Mr. AUSTIN. I was on my feet, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Was the gentleman seeking recognition before the Chair directed the Clerk to read?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes. I was in the back part of the Hall.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. AUSTIN: Page 6, at the end of line 7, insert the following: "That before sending any of the armies of the United States to Europe opportunity shall be given to the enlisted men to volunteer for this service, and those consenting shall be formed into separate units and used, as far as practicable."

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not think there will be any opposition or objection to this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire recognition?

Mr. AUSTIN. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the enlisted men required to raise and maintain the organizations of the Regular Army and additional forces hereby authorized and to complete and maintain the organizations embodying the members of the National Guard drafted into the service of the United States at the maximum legal strength as by this act provided shall be raised by voluntary enlistment, or if and whenever the President decides that they can not effectually be so raised or maintained, then by selective draft; but this provision shall not prevent the transfer to any force of training cadres from other forces. Such draft as herein provided shall be based upon liability to military service of all male citizens, or male persons who have declared their intention to become citizens, except alien enemies, between the ages of 21 and 40 years, both inclusive, and shall take place and be maintained under such regulations as the President may prescribe not inconsistent with the terms of this act. Quotas for the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, or subdivisions thereof, shall be determined in proportion to the population thereof, and credit shall be given to any State, Territory, District, or subdivision thereof, for the number of men who were in the military service of the United States as members of the National Guard on April 2, 1917, or who have since said date entered such service from any such State, Territory, District, or subdivision, as members of any Federal force hereby authorized. All persons drafted into the service of the United States and all officers accepting commissions in the forces herein provided for shall, from the date of said draft or acceptance, be subject to the laws and regulations governing the Regular Army, except as to promotions, so far as such laws and regulations are applicable to persons whose permanent retention in the military service on the active or retired list is not contemplated by existing law, and those drafted shall be required to serve for the period of the existing emergency unless sooner discharged: Provided, That the President is authorized to raise and maintain by voluntary enlistment or draft, as herein provided, special and technical troops as he may deem necessary and to embody them into organizations and to officer them as provided in the third paragraph of section 1 and section 8 of this act.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment

Mr. KAHN. I think there is a committee amendment to this section which should come first. If not, I will offer it.

Mr. STAFFORD. The committee amendment should be reported first.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no question about that. The Chair will carry out the rule. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of section 2 the following:

"Organizations of the forces herein provided for, except the Regular Army, shall, as far as the interests of the service permit, be composed of men who come, and of officers who are appointed from, the same State or locality."

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I want at this moment and while we are considering this amendment to correct the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MEEKER] upon the question of his Bible reading as it bears upon this amendment. Christ was a volunteer, and he said, "No man taketh my life. I lay it down." He mentioned a man with two sons, insisting that he was not personal. I do not know what he meant, but let me say that I have two sons, and it is fair to place this operation in my family. One of them whom you do not propose to draft is 26 years old, and upon him the family had expended $5,000 in giving him a military training at Culver, Ind.; and the pen of your President was not dry in approval of your war measure before he had enlisted to go anywhere this side of hell that the people want him to go. [Applause.] The other boy has a family on his hands, and by your bill you say that the boy who wants to go ought not to be permitted to go, and that the boy who has the responsibility of a wife and babies on his hands must go.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. MASON. Show me a place in the bill where he can be exempted, unless he stands in with the party that appoints the judges that pass on him. Show me the place.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. On page 9.

Mr. MASON. All right. I have read that twenty times.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. And the twenty-first time may make the gentleman's reading of some avail.

Mr. KAHN. Line 7, page 9—

Those in a status with respect to persons dependent upon them for support which renders their exclusion or discharge advisable.

Mr. MASON. I have read line 7, page 9, over and over again, but it is a question with the men who have the power to find the facts. The law is all right, the bill is well drawn for the purpose for which it is intended; there is no doubt about that, but you are asking us to vote for a law and you will not even tell us what are to be the regulations under that law—regulations that are held in some star chamber or in the minds of some favored members of the committee. You ask us to vote for a law when we do not know what the effect of the law or of the regulations of the General Staff will be which may be applied to it and put upon the people of this country.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. MASON. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. In the estimates made by the War Department they ask for $145,000,000 to pay for the dependent relatives of men who have to go to war. So they must have thought that they would have to take them or they would not have asked for the appropriation.

Mr. MASON. Surely. That is the way they are going to exempt them.

Mr. DENT. I understood the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] to say that there was a committee amendment to this section. I do not understand what that means.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair knows nothing more than what the gentleman from California said, that he would offer a committee amendment.

Mr. DENT. Here is the status: I introduced a bill which is substantially like this bill. The committee amended the bill that I introduced, and those amendments are shown in italics; but the language that is in italics is a part of the bill that the committee instructed me to report. So that is not a committee amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. It is a committee amendment. It is different from the bill introduced.

Mr. DENT. I was instructed to bring it in when I reported the bill.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, in reading the bill I noticed that the language was in italics. Therefore I assumed that it was an amendment offered by the committee. If it was a part of the original section, of course there need be no vote taken on it.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman from California yield? I think the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] is laboring under a misapprehension. We are trying to pass the bill introduced by the gentleman from Alabama, as amended by the committee. The committee ordered reported here the bill introduced by the gentleman from Alabama, with certain amendments. Now, those amendments were printed in italics, and in each case heretofore we have taken a vote upon each one of these amendments added by the Committee on Military Affairs to the bill introduced by the gentleman from Alabama.

The CHAIRMAN. Just a moment. The situation is very simple and very easy. If the committee added these amendments in the committee and then reported the bill as a whole, it is a committee bill. If they reported the bill with these amendments reported as such, why, then, they are committee amendments, and have to be acted upon. It is a question of fact. There is no difficulty about it at all. Now, what took place in the committee?

Mr. DENT. There is no question but what the language printed here in italics was an amendment to the bill that I originally introduced.

The CHAIRMAN. Was it reported as an amendment or a part of the bill?

Mr. DENT. It was reported as a part of the bill.

Mr. KAHN. In the report of the chairman of the committee on the bill, among the amendments reported it says:

At the end of section 2, page 7, add the following paragraph—

And then comes the language here printed in italics, so that it is shown in the report of the chairman of the committee as a committee amendment.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I raised the question simply to know what would be the order of procedure. Of course it does not make any difference. If it is to be treated as a committee amendment, I want to know it, so that I can offer it when we reach it.

The CHAIRMAN. If the parts printed in the bill in italics are reported as committee amendments, they will have to be acted upon by the Committee of the Whole. There is no difficulty about it.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Let me say for the information of the committee that I hold in my hand a copy of the bill as originally introduced, and the language as proposed is not in it.

Mr. DENT. I stated that. I understand that the language printed in the bill in italics are pending on the Clerk's desk and will be voted on as committee amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; according to statements that gentlemen have made. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, lines 9 and 10, after the word "army" in line 9, strike out the words "and additional forces hereby authorized."

Mr. KAHN. That simply perfects the bill to comply with the amendment adopted to paragraph 3, section 1.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would like to ask the gentleman if the words "additional forces" do not refer to the additional army of 500,000 raised by draft, and therefore ought to be left in the bill?

Mr. KAHN. No; that language does not provide for those forces because those forces are specifically provided for in another paragraph.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. The language in line 7, page 4, does refer to the 500,000 men as additional force, and therefore ought not this language to remain in the section?

Mr. GARDNER. If the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. KAHN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARDNER. On page 6, line 14, you will find the gist of the whole matter—that the enlisted men required to raise and maintain the organization of the Regular Army and additional forces, and so forth, shall be raised by voluntary enlistment, and so forth. These words must be cut out because the first part of section 2 refers solely to the organizations for which we are to permit voluntary enlistments.

Mr. BATHRICK. As I understood the amendment, if it prevails you will have two words "and" left together.

Mr. KAHN. No; the amendment is to strike out the words "and additional forces hereby authorized."

Mr. BATHRICK. That was not the way I understood it to be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 6, line 16, after the word "draft" insert "and all other forces hereby authorized shall be raised and maintained by selective draft exclusively."

Mr. KAHN. That is another amendment to perfect the bill so as to comply with the amendment adopted to paragraph 3, section 1.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will that change the existing law as to filling up the Regular Army and the National Guard?

Mr. KAHN. Not at all.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, can we have the amendment reported again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment again.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, replying to the gentleman from New York, he will find that, in lines 8 to 16, we have provided for raising and maintaining the organizations of the Regular Army and the National Guard, and then it says that all other forces shall be drafted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman if this language was in the bill as originally drawn?

Mr. KAHN. It was.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, after line 2, insert as a new paragraph——

Mr. MONDELL (interrupting). Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MONDELL. I have an amendment to the section which I desire to offer, and the gentleman's amendment comes in at the end of the section. Should not my amendment be considered first? He offers his amendment as a new paragraph, and my amendment is to perfect the section as it is written in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send up his amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 22, after the word "forty," insert the word "five."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on my amendment. Mr. Chairman, I am one of those who believe that the highest duty and the greatest privilege of a citizen of the Republic is to take up arms when necessary to insure the independence, to preserve the liberty, and maintain the rights of his people and his country. I would not favor any law which left outside this high duty, this great and splendid opportunity, any citizen of sound physical condition within the ordinary military age, and therefore I propose to increase the age limit, to raise it from 40 to 45. I would increase it up to 60 if it were not for the fact that by so doing I am fearful that I should draft a lot of those folks who have been sending me telegrams in favor of conscription, and, heaven knows, I do not want to be so unkind as that.

Mr. Chairman, I have waited in vain to hear some of the gentlemen who are sitting here, pretending to be upholding the President, pretending to be supporting the General Staff bill, as now before the Senate, offer an amendment which in the matter of the age of enrollment and conscription will put this bill in line with the declaration of the General Staff approved by the President. I know some gentlemen have been responding to the telegrams of their constituents asking them to stand by the President, assuring them they intended to do so, and that they imagine fondly that their constituents will not discover that they are not standing by the President in this essential matter. The Secretary of War declared that the age of conscription—from 19 to 25 years—which he proposed and which the President indorsed, was one of the very fundamental essentials of their plan and purpose, and so it was; and yet, up to this good hour, not a man on the floor who has been declaring himself as a supporter of the President or the proposition of the General Staff has dared defend the monstrous proposition of laying the burden of this great war on the shoulders of the boys from 19 to 25. [Applause.]

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. And if the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] who now seeks to interrupt me desires to state that he wants the distinction of being recorded for that kind of a proposition, I am anxious to give him the opportunity to say so.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I am, and I think that we should stand by the General Staff on this, and the gentleman knows that no draft will ever be drawn upon men up to 40 years of age.

Mr. MONDELL. Ah, the gentleman who up to this hour is the only man who has had the courage and the hardihood on this floor to declare what he believes and what he stands for, realizes that you gentlemen sitting here, voting for conscription with the idea that your constituents believe that you are voting to place the burden on the people generally, realizes that when the bill comes back from conference you are likely to be called upon to vote to put the ages back to 19 to 25.

Mr. PLATT. I hope so.

Mr. MONDELL. And if you do not do it, then you will not be standing by the President.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Then you will not be standing by the General Staff. Gentlemen still claim that they are standing by the President and the General Staff when they have already accepted an amendment to this bill territorializing the forces and giving the boys at home some little hope of being able to get a commission in one of these new regiments. The General Staff, approved by the President, is as much against that provision as it is against any provision in the bill. The man who would stand by the President and the General Staff must go the whole length and lay the burden on the boys of 19 and make these organizations national rather than local, and take from the boys at home all hope of a commission in the service of their country. [Applause.]

A sound, sane, and righteous plan or policy which appeals to men's reason and conscience is best supported and defended when clearly and fairly stated. This being true, why is it that those who are defending the plan for raising armies proposed by the General Staff and embodied in the bill before the Senate do not, at least the majority of them, state clearly what they stand for and resolutely defend it? We are called on by the metropolitan press, by telegrams inspired by certain powerful organizations, and by well-meaning people who do not, I fear, clearly understand the proposition before us, to stand by the President, to support the General Staff bill, to support the bill before the Senate; and by gentlemen on the floor of the House, asking us to stand for universal training, for universal liability to service, and for other things that are not even proposed or suggested, except remotely and indirectly, by the legislation before us. If gentlemen really believe in the War Department's plan, why do they not have the courage and the frankness to say what it is, and squarely declare themselves for it? What is that plan? It is a plan to raise new armies entirely by conscription. It authorizes the President to apply conscription to enlistments in the Regular Army and in the National Guard, which have always been volunteer services. It proposes to lay the burden of this conscripted service exclusively on the boys and men from 19 to 25. It is a plan under which forces may be and are intended to be organized in national rather than in territorial units, so that conscripts may be compelled to serve in organizations recruited far from their own localities and among those who are entire strangers to them. It is a plan under which none of the conscripted soldiers can reasonably hope to hold commissioned rank, even of the lowest grade, but which proposes to officer them wholly from outside the conscripted ranks and largely from those whom favor has given a place in the Officers' Reserve Corps, thus creating at once the unrepublican, undemocratic, and hateful condition under which the men in the ranks are all conscripted, while the officers are all volunteers.

Amazing as it may seem, this plan and policy of the War Department, which would conscript armies for any service, at home or abroad, which the authorities may assign them to, which are to be thus drafted from the boys of the Nation, officered by those who, being volunteers, may look down upon them as conscripts—all this is proposed in the name of universal service, in the name of democracy.

PLAN UNJUST AND INHUMAN.

In all the tides of time nothing more unjust, inhuman, inequitable, or destructive of the principles of equality, democracy, or freedom has been proposed. Even the soldiers of Napoleon, ruthless war lord that he was, gloried in the fact that they carried in their knapsacks the baton of a marshal of France, which they might some day hope to wield; but it is proposed in the greatest democracy of all time to rob the soldier in the ranks of this hope that animated the hearts of the enlisted men of an autocratic military power. Even the war lords of Germany have not dared—possibly they have not desired—to rob the soldier of that military empire of the privilege of fighting shoulder to shoulder with the men of their locality—their relatives, their neighbors, their friends. There Saxon rubs elbows with Saxon, Bavarian with Bavarian, Wurttemberger with Wurttemberger. Here in the great Republic it is proposed not only to conscript boys under age, but to compel them to serve in organizations the men and officers of which are strangers, and all this in the name of democracy. We may well paraphrase the famous saying of Madame Roland and exclaim: "O, democracy, what crimes are proposed to be committed in thy name!"

I should not have voted for a war declaration if I did not believe it had the support of the great majority of the American people, who were fully informed as to the situation which confronted them. Having voted with that conviction, that the war is the people's war, indorsed by the people as something that could not be avoided without the loss of honor and the abandonment of our citizens, I now believe that a war so undertaken will be supported, and that the volunteers given an opportunity will rally to the colors even more rapidly than we can arm and equip them. I believe that we can thus secure, in accordance with our traditions and the genius of our institutions, a sufficient army of volunteers long before we can even make the census on which to base the raising of an army of conscripts.

In such an army of volunteers, all in the ranks and in commission would have the same status as to enlistment. Men could organize for the defense of their country in their own communities, among their own friends and neighbors. Those who had had previous training and experience fitting them could hope for, expect, and receive appointments to at least some of the commissioned stations, leaving the President and the department fully empowered to accept or reject all who were not fit either for service or commission, all who were needed at home more than in the ranks, an army of selected volunteers rather than selected conscripts. Such an army could be depended upon to maintain our glorious record for gallantry and uphold the honor and sustain the prestige of the Republic.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the age limit as it is placed in this bill, 21 to 40. I oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] not because I am unwilling to have men of all ages bear their share of the burden, but because I am thinking more of the effectiveness of the Army than I am of the distribution of the burden. If fairness of distribution were of primary importance, then we should remove the age limit entirely, for surely all ages are equally obligated to serve their country. We ought to consider first which army is going to be the most effective, because what we are trying to secure is an effective Army. I have had a little experience in Army service. Twice have I been a member of a volunteer army, once in the Spanish-American War and again during the recent trouble on the Mexican border. On both of these occasions, in camp and on the march, I have had occasion to watch men of the different ages from 18 to 45, for under the present law the age limits for the National Guard are from 18 to 45. As a result of my own experience with troops and a somewhat wider observation I am convinced that the men who make the best army are the younger men.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Why not make them all 20 and 21 and 18 and 19, then?

Mr. TILSON. Whenever it comes to placing an obligation of service upon a man without his consent, excepting the general consent that he will serve his country in any capacity in which he may be called, I prefer that he should be of the recognized legal age. [Applause.] For that reason I have stood for the 21 to 40 limit; but if I were privileged to select a regiment of men, to be the most effective, the most easily trained, and who would best stand the hardships of camp and field, if I had full, free, and unlimited choice, I would not choose a man above 25 years of age.

Mr. GORDON. But the legal age for military service, the maximum, is 45 years.

Mr. TILSON. Oh, yes; and if need be we should go to 45 years——

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Just a moment, and then I will yield. I would prefer stopping at 40 at first and then if need be going to 45 later on, because I think the men under 40 would make the most effective army; that there would be the fewest ineffectives among them, and that it would be better to stop at 40 until necessary to go beyond. I now yield to my colleague.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I had only in mind to supplement what my colleague said by suggesting that, for the most part, men whose years have advanced beyond 30 but who have been continually in military service keep their bodies in good physical condition; but to take men from civil life and plunge them into the stress of military training at 35 and 40 and 45 years of age is an entirely different question.

Mr. GORDON. But they are matured.

Mr. CRAMTON. Knowing the gentleman is entirely familiar with the bill, I would like to ask the gentleman whether it is possible under the act as it stands for the President and the War Department, when they prescribe the regulations for the drawing, notwithstanding the statute provides a limit of 21 to 40 years of age, to provide in the first drawing that it shall contain only the names of those from 21 to 25?

Mr. TILSON. Well, the gentleman has read the bill and it says, "Under such regulations as the President may prescribe."

Mr. CRAMTON. So that would be possible?

Mr. TILSON. I think so. Now, Mr. Chairman, just another word in regard to what I have seen at first hand. It has been my experience in observing soldiers above and below the age of 30, we will say, as an arbitrary age, but a fair and convenient one, that the older men will stand a grueling march just as well as the younger men, but they can not respond as well the following day. At reveille on the morning of the day following the older man, as a rule, is apt to feel a little the worse for the wear and more inclined to respond to the sick call than the drill call. Of course, there are always exceptions both ways. On the other hand, however, you may expect to find the younger fellow completely refreshed by sleep under almost any kind of condition and ready for any kind of duty. There is no hardship that younger men can not go through—rain or snow, heat or cold, whether it be sunshine or storm. He may be weary almost to exhaustion at nightfall. If so, he falls asleep when he stretches himself upon his blanket only to be pulled out by the corporal of the squad in time for reveille, but physically good as new, just as fresh as a daisy. I remember on one occasion at Fort Huachuca, Ariz., when the heavens opened and the rain came down in torrents until water ran through the camp like a river. Every man's pup tent was a lagoon; his clothes and blankets were wet through and through and not a dry thread upon him. It was in the middle of the night, at an altitude of 5,000 feet, and so cold that we were forced to rise and build fires in the company streets to warm the men. When morning came there was many a twitch of rheumatism among some of the older men, but the younger lads came up smiling and happy and were ready for a full day's work.

If we look at it purely from the standpoint of efficiency, we must admit, however unpleasant it may be for those of us who are older to concede it, that the younger man can stand the gaff better.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I will.

Mr. FERRIS. I want to inquire of the gentleman, for whom I have a great respect in reference to military matters and in all other matters, if he has followed the debate in the Senate. I sat there the other day and they were contending there they wanted to cut the age down to 18 instead of 19, and I was wondering whether the gentleman had followed that enough to know whether that would be a reason for taking the 19 to 25?

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, unfortunately I have been kept here, being on the committee myself, so I have not been able to follow the debate at all in the Senate and therefore I do not know.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise solely for the purpose of expressing my hearty approval of the idea contained in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. It is, as was stated by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON], the legal age. For how long it has been the statutory military age I do not know, but it certainly has been in the laws of the United States since I have known anything about it, and for 20 years at least. Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe that it is wise to adopt the amendment. If we are going to have any use for our military forces in Europe at all, we are going to need vastly more men than you can get out of the narrow margin between 19 and 25 years of age. If the great battle line of Von Hindenburg in northern France is not broken, if the allies do not win by the weight of the metal that they are throwing on their enemies every day, and soon, there is very grave danger recognized in all well-informed circles that the powerful implement of war known as the submarine may complicate the situation so much that we will not only have to have all the men between 19 and 45, but we will have to do as the German Empire has done in her desperation, go to men of 55, and for certain military services to men of 60 years of age. Now, if that line should be broken, if the allied armies engaged should be enabled to crash through Hindenburg's line, should be able to administer a severe defeat to the armies of the central powers in the next 30 or 60 days, then I do not believe, sir, that we will ever be called upon to send a single man across the ocean to the war.

Mr. GRAY of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Very briefly.

Mr. GRAY of New Jersey. I believe some of the women suffragists advocate what is called eugenic selection, that the older men be drawn first. What does the gentleman say as to that?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Of course, the gentleman is not serious; but I will say in reply to him that I once heard an officer of the United States Army say that if wars were conducted upon a safe basis the physical and mental degenerates would be put in the Army and the race benefit thereby. I am inclined to think that is true, that where there are unfit sires, apt to transmit moral and physical diseases, and perhaps it would benefit the human race to do as he suggested.

Mr. GRAY of New Jersey. Does the gentleman mean to say all men of 40 are in that class he has just described?

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman ought not to ask me to make an application like that. Mr. Chairman, I fear, I very greatly fear, that unless this great battle line I was speaking of a few moments ago, shall be speedily broken, we are in for many more difficulties than gentlemen in this House consider at all probable, and that we will need all the military resources of our country to carry on the war and that no man will deny——

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I have but a short time; I can not. No one will deny that men 40 and 45 years of age are physically capable of making as good soldiers as any man of any age when it comes to the storm and stress of battle.

There is a hope, sir, but it is a faint one, that social disturbances in the central powers may accomplish what the guns of the allies have not yet done. There is a faint hope, sir, that makes an appeal to all thoughtful and well-informed people, that before this disastrous war shall be permitted to go on much longer the men who toil, the men in whose sweat all of these expenses are paid, will decide that the time has come to overturn all the remaining autocrats and make peace on a basis of justice and common sense, and there are those who believe that that time may be on the 1st day of May, within the next week. And if that happens, then, I am happy to say, sir, I realize that we will never have a physical touch with it.

Mr. NORTON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NORTON. Is it in order now to offer an amendment to the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. I desire to offer it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] is recognized, unless the chairman of the committee desires recognition.

Mr. DENT. I yield for the purpose of having the amendment read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Mondell amendment?

Mr. DENT. The amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment to the amendment will be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. NORTON offered the following amendment to the amendment:
Amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. MONDELL:
Strike out the word "forty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] is recognized.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, we have had so much military information during the last week never heard of before that I have been somewhat startled. With the greatest confidence in the military experience of our friend from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] on the committee, I beg leave to differ with him and wish to call attention to certain circumstances of the Philippine war.

I happen to be somewhat familiar with the regiment in the Spanish and Philippine Wars commanded by Col. Frederick Funston. His career seems to have commended itself to the American people as that of a typical volunteer American soldier of the successful type, who entered the Army without military training by political appointment. I do not at the moment think of anybody else who participated in that war who seems to have received the approval of the American people more than he and the regiment, perhaps, which helped make for him his reputation.

For a year and a half I was connected in a humble capacity with that body of troops. The gentleman has suggested that the boys who are young, those of 19 and 20, were always up early, were fresh in the morning, and ready, while the older men were apt to be a little worried over the previous day's work. I had that impression myself until the experience I gained. When our regiment was mustered in the governor commissioned three veterans of the Civil War, two of them almost 60 years of age, and the oldest the War Department very seriously objected to. It said that he was old, and they would not allow that regiment mustered in if he were commissioned. The governor, Hon. John W. Leedy, was a man of considerable confidence in his own judgment and considerable reason to have it. He was just as bullheaded as the department, and Capt. Boltwood and Capt. Elliot and Lieut. Parker, Civil War veterans, were all mustered in. My observation was that the boys of 19 and 20 and those ages were the least prepared and the least able to protect themselves.

In my judgment, without any question, the men over 25 who had learned to take care of themselves were, in a much larger proportion, more ready each day for the day's work than boys who were younger and had so little knowledge of the world. You take a boy of 19, for example, out of a home where he has enjoyed every possible comfort, where he has never learned self-restraint or self-control, and you will find he is the first to be sick, the first to fall by the wayside. A man over 25, who has learned something about taking care of himself, does better, as far as taking care of himself is concerned. The boy is a good fighter—none better—but a larger proportion of men over 25 will be ready for each day's work than those under 25, in my judgment. Capt. Elliot kept up with them all until he was killed in battle; and from the beginning of the march from Manila to San Fernando, where that regiment participated in all of the engagements that broke up the army of Aguinaldo and dispersed it into broken bands of bushwhackers, Capt. Boltwood never missed one day on the firing line or anywhere else. He never saw a man in his company that could outmarch or outfight him; and, if nothing else recalled it to my recollection, the splendid record of that old man would be enough to suggest to me that there is nothing inadvisable in Mr. MONDELL'S suggestion and amendment here. The men from 25 to 45—the age limit of efficiency set by the Regular Army for their enlistment—will furnish as large a percentage of men each day ready for the service as men under that age. And it seems to me we are much better prepared to spare them. Why send the boy to these training camps for a year when he is 19? Nothing in this country is prepared for war except the saloons and the brothels. When the first camp is pitched those inexperienced young fellows will be shown the gay road to ruin, to disease that will not down for generations, to habits that endure for life. Let the men fight, not the boys. The boys did not call for war.

MacArthur, Wheaton, Funston, in the Philippines; Von Hindenburg, Haig, and Neville are all far past 25 and many past

50. War is no pastime for children. All men who have seen service realize that the Regular Army age of 45 is a sensible and practical one for enlistment. The suggestion of the gentleman from Wyoming is borne out by the experience of the armies in the Philippines, and I wish to commend it to the judgment of this House. [Applause.]

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming and the amendment thereto be closed in 10 minutes.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I have an amendment to the amendment which I would like to have read, and in its nature would naturally come before the amendment suggested by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON], and I would like to have five minutes on it. And let it be read at this time.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I wish to say to the chairman that I have an amendment to propose.

Mr. DENT. On this question of age?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. On the subject of limit of age.

Mr. DENT. I am only asking that the age-limit debate be closed.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. It is in regard to alien slackers, as we call them.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that every gentleman who has an amendment on the subject of age limit send it to the desk and let it be read, so that I may have an opportunity then to ask when the debate shall be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment to the amendment will be read by the Clerk.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Does that relate simply to the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SLOAN moves to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming by substituting the word "sixty" for the word "forty-five."

The CHAIRMAN. Now, let the gentleman submit the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the Mondell amendment and all amendments thereto be closed in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] asks unanimous consent that debate on the Mondell amendment and the amendments thereto shall terminate at the expiration of 20 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON] is recognized.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, the age limit prescribed in this bill is from 21 to 40 years. I trust that no legislation will be permitted to be passed by this House or be slipped through via a conference-committee-report route that will provide for the drafting into the Army of men under the age of 21 years. The burden of this war should not be imposed upon the children of this Nation.

This war should be fought by mature men. We have a sufficient number of them in this country. The amendment which I propose to the pending amendment is that the maximum age limit shall be raised to 50 years. Men between the ages of 21 and 50 years are, as a rule, well qualified physically to perform the duties required of modern soldiers. There is no reason why a great many men between the ages of 40 and 50 in this country should not be taken into the Army. There are many duties in the Army which they can perform. All the men in the Army are not going to be needed only for marching and fighting. There is going to be a great deal of manual and menial work to be done, and men between the ages of 40 and 50, as well as men between the ages of 21 and 40, are competent to do that work. The age limit should be so fixed as to place as many of our citizens as possible on a fair equality as far as military service to the Nation is concerned. I do not know—although I have given the matter considerable thought—but that the age limit should be even higher than 50 years, but I am convinced that it should be at least that.

Now, when we talk of wars that we have had in the past—the Civil War and the Revolutionary War—we should consider that the war that is being waged to-day by this country is upon an entirely different basis from that of wars that have been waged in the past. The wars of to-day are just as much different from those of 50 years ago as the methods of travel, and the methods of transportation of to-day are different from those of 50 years ago. In the present world war there is not that amount of close or hand-to-hand fighting that existed in the wars of half a century ago.

The war of to-day is more a war of machinery and modern invention, and the war of to-day requires more maturity on the part of the individuals in the Army to carry it to a successful conclusion than did the wars of 50 years ago. It seems to me it would be fairer under this universal-service system to define an age limit that would cover practically all of the men in this country available for modern present-day military service.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Dakota yield to the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. NORTON. Certainly; I shall be pleased to yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. TILSON. Does not the gentleman realize that the principle requirement of the soldier is the endurance of hardships? A soldier's life is no pink-tea performance, as has been stated here a number of times. Whether he is in camp or in battle he must undergo a great deal of hardship, and that is the point rather than whether he is a good fighter or not, because he must endure the hardships all the time and he may fight only a small part of the time.

Mr. NORTON. I want to say to the gentleman that I have taken the position from the beginning of this war declaration, and for some months past, that this war is not, and will not be, a ping-pong affair; that it is a real world war; that it will require the greatest efficiency that we can organize in this country to carry it to a successful conclusion; and I believe that by making available to the Army of the United States men up to 50 years of age we will secure the highest efficient service. I am convinced that these men of more advanced years are just as much needed in the Army as men of more youthful years, and they should not be denied the privilege of rendering military service to their country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] is recognized.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I present an amendment based upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], making the period from 21 years to 60 years. That period will include a large majority of this House. I am of the opinion that none of the men of my district who were over the limit fixed called for conscription, so that I have no delicacy about my district. [Laughter.] But I know I am doing a service to a large body of men of this House. I can not conceive the state of mind of men who have been debating this subject for nearly six days and who have enough venom in their hearts to send the boys into the trenches unless they have an opportunity to go with them. [Applause.] I can not fancy the bold warrior from Kansas City, having asked to send into the fight the boys, none of whom God Almighty blessed him with, should favor a state of affairs where he would be enabled to go back to his district and say, "I voted to send the boys to the trenches, but I voted for an exemption period, so that I could not go myself." [Laughter.]

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman refers to the Member from Kansas City. There are two of us. I have a boy 16 years old, and his mother writes me this morning that he is trying to enlist in the Navy.

Mr. SLOAN. Oh, I was talking about the gentleman from Kansas City, Mo., who was so anxious to break into this conscription debate that he could not wait until the bill was brought in. And I could not think that the brilliant son of Mars, from Massachusetts, would go to his constituents and say, "I forced the boys from 19 to 25 or from 21 to 40 into the trenches, and yet when it came to the question of sending me, then I voted against it." [Applause.] I can not think but that these gentlemen, these bold, bad warriors, the drinkers of human blood, who have no sons but favor the conscription of other men's sons, want to turn to those other men's sons and say, "I stood on the level with you, boys; I stood by you in my speeches and in my vote, and I voted to raise the exemption so that I would be forced to go with you." [Applause.]

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. Overlooking the inconsistency of the gentleman's remarks in the fact that the bill exempts Members of Congress—and the gentleman's speech is all to the galleries——

Mr. SLOAN. I resent a statement of that kind. It is not true. I do not yield further to the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. BORLAND. Do not get excited. The committee will take it. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman has yielded to me.

Mr. SLOAN. I do not yield further.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman says he will not yield further. When a gentleman in control of the time refuses to yield further the gentleman seeking to interrupt him must take his seat.

Mr. SLOAN. I am not talking to the galleries. I am talking to the American people on this proposition. And I want to say that if this amendment carries I will submit another amendment that will remove the exemptions from the legislative branch of this Government. [Applause.] I should very much dislike to think that there is a man in this body of men now numbering 432, under 60 years of age, who is not equal to Maj. Boltwood, of Kansas, who at 60 was a leading marcher and a most gallant soldier in the Philippine War. Think of a man here who has been howling for conscription who could not march equal to Maj. Boltwood. I have a better opinion of my colleagues. [Applause.]

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have submitted an amendment which occurred to me a few moments ago, bringing within the operation of this law a class of men whom I would denominate alien slackers. I refer to that particularly despicable class of men who reside in a country, take its privileges, its riches, its emoluments, but give no allegiance to its flag, who give no allegiance to any flag; men who have a reverence for foreign potentates and a liking for their pictures and other emblems of foreign governments, but a sad lack of regard and affection for the Stars and Stripes or of American patriots. I am told that last week we passed a bill to give authority and permission to foreign governments with which we are now in alliance to come here and recruit these alien slackers, men who have come to our shores and are taking our substance, but who give allegiance to no government. I would go further than that if it is permissible. I am told that under an emergency such as now confronts us under the military law we have a right to take these alien slackers. If we have, let us take them and let us get back something for the benefits we have given to them.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. COX. I am heart and soul with you. Can you give the committee any information as to how many of these alien slackers there are in this country?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. There must be thousands upon thousands of them. I have been told that there are as many as 400,000.

Mr. COX. I have done my level best, asking the War Department, the Navy Department, the Department of Commerce, and the Department of Labor how many there are, and I can not find out.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I know men who give no allegiance to any flag, but who are willing to take our money and take positions——

Mr. COX. And who expect our boys to go over there and do their fighting.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Absolutely.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. How would the gentleman avoid the proposition that they are not citizens of this country?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. By my amendment.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman's amendment to this Army bill be considered as making a law that would make them citizens of the United States for the purposes of military service?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. My amendment provides that aliens between the ages of 21 and 40 years—or if we advance it to 50 years, well and good; I have no objection to that; it would take me in—that aliens between the prescribed ages who have resided continuously in the United States for five years and have failed to become citizens thereof shall be subject to military service under our flag. It is time to get something from these men who have enjoyed all the comforts that this Republic gives, but who so far have been unwilling to give anything in return.

Mr. LANGLEY. I want to ask the gentleman if he voted for the Burnett immigration bill?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I did not.

Mr. LANGLEY. Does not the gentleman think he should have done so, in view of what he is now contending for?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I do not think so.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Has the gentleman any authority for believing that such an amendment as he proposes would be constitutional—that is, that he could really force these aliens to serve in our Army?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I have asked one of the members of the Judiciary Committee—Judge GARD—about it, and he thinks that it is proper.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I will say to the gentleman that I do not believe there is any warrant of law for such action as this. It can not be done. Suppose an American citizen were in Austria to-day and he were conscripted into the Austrian Army, how we would rise up and howl about Austria compelling that American citizen to serve in her army.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. An American citizen in Austria for five years, with the intention of staying there forever, and not giving any allegiance to that country although he has intended to stay there the rest of his life—those are the kind of men I mean.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. How would the gentleman prove that intention?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. By his own conduct and declaration and the evidence of his neighbors.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. My purpose in inquiring of the gentleman from Rhode Island was to express sympathy with the general idea he has in mind, but I can not see how under any construction of law or of the Constitution we can take these alien people and impress them into the American Army.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. We can do a great many things under emergency.

Mr. GARDNER. Did not our State Department protest to Brazil against Brazil doing that same thing? Is it not true that in the Civil War we tried to conscript British citizens, and were obliged to yield our position, because we ourselves have always protested against allowing any foreign nation to conscript our citizens?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. England would not object now.

Mr. GARDNER. I am not talking about England. I am talking about abandoning our position.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. France would not object to this course, Italy would not object, and we would not care what Germany said.

Mr. GARDNER. It is not a question of their objecting. It is a question of abandoning our own position.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Chairman, I should like to speak on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] is recognized.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, a motion has already been carried to close debate in 20 minutes.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I should like to have one minute.

Mr. DENT. I yield to the gentleman one minute.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I am in favor of an amendment that will raise the age limit in this bill. I do not know whether or not the age stated is sufficient to include all the Members of this House, but I want it to include myself. [Applause.] I want it to include men who have arrived at that age of maturity that they will be the proper persons to go with the young manhood that we are going to select, and I want to go with them, and to make that possible I want to advocate the amendment to this bill on line 8, page 3, and eliminate the legislative branch of this Government. [Applause.] I want it to be made possible for a Member of Congress to offer his services to his country.

Mr. LANGLEY. I am in favor of that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] is recognized.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, having been recognized for five minutes, I will yield one minute to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD].

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the O'Shaunessy amendment will get but one vote in this House, and that will be the vote of the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. O'SHAUNESSY], and I hope he will change his mind and vote against his own amendment. If we have got to the point in this country that we can not get native-born, naturalized, red-blooded American citizens to compose the Army of the United States, God save us. That is all that I want to say, and I hope that this amendment will not prevail. I hope that we will not put into the Army men that we can not implicitly trust at a critical moment.

Mr. HEFLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. HEFLIN. The allies are asking permission to take these men over and put them on the firing line.

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. HEFLIN. Would it not be better to do that?

Mr. HOWARD. I am talking about the literal construction of the amendment of the gentleman from Rhode Island to put men in the Army that are natives of foreign countries and owe no allegiance to our flag. Yes; let them fight under the flag of the country that they owe allegiance to.

Mr. WEBB. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. WEBB. I want to say to my friend that a little later a bill will be introduced in Congress—and if not, I will introduce it myself—providing that all citizens of the allied countries of military age shall be rounded up by the military officers and turned over to their respective countries.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not know whether I am going to vote for that, and I am not going to say that I would.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, the proposition now before the committee is whether we will change the maximum age limit of 40 years. This age limit, of course, must be merely arbitrary. Under the present law the age limit of the Regular Army for enlisted men is 35 years. In the National Guard it is 45 years. The War Department has recommended that it be made uniform, and have increased the limit of the Regular Army by five years and reduced the National Guard by five years, making it 40 years.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN], raising the limit to 60 years.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SLOAN) there were 63 ayes and 117 noes.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON], making the limit 50 years.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. NORTON) there were 52 ayes and 118 noes.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the Mondell amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MONDELL) there were—ayes 106, nays 114.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed as tellers the gentleman from Wyoming, Mr. MONDELL, and the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. FIELDS.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 130 ayes and 130 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 22, after the word "of," strike out the words "twenty-one and forty" and insert in lieu thereof the words "nineteen and twenty-five."

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment for two reasons. I offer it first because I heartily believe in it. I offer it secondly so that there may be given an opportunity for some discussion in answer to some of the statements recently made by gentlemen who have been talking about 45, 50, and 60, and the great-grandfather clause to bear arms in defense of the Republic.

This is a serious undertaking in which we are engaged, and we ought not to make it ridiculous by ourselves acting in a ridiculous way. It should be our purpose to enact a law that will give the maximum military efficiency to the forces that we propose shall be sent forth to fight the battles of the Republic.

Let us pause for a moment, Mr. Chairman, and see exactly what the situation now is. It is proposed that there shall be three forces raised—the Regular Army and the National Guard—which will number 1,000,000 men. Under your bill the age limit of the first million that will be ready to fight and should be the first that will go into the fight is 45. Any who desire to take up arms in behalf of the Republic under the age of 45 have an opportunity to do so in either of these two branches of the service, and he will be certain to be among the first to get into action. In addition it is proposed to raise a force of 500,000 men, and, if another increment is required later on, an additional force of 500,000 men.

Should we take those who are between 19 and 25, mind you, we are taking young men who are not to go now upon the battle field, but who are to go into training, and even should we take them but 19 years of age it is estimated by those in charge of our military force that those first called under this will not be ready to take up arms actively until a year from next fall, and they will then have reached the age, approximately, of 21 years. Those who are between the ages of 19 and 25 now to be called under this law by that time will have reached an age a year and a half to almost two years beyond their present age. There can be no doubt in my mind but that we will be serving our country best if we adopted the age limit fixed by the military advisers of our Government.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I can not; I have not the time. The gentleman has made 10 speeches already in the last two days and he ought to give somebody else a chance. I ask that we consider the military efficiency of the country. Suppose we had had that degree of preparedness in this land at this hour that many have fervently been hoping for for years; suppose we had men in the first reserves, what would be their age? Their ages would be under 25, the very class of young men that first would be called on to go forth to fight, and they are the ones most willing to go; they are the ones all history tells us will do the best work when once they go, and they are the ones who can go into the battle line with least loss to industrial and economic conditions in the country, and who have probably the least number dependent upon them. I favor the wisdom of the men who framed this wise piece of legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment be closed in five minutes.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman. I object.

Mr. MONDELL. I hope the gentleman will not ask that. There are several who want to talk upon this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist upon his request?

Mr. DENT. I will not insist upon it now.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who preceded me in an effort to have the House reduce the minimum age limit from 21 to 19 has referred to the army that we are preparing to raise as an army of schoolboys. One would infer from his remarks that we are to raise an army for nothing but training purposes. That is not true. I wish it were. With the condition that confronts us we need an army for service; yes, we may need it for real service before we can possibly get it into the field. I am not so much concerned about the maximum age limit. While I am concerned, I think that the burden of this war should not be laid upon the backs of a few of our citizens. I am more vitally concerned about the minimum age limit. In the name of justice, let us make the minimum age 21; let us not go below that. For what have we entered this war? Have we entered it for conquest? No. We have entered it for humanity. Then shall we strike at the very heart of humanity by laying its burdens upon the children of this country under 21 years of age? Some may say that I am sentimental; but let us see.

There are two sides to the proposition. Every man knows that the boy under 21 years of age is not developed mentally and physically. Has it come to pass in this great Government that the voting men of this country, in the crisis which confronts them can not fight their battles and thus give the youth of the country a chance to develop mentally and physically under normal conditions, which we were permitted to do? Is that the position of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER]? Gentlemen of the House, I hope you think seriously on this proposition. God knows that I have. I have never had a proposition weigh upon me so heavily in all my life. I have hung my heart and my political future upon the questions of the minimum age limit in this bill, but it matters not what may happen to me politically. I shall stand by my duty here as I see it, regardless of what may come, and I hope that the membership of this House will sustain the minimum age limit of 21 as provided in the bill.

It is proposed by the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota to go into the home and take the boys willingly or unwillingly, and subject them, though tender they be, to the incalculable burdens of this war. He says they are going into training camps. That may be true, they will, of course, go into training for a while, but we are in a great crisis, we are confronted with the greatest war in our history, and what effect from a moral point of view is it going to have upon the homes of America when you go in and lay your hand on the child who, as I said a few days ago, by divine right belongs to his mother and tear him from her bosom and send him into camp? Why it amounts to the same if he goes to the training camp as if he were going into the war the next day. Gentlemen of the House, we can not afford to commit such a blunder in the enactment of this law. I therefore trust that you will vote down the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota. I appeal to you to do it. I appeal to your sense of justice and I believe you will do it.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this amendment be now closed. [Cries of "Make the motion!"]

Mr. MONDELL. Make it 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all debate upon this amendment shall now close. Is there objection?

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. McCULLOCH. I would like to ask the chairman to advise the House, if he has not already done so, what the recommendation of the General Staff was to his committee upon the question of the age limit?

Mr. DENT. Nineteen to twenty-five. That was in the bill presented.

Mr. McCULLOCH. I want to ask further if he understands that that is the desire of the administration?

Mr. DENT. That was the desire of the administration, but the Secretary of War, when he found that the committee was against him, yielded his views, so far as taking boys 19 and 20 was concerned.

Mr. McCULLOCH. But the recommendation of the General Staff was between 19 and 25?

Mr. DENT. That is correct.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, may I ask my colleague if he knows whether he has yielded the same views over in the Senate or not, or whether they are insisting on the 19 to 25 years over there?

Mr. DENT. I do not. That bill, as well as I am informed, is exactly as it was originally prepared—19 to 25—but this House, as it seems to be apparent to me, is opposed to that proposition, and your conferees will never agree to the Senate bill. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] left the impression with the committee that if his amendment carried men above 25 years of age could still enlist in the Regular Establishment and the National Guard. Is it not true, Mr. Chairman, that this very section provides that the President may, whenever he so decides, put the enlistments in the Regular Army and National Guard under a draft and then there could be no volunteering in either of these branches of the service?

Mr. DENT. That is in the bill now without doubt. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the amendment be now closed.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the amendment again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The amendment was again reported.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. NORTON) there were—ayes 6, noes 207.

So the amendment was rejected. [Applause.]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURNETT. I want to ask where the recommendation of the General Staff and the administration is now?

The CHAIRMAN. On the table.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 25, after the word "act," insert "Provided, That all male Members of Congress under 50 years of age shall be subject to draft."

[Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a substitute to the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send it to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 25, after the word "act," insert "Provided, That legislative officers of the United States and the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia shall be subject to draft regardless of age."

[Applause.]

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman from Mississippi proceeds, may I put a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I have no objection myself.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment and substitute therefor be closed in 10 minutes.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have about two minutes of that time.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw it. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, the effect of the amendment that I have just offered is to make all male Members of Congress under 50 years of age subject to draft, just as private citizens are.

Under the bill without my amendment all Members of Congress will be permitted to stay at home, with no liability to military service and therefore in no danger of suffering loss of health, limb, or life in the defense of their country.

When the vote was announced a little while ago, showing that the Kahn amendment, which means conscription, had carried by a large vote, the announcement was received with loud and enthusiastic cheers. That many of the youth of the land are to be forced, unwilling though some may be, to go to the trenches and to risk their lives on foreign soil was the cause of much rejoicing on the part of gentlemen here.

Surely no man in this body will vote to send others and then will vote to relieve himself of taking his place with his fellow citizens!

It may be that some of you have heard so much of the thrills and honor and glory of war that you are unwilling to deprive any of your constituents of any thrills, honor, or glory, so you will refuse to go yourselves but will vote to conscript those constituents.

Gentlemen, you can never convince the people that your action in exempting yourselves is prompted by such an unselfish spirit. They will believe that the motive is one that should be called by a name that you would dislike to have mentioned.

It has been stated to the people that those engaged in agriculture will be exempt from military service. This is a misleading statement. It is made for the purpose of creating a false idea as to the provisions of the bill.

Every man here knows that as many farmers as any other class—perhaps more—will be subject to draft. This is true, because if everyone in the classes that it is discretionary to exempt are really exempted there will not be anyone to serve in the Army, except a few loafers, bums, and trifling fellows. In most cases men and boys of the classes last referred to—the loafers, bums, and triflers—would really be exempt, too, because they would fall in the class of those who are "physically and morally deficient."

It is apparent that the statement that farmers are to be exempted is misleading. Those who are unfit for military service because of sex, age, or physical condition will be exempt, and the burden of producing crops will be put upon them, while the able-bodied farmer boys will be subjected to draft.

Let me say this to you, my friends, that the man of Congress who fails to do his part in this time of war is just as much a "slacker," just as much a coward, just as deserving of contempt as any private citizen who fails to do his duty.

You may not appreciate the language, but it is absolutely true. Why should you vote to force other men to be conscripted into service—send them to war and, perhaps, to death—while you sit here in perfect safety and draw a nice salary? You can not relieve yourself from responsibility by saying, "I am a man of so much consequence, of so much importance that the Government can not be run without my presence." [Applause.]

If we are subject to draft under the selective plan that has been adopted, only a dozen or two will be taken for military service. It will be exactly in the same proportion that men are taken from the farms, the stores, the professions; and there will be enough Members of Congress left to run the Government, stand by the President, stand by the General Staff, and do the bidding of the administration.

Gentlemen, let us as men of courage take our chances with other men. [Applause.]

Mr. NICHOLS of South Carolina. Does not the gentleman think that there are a good many here who could be of more service to the country at the front than they are here?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. My friend, I would not make any harsh, unkind criticism along that line.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, the question of conscription has been settled. We are committed now to that policy, and the only question now before us is who shall be conscripted. I am an American citizen; and when a majority have spoken I cast my fortunes with them, however unwisely I think they may have spoken. But now I am confronted with a proposition as to who shall fight this war that we have declared and for which we are providing an army. I do not hesitate to say that I believe it would be cowardly in Congress, in the membership of this House, to declare this war and then exempt themselves from its provisions. [Applause.] Some men have even stood upon this floor advocating the drafting of boys of 19 and 20 years of age to fight the battles of America, boys who had nothing to do with the declaration of war, who did not bring it about and had no part in it, and yet we will sit here as Representatives in the Congress of the United States and tear from the families of America young boys to go out and fight the battles of the country. Shame upon a Congress that would do that. It is a disgrace to our American manhood. It is a disgrace to us if we let this bill go through with an exemption in our favor. [Applause.]

If this war is just——

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Florida yield to the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No. I am firmly of the opinion that the flag is entitled to the activities of every American who has reached the age of 21 years. There are vigorous men upon this floor; there are men here in the full bloom of mature manhood, as well able to go to the front as those we propose to draft, and yet we propose to exempt our precious hides from the enemy's bullets. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I want to say this: I have never been in any war, but, so help me God, I am ready to go if my country calls me, whether I am a Member of Congress or not. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] is recognized in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending amendment and the substitute therefor be closed in 10 minutes, after we give 5 minutes each to two Members of the opposition. I am obliged to fix some time, otherwise we will never get through.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the motion by asking that the debate be closed at once.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman have in mind who is to occupy this time?

Mr. DENT. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. Does that include the five minutes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] has?

Mr. DENT. Five minutes each to the gentlemen who are in opposition.

Mr. LANGLEY. I desire to offer an amendment before the gentleman proceeds.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] has the floor. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I do not yield for any purpose now.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is not there a motion made by the gentleman from Alabama pending, with a substitute by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON]?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi had been recognized and is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Does not the Chair think that the two amendments are "Kahn" amendments? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] is recognized.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, in view of the very strong language that was used by the gentlemen who favor this amendment, I wish to preface my remarks by stating that in 1898, when I was subject to military duty, I had the courage then to volunteer in the Spanish-American War [applause], and I have courage enough now, in face of what has just been said, to oppose this amendment.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that we ought to pause for a moment and consider what this amendment really means. We are not here simply as individuals; we are here as representatives of the people. There has been a time in the history of this world when it was very desirable that the representatives of the people should not be subject to arrest at the whim of the Executive of the country. And there may come a time—God defer the day—in this good land when it may be still more desirable that the representatives of the people should not be subject to draft by the Commander in Chief of the Army.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I will not.

We are exempted now under the Constitution from arrest, an exemption which is not enjoyed by the average citizen. And it is well to remember sometimes, Mr. Chairman, that when the fathers met to frame that immortal instrument the first resolution they passed was that the doors should be closed and no opportunity afforded the newspapers to carry into their headlines the next day that they or some individual delegate was standing by the people. As a result of their deliberations, they put into the Constitution that Members of Congress should not be subject to arrest as other citizens are. And I think also, Mr. Chairman, now in this emergency we should remember that we are not simply legislating for to-day, but that if we agree to this amendment we will be setting a precedent that may return to vex our children. I know, Mr. Chairman, that if this amendment is adopted that I am not to be drafted into the Army. I know that I would be refused if I should volunteer. I know that the great majority of this House would be refused. We will have plenty of opportunity to serve our country, but, in my opinion, we will have no better opportunity than to vote down this amendment which would give to the Commander in Chief of the Army in times that may hereafter come, whenever the people have selected a Representative who does not vote here in accordance with the Executive will, the power to send his soldiers here and vacate that seat under the power to draft a Representative. We have heard much of late of the interference of the Executive in matters of legislation, of Members being coerced into compliance with Executive will. I do not believe that this is an autocracy or that we are drifting into or toward autocracy. I do not believe there is a czar in the White House. On the contrary, I believe that the spirit of democracy is spreading its beneficent influence throughout the world. But if we so far forget our responsibilities as representatives of the people as to give to the head of the Army the power to invade this Chamber and draft into the military service any and all Members whose activities here might thwart his will the liberties of our people would end.

I hope the amendment will be defeated. [Applause.]

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending amendment and substitute thereto be now closed. I give notice that I am going to continue to make that, because I want to finish this bill this evening.

Mr. MANN. I would like to have five minutes. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have two minutes.

Mr. MANN. I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I move that at the end of 10 minutes——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I move as a substitute that the debate close now.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know why the gentleman wants to yield 10 minutes? The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] has just had five minutes. I know the gentleman wants to be fair.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I desire to ask if it is in order now to offer an amendment to the amendment, to this effect, that the word "male" be inserted before the words "Members of Congress," confining it to male Members of Congress? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LANGLEY. I sent to the Clerk's desk an amendment to the Stephens amendment. My amendment proposes to remove the maximum age limit which he fixes at 50 years as to Members of Congress, so that they can go in at any time. I do not care especially to discuss it if the House wants to go ahead, but I would like to have a minute or two to explain it.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be reported in time.

Mr. LANGLEY. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] to the motion by the gentleman from Alabama, that the debate close instanter.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The debate closes at once. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] to the amendment offered by Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. LANGLEY: Amend the Stephens amendment by striking out the words "under 50 years of age."

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. As I understand it now, the Stephens amendment is offered, and then my substitute, and now the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] offers an amendment to the Stephens amendment. Therefore, the vote will first come on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes; because it is an amendment to the original amendment, for which the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] proposes a substitute.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURNETT. What, then, will become of the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES], inserting the word "male"?

The CHAIRMAN. That was not in order in that connection. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY].

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have that substitute read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the substitute.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, may the original amendment be read again, and also the substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Stephens amendment will be again read, together with the substitute.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi: On page 6, line 25, after the word "act," insert "Provided, That all male Members of Congress under 50 years of age shall be subject to draft."

Substitute offered by Mr. CLARK of Florida: Page 6, line 25, after the word "act," insert the following: "Provided, That legislative officers of the United States and the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia shall be subject to draft, regardless of age."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 36, noes 150.

So the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the original amendment. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 86, noes 130.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report an amendment which was included amongst some other amendments that were offered a few minutes since, but inadvertently was not reported from the desk or voted on.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'SHAUNESSY:

Page 6, line 21, after the word "citizens," insert "or aliens between the ages of 21 and 40 years, both inclusive, who have resided continuously in the United States for five years and failed to become citizens thereof."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. The Chair would state that this amendment was offered some time ago and debated, and it should have been put at that time but was not. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DENT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed. [Cries of "Vote! Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed——

A MEMBER. On this section.

The CHAIRMAN. That the debate on this section and all amendments thereto close instanter.

Mr. HAYDEN. He said paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Members having amendments to this section will send them to the desk, and they will be reported in their order.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has not the floor. The amendment will be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. NORTON:

Page 6, line 18, after the word "Such," strike out the words "draft as herein provided" and insert in lieu thereof the words "draft as in this act provided for"; and on page 6, line 25, strike out the words "Quotas for" and insert in lieu thereof "All drafts provided for in this act shall be apportioned among"; and on page 7, line 2, insert the word "and" before the word "shall."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. VAN DYKE: Line 14, page 6, after the word "enlistment," insert a colon and the following:

"Provided, That no person under 21 years of age shall be enlisted under the provisions of this section without the written consent of his parents or guardians."

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. VAN DYKE. Division!

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota demands a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 94, noes 118.

Mr. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported. Is there objection?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Tellers are ordered, and the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. VAN DYKE, and the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. DENT, will take their places.

Mr. DENT. I ask that the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. SHALLENBERGER, act in my place as one of the tellers.

Mr. SEARS. I ask for the reading of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That was asked for and objected to.

Mr. HILLIARD. I ask the Chair to state it.

Mr. TAGUE. I should like to ask the Chair to state what Members are expected to vote upon.

Mr. FIELDS. Let the Chair state the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposition before the committee is in respect to the enlistment of young men under 21, the prerequisite being that the consent of parents or guardians must be secured.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 147, noes 107.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BRITTEN: In line 19, page 7, after the colon, insert the following:

"Provided, however, That no conscripted person shall be ordered to do land duty in any part of Europe, Asia, or Africa unless he specifically volunteers for such foreign duty."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. HUDDLESTON) there were—ayes 26, noes 120.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 6, line 14, after the words "raised by," strike out all down to and including the words "then by," in line 16.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. DILLON: Page 7, line 24, after the word "act" insert "that the soldiers selected under the provisions of this act shall be permitted to express a preference for the foreign service, and those so wishing shall be given the first opportunity for such foreign service."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PLATT: Page 7, line 10, strike out the first three words of line 10 and insert in lieu thereof the words "military or naval force."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. RANDALL: On page 6, line 22, strike out the words "twenty-one and forty" and insert the words "twenty-five and forty-five."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LARSEN: Amend, on page 6, line 25, by inserting, after the word "act," "Provided, That all able-bodied citizens of the United States, between 21 and 40 years of age, and residing therein, who can not show by satisfactory proof continuous employment during the 30 days next preceding the passage of this act, or who can not satisfactorily show employment at some lawful occupation three-fourths of the time, counting eight hours per day, during the six months next preceding the passage of this act, shall be, and are hereby, enrolled for military service in the Regular Army of the United States for and during the period of the present war; and that each and every person so enrolled shall, within 30 days or such time thereafter as the President may prescribe, from the passage of this act report to such authority as may be prescribed by the President of the United States for such service at such time and place as may be directed."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SABATH: After the word "have," in line 20, page 6, strike out "declared their intention to become citizens" and insert "resided in the United States over two years."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PARK: Amend by adding at the end of the section the following: "The President is further authorized to draft, in the manner provided in this act, every man, woman, and child in the United States, the Territories, the District of Columbia, and all other possessions of the United States for service in the war with Germany in any civil capacity for which, in the judgment of the President, any person subject to draft shall be needed."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, to come in as a new section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arizona offers a new section, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration of five minutes all debate on this new section offered by the gentleman from Arizona be closed.

Mr. MANN. That can not be done until we hear it read.

Mr. RUBEY. Reserving the right to object, I should like five minutes.

Mr. HULBERT. Reserving the right to object, let us have the amendment reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HAYDEN offers the following as a new section: Page 8, after line 2, insert:

"SEC. 3. No bounty shall be paid to induce any person to enlist in the military service of the United States, and no person liable to military service shall hereafter be permitted or allowed to furnish a substitute for such service; nor shall any substitute be received, enlisted, or enrolled in the military service of the United States, and no such person shall be permitted to escape such service or to be discharged therefrom prior to the expiration of his term of service by the payment of money or any valuable thing whatsoever as consideration for his release from military service or liability thereto.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am offering this amendment in good faith, in a sincere desire to perfect the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that at the expiration of five minutes——

Mr. DENT. I will make it 10 minutes, so that the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] may be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Are both these gentlemen on the same side?

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I will state that I have another matter to bring before the House which I think is very important, and I ask for five minutes to do so.

Mr. KAHN. I hope the gentleman from Alabama will take five minutes for some member of the committee to oppose the amendment.

Mr. DENT. I do not think it is necessary.

Mr. KAHN. Well, if the gentleman feels that way, I agree with him that it ought to be killed.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California has been unkind enough to sneeringly suggest that no argument need be heard in opposition to this amendment. I trust that a part of his suggestion will be followed, for I hope that its merits will so appeal to every Member of the House that the amendment will be adopted with but little debate.

The House has just gone on record by an overwhelming vote in favor of the selective draft as a method of obtaining soldiers for this war. I did my best to preserve the voluntary principle, and I still believe that it is right to raise armies in that way, but I must bow to the will of the majority. Since we are to have conscription, let us make it as fair and just as possible. I offer this amendment in good faith and at the suggestion of a number of Members of the House who believe that there should be a direct and positive prohibition against the payment of bounties to secure enlistments, the procurement of substitutes by men when drafted into the service of the United States, or the payment of money to escape personal military service.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. With pleasure.

Mr. BARKLEY. I want to ask the gentleman, for information as to his construction of the bill, if under the bill it is not impossible to do any of these things?

Mr. HAYDEN. There is no affirmative permission in the bill to do any of these things, but there is nothing in the bill that denies the right to do them. I want a provision in this bill which will prevent the States from paying bounties to get men to make up their quota of the military forces. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] stated yesterday that in the Civil War $289,900,000 was paid in bounties by the Northern States in order to obtain soldiers to fill up their quotas for the Union Army. We now have the National Guard and, if not recruited to full war strength by the voluntary system, then men can be drafted to fill up these organizations. There is nothing in this bill to prevent any State from paying bounties in order to avoid the draft and afterwards making a claim against the Federal Government for the money so expended.

The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] also stated that the United States Government during the Civil War paid $363,662,000 in bounties, making a total of over $650,000,000 paid for this purpose. Let there be an affirmative declaration in this bill that bounties can not be paid, so that the States and the Nation will be on notice not to pay them.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has told us in the course of his remarks that of the 199,000 men who were subjected to the draft in the North, but 43,000 actually served in the Federal Army. He produced statistics from The Adjutant General to show that of the remainder, 73,000 furnished substitutes and 83,000 paid the $300 commutation. Nothing of the kind should be permitted in this war. There should be neither bounty jumpers nor substitutes, nor should the rich be able to avoid exposing themselves to the risk of battle by the payment of money.

The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] declared yesterday that this bill was not a matter for to-day, but that we ought in this hour to prepare a military policy that will last for all time. I appeal to you gentlemen, if we are going to pass this bill and adopt a permanent policy for raising armies in time of war, we should make this declaration now. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs if he can see any harm that can possibly come from the adoption of this amendment?

Mr. DENT. I will state to the gentleman from Arizona, as I stated to him when he showed me his amendment, that I thought his amendment was entirely unnecessary, because there was nothing in the law that would authorize it, but I could see no harm in its adoption.

Mr. HAYDEN. I want to say that the language of the amendment is not all mine, and I have no pride about it. That part of the amendment relating to substitutes was taken from an act passed by the Confederate Congress, in Richmond, on the 28th of December, 1863. The last part of the amendment, prohibiting the payment of money to escape service, is taken from section 57 of a bill introduced at the beginning of this Congress by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], House bill 92. The wording that I have used is not original with me, but the bill was prepared by the General Staff and introduced by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN]. Now he is not willing to stand sponsor for it. I believe the House ought to go on record at this time against these three pernicious practices; that is, the payment of bounties, the employment of substitutes, and commutation in money for personal military services.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. House bill 92 is a peace proposition and not a war proposition. It provides for the training of men in time of peace. This is a war measure.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is all the more reason why my amendment should be adopted. In time of peace but few would want to hire substitutes, and no State would pay bounties except in time of war.

Mr. KAHN. The bill does not authorize the payment of bounties and it does not permit the service of a substitute.

Mr. HAYDEN. The bill does not prohibit these evil practices; it is silent. I want an affirmative and positive declaration which shall be notice to all men that bounties will not be paid, that money can not purchase an exemption, and that substitutes can not be employed. There are many men now living who well remember that in the time of the Civil War all of these things could be and were done in both the North and the South. The adoption of this amendment can do no harm and it will be laying down a proper military policy for the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, under the unanimous-consent agreement I am entitled to five minutes. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes upon what I conceive to be an important matter which I think ought to be brought to the attention of the House at this time. I should have done this earlier in the day, when we were on that section of the bill relating to the selective draft, but it was impossible for me to get the poster at that time, and I therefore want to call attention to it now. I have had this poster brought into the Chamber so you can see it for yourselves. Mr. Chairman, we have been debating this bill for a week, and this morning the House by a very large vote adopted the draft provision brought in by the minority, presented to this House by the administration through the War Department. I say to you that I voted with you on that proposition. I voted in favor of the selective draft. Frankly I will say that it was against my better judgment, but I felt that in this great emergency, when we were in a great world-wide war, it was my duty to give way to my own individual opinion and to stand with those who were to carry on the war. [Applause.]

During the debate I have heard a great deal said about what would happen when the selective draft was put into execution. I heard it said that they would go out among the young men of the country and by the selective-draft provision call them to arms and that these young men, under that selective draft, would in honor come forth to serve their country, and that there would be no slur cast upon them because of the fact that they were drawn in that manner.

I yield to no man, Mr. Chairman, in my admiration for the volunteer. He has won every war of this great country of ours and he would have won this war if he had been given a chance. I am to-day making an appeal to you in behalf of the million men who are to go to arms under the selective draft. Do not permit such language as is at the head of this poster. I am not referring to the words in the body of the poster, but only to the headlines. The language to which I object is found at the top. Here is what it says:

Be a volunteer hero, and not a conscript.

I found that poster this morning down in front of Keith's Theater, where to-day at 12 o'clock they were to call together men to encourage them to become volunteers. I felt that while we were up here in the House of Representatives passing a bill to raise men by the selective draft, to raise men who would come into the service in an honorable way, to raise men in such a way as that there would be no slur cast upon them, that we ought not, while we were doing that, to permit men down on our streets to put that sort of thing before the people. [Applause.]

Mr. FIELDS. Has that the sanction of the War Department?

Mr. LANGLEY. Did that come from the War Department or the General Staff? Where did it come from?

Mr. RUBEY. I endeavored in the short time I had this morning in every possible way to find out where it came from. I called up a number of people and was referred from one person to another as to where it came from, but was absolutely unable to find out where it did come from or who was responsible for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time has been limited by the committee.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is debate upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona exhausted?

The CHAIRMAN. It is exhausted by unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, by an overwhelming vote this morning this House voted to adopt the system of conscription. I did all that I knew how honorably to prevent it, but when the House of Representatives has voiced its sentiments I go with it. [Applause.] I am going to vote for the volunteer amendment, and then I am going to vote for the bill at last; but that is neither here nor there. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] to prevent substitutes, or paying out by a commutation tax, is the most sensible amendment, the fairest and most American that has been offered in this entire debate. If we are going to put these young men under conscription, I say do not let any rich man's son buy out of the Army. [Applause.] Any man who will send a substitute to war is a dastard and a coward, I do not care a straw who he is.

Did not they buy themselves out during the Civil War? That is the reason I want it provided here that they can not do it in this war. This selective conscription is bad enough. It puts a premium upon favoritism [applause], it puts a premium upon bribery, it puts a premium upon corruption. [Applause.] I voted to take the word "selective" out of the bill, and if we are going to have a conscription at all I want it to be general and absolutely fair. If poor men's sons have to go into this war, and of course they will—for nobody is fighting the creation of an army here, nobody is fighting against this war, but we are exercising the freedom of speech to express our opinion about what we think is the best way to raise an army—then I am everlastingly and teetotally opposed to giving rich men's sons an opportunity to back out of the war by buying their way out and letting the rest of our boys do the fighting. [Applause.] It ought to be put in the bill now and made plain, and then we would not get so many of these abusive and slanderous telegrams from all over the country. I am glad that the age limit has been raised to 40 years. I would like to have seen it raised to 45, 50, 55, or 60 or 65 or even 70 years. A lot of old skunkers all over the country who think that nobody is going to be forced into this war except boys from 19 to 25, and that their miserable, cowardly hides will be safe, have been sending these abusive and slanderous telegrams here. My friends, we want to preserve this army business as far as we can from scandal, and that is exactly what the amendment of the gentleman from Arizona does, and the sooner the people of the country know it the better they will be off.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, our distinguished Speaker just said that he voted to strike the word "selective" out of the term "selective draft" because he wanted all on an equal footing. It is strange that he does not know what the word "selective" means, and that the term "selective draft" has nothing whatever to do with the exemptions provided for those who are drafted by the selective method. There has been much confusion upon that point. The term "selective draft" refers only to the fact that men are drafted only when their names are taken out of a box where more names are included, and you do not draft all of the citizens. Our distinguished Speaker might have continued his investigations to discover that under the terms of this bill no bounty is permitted to be paid, as the bill stands; that no man can buy his way out under the law as the bill stands.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is there anything in this law providing for this bounty business and this substitute business?

Mr. MANN. There is nothing in the law permitting a substitute; there is nothing in the law permitting a bounty. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Is there anything in the law that prevents the military power from permitting it? [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Certainly there is. The military power can not permit or do those things which we do not authorize by law. [Applause.] We lay down the law here and say that can not be done, and it is idle and foolish to say that a lot of things that are not permitted shall not be permitted. I do not know whether this war will run one year or ten years; neither do you. What rule we may want to make five years from now no one knows, but in this law we permit no bounty and we permit no substitutes, and that is as far as we should go to-day.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman one other question. Have these provisions about bounties and substitutes in the old law ever been repealed?

Mr. MANN. They have all been repealed.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. When?

Mr. MANN. Long ago.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. When were they repealed?

Mr. MANN. Well, if they were not repealed before, they were repealed last year in the national-defense act, but they were repealed years ago before the distinquished Speaker or myself came to Congress. There is no law authorizing a bounty or authorizing substitution. We fix here in this bill terms which can not be altered.

Mr. HULBERT. Will the gentleman permit a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for half a minute in order that he may place his interpretation upon the provision of the committee in the bill as it has been reported.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the gentleman wants to use that half a minute in asking me a question, but I shall not object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended half a minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HULBERT. I would like to direct the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the provision on page 6, lines 23 to 25, which read, "and shall take place and be maintained under such regulations as the President may prescribe," and I want to ask whether under that provision it would not be possible for the Secretary of War to recommend and the President to prescribe a provision for a bounty?

Mr. MANN. It could not—either a provision for a bounty or a provision for a substitute. That relates to the matter of making the selective draft, and that only.

Mr. HULBERT. Why not? Answer.

Mr. MANN. Why not write in the bill that your grandmother can not be conscripted; it is not necessary. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee divided; and the tellers (Mr. HAYDEN and Mr. KAHN) reported that there were—ayes 188, noes 80.

So the amendment was agreed to. [Applause.]

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I understand that all debate has been closed on all amendments to this section and that we now come to the reading of section 3.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph just under consideration has been disposed of, but the amendments now offered are offered as independent paragraphs.

Mr. DENT. So that section 3 must be read before any other amendment can be offered.

Mr. MANN. These are offered as independent paragraphs.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I desire to offer an amendment to section 3. Is it in order to do it now?

The CHAIRMAN. It has not been read.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following as a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a new paragraph following line 2, page 8, the following: "That the President may authorize the Secretary of War to organize companies, troops, battalions, or regiments, based upon qualifications from the Nation at large, not to exceed 3,000 men, under such rules and regulations, including the appointment of officers thereof, as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War."

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration of five minutes all debate on this amendment be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I have just offered is identical with the proviso in the Army bill passed at the beginning of the Spanish-American War under which the so-called rough-rider regiments were organized, one by Col. Roosevelt, one by Col. Griggsby, and one by Col. J. L. Torrey, of my State. This branch of the Congress has decided by vote of 279 to 98 in committee to depart from the volunteer system and go to conscription. I have made my fight, I have contended for my views, a number of important amendments have been adopted greatly improving the bill. It is now clear that the ages for enrollment and draft will not include boys of 19 and 20, and will reach those of 40. An amendment for the recognition of local units and of local officers has been adopted. I will, therefore, vote for the bill on its final passage and will vote for it as it may come from conference after aiding in getting it into the best possible form, because I do not want to vote against raising an army, but I will not vote for it at that time if it shall then have restored to it the provision insisted on by the General Staff, indorsed by the President, and contained in the Senate bill conscripting boys under 21.

We have, however, some good folks out in our country who will still be very anxious to volunteer after you have provided for conscription, and Col. Torrey, who raised the second regiment of Rough Riders, as fine as the first, commanded by Col. Roosevelt, and as fine a body of men as was ever gotten together, is desirous of raising another regiment of that splendid sort of volunteers, and I have no doubt but that others would gladly do the same. The number is limited to 3,000 as in the case of the Spanish-American War.

Mr. CALDWELL. On page 70, lines 19 to 24, inclusive, of the bill, there is this language:

Provided, That the President is authorized to raise and maintain by voluntary enlistment or draft, as herein provided, special and technical troops as he may deem necessary and to embody them into organizations and to officer them as provided in the third paragraph of section 1 and section 8 of this act.

In my opinion, that covers exactly the case you are looking for.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. I have examined that provision very carefully. It was not intended to cover a case like this. We are asking that opportunity be given our ranchmen and stockmen and plainsmen and mountaineers to form at least three regiments of picked and selected men, raised and officered as the Rough Riders were under volunteer enlistment. Our people are anxious to volunteer, and if they are given the opportunity they will volunteer to avoid the draft, as, in my opinion, Americans will de everywhere.

My good friend from Missouri, Gov. RUBEY, a moment ago expressed regret because we can not take from the heart and mind of the American people the abhorrence of the word "conscript" that has always dwelt there. Ah, gentlemen, we may go to conscription; we may provide for conscript armies, but the American people will still hold in their heart of hearts, high above any conscription soldier ever brought to the colors, the man who voluntarily presents himself to the service of his country. And the man who thinks he can change that sentiment in the American heart, the man who thinks he can effect that thing by statute law has the American people to reckon with. And in order that the people of our western country may have at least opportunity to raise a few volunteer troops and organize them as we did in 1898, I hope my amendment will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 41, noes 110.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as an independent section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] offers an amendment as an independent section, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. OLIVER of Alabama.

Amend by adding at the end of section 11 the following:

"SEC. 3. That no person, corporation, partnership, or association shall sell, supply, or have in his or its possession any intoxicating or spirituous liquors at any military station, cantonment, camp, fort, post, officers' or enlisted men's club, which is being used at the time for military purposes under this act, but the Secretary of War may make regulations permitting the sale and use of intoxicating liquors for medicinal purposes. Any person, corporation, partnership, or association violating the provisions of this section or the regulations made thereunder shall, unless otherwise punishable under the Articles of War, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than 12 months, or both.

"It shall be unlawful to sell, furnish, or give away any intoxicating liquor, including beer, ale, or wine, to any officer or member of the military forces while in uniform, or to knowingly furnish to such person or persons intoxicating liquors whether in uniform or not, or to any person in the employ of the Army."

During the reading of the amendment the following occurred:

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, it has gone far enough to see that it is out of order. I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman withhold it and let me make a statement?

Mr. CALDWELL. I will; but we are taking up time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will finish the reading of the amendment.

The reading of the amendment was concluded.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on it.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I think this is a legislative bill, and that this is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hardly thinks it is germane to any portion of the bill that we have gone over.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill to raise an army, and the amendment is not germane.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, the primary purpose of this bill is to increase the personnel of the Regular Army, and to provide for raising an additional army, and certainly whatever tends to destroy the efficiency of the personnel of the Army is material and germane to this bill.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LITTLE. May I say a word on the point of order? [Cries of "Regular order!"] Mr. Chairman, I ask to be heard for a moment. I was trying to gain recognition. May I be heard on that?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will take back his position on the point of order and hold it until he hears the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE].

Mr. LITTLE. In Volume V of Hinds' Precedents, section 5910, a question similar to this came up. The bill before the House was for the reorganization of the Army, and an amendment was offered providing that men should be taught target practice.

It was urged that it was not germane; that the reorganization did not include the drill and practice. After extended discussion the Chair held that it was germane.

Now, target practice could not be carried on, just to illustrate in accordance with the gentleman's suggestion, if the men were intoxicated. A drunken man can not shoot at a mark. Sobriety will do more to bring good marksmanship among average soldiers, and good soldiering, than any practice. It is just as essential that we provide that he shall get to the target sober, that he shall be prepared to do so, as to provide that he shall shoot at the target. The proposition is just the same. There is no doubt whatever but that this is germane. In the Senate that provision has been attached to the Chamberlain bill by the committee. It is part of it now as reported. They evidently must have considered that very carefully in the committee, and I trust that the Chair will not rule hurriedly on this important point. [Cries of "Rule!" "Rule!"]

The CHAIRMAN. This decision does not affect the merits of the proposition at all, but has reference to the appropriateness of the amendment under the rules of this body. We are not controlled by anything that is done in the Senate.

Mr. LITTLE. How about the provisions in Hinds'?

The CHAIRMAN (continuing). And the Chair does not think that it is germane. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. The Vice President of the United States, the officers, legislative, executive, and judicial, of the United States and of the several States and Territories, and all persons in the military and naval service of the United States, shall be exempt from the selective draft herein prescribed; and nothing in this act contained shall be construed to require or compel any person to serve in any of the forces herein provided for who is found to be a member of any well-recognized religious sect or organization at present organized and existing whose creed or principles forbid its members to participate in war in any form and whose religious convictions are against war or participation therein in accordance with the creed or principles of said religious organization, but no person so exempted shall be exempted from service in any capacity that the President shall declare to be noncombatant; regular ministers of any religious denomination; and the President is hereby authorized to exclude or discharge from said selective draft and from the draft under the second paragraph of section one hereof, or to draft for partial military service only, persons of the following classes: Customhouse clerks; persons employed by the United States in the transmission of the mails; artificers and workmen employed in the armories, arsenals, and navy yards of the United States, and such other persons employed in the service of the United States as the President may designate; pilots; mariners actually employed in the sea service of any citizen or merchant within the United States; persons engaged in industries found to be necessary to the maintenance of the Military Establishment or the effective operation of the military forces during the emergency; those in a status with respect to persons dependent upon them for support which renders their exclusion or discharge advisable; and those found to be physically and morally deficient. No exemption or exclusion shall continue when a cause therefor no longer exists: Provided, That the President is authorized and empowered to constitute and establish throughout the United States tribunals for the purpose of enforcing and carrying into effect the terms and provisions of this act, together with such regulations as he shall prescribe and determine necessary for its administration. A majority of the members of each tribunal shall be citizens of the United States not connected with the Military Establishment: Provided further, That, upon the complaint of any person who feels himself aggrieved by his enrollment or draft as is herein provided, any court of record, State or Federal, having general jurisdiction in matters pertaining to the writ of habeas corpus, according to local laws or by act of Congress, shall have jurisdiction, by proceedings in the nature of the writ of habeas corpus, to hear summarily and determine the rights of such person.

Mr. DENT, Mr. CALDWELL, Mr. WISE, and others rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to gentlemen who have amendments to offer that the members of the committee will be recognized first to offer amendments. Has the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] an amendment?

Mr. DENT. Yes, sir. It is not a committee amendment that I have, but it was suggested by several members of the committee. On page 9, in line 9, after the word "physically," strike out the word "and" and insert the word "or."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 9, line 9, after the word "physically," strike out the word "and" and insert the word "or."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Another committee amendment: Page 9, line 8, strike out the semicolon at the end of the line.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Another committee amendment: Page 9, line 23, strike out the word "local" and insert the word "State."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, on page 8, line 18, strike out the words "regular ministers of any religious denomination" and insert "duly ordained ministers of religion."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. CALDWELL. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee proceeded to divide.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. Is a substitute in order at this time to strike out this entire provision for the gentleman's amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not proper when the committee is dividing.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 88, noes 8.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Alabama any more committee amendments?

Mr. DENT. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] desire to have his amendment reported?

Mr. CALDWELL. No. I withdraw mine. It is the same.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WISE: Page 8, line 21, after the word "hereof," strike out the words "or to draft for partial military service only."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia desire to be heard on this amendment?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be reported again. I could not hear it on account of the disorder.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will again be reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Chairman, if I can get the attention of the Committee for a minute I want to call attention to the amendment which I have offered. This is the section which deals with exemptions, some of which are absolute and some discretionary. The latter part of the section provides that the Executive can exempt or discharge certain other classes; and then the language which it is proposed to strike out is inserted, authorizing the President to draft all these men in all these exemptions for partial military service.

Now, what are the exemptions? I will not take time to read them, for you are doubtless familiar with them already. "A man engaged in agriculture," and in the Senate bill it is expressly stated, "agriculture." The President of the United States can draft every man in that class, and tell him exactly where he must work, and what he must do. I can not believe it necessary to do this. He can draft engineers, every man working in a railroad yard, every man working in a navy yard, every man working in any kind of industry that is declared to be partially military and which goes to support the Army in the field. He can draft him into the service of the United States, just as he can draft and send him into the trenches.

Now, do we want to give authority to the War Department to draft every man in the United States, with authority to say, "It is necessary for you at this time to raise wheat, and you can not raise anything else, and I will pay you $15 per month"?

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WISE. Yes.

Mr. DILL. Does this mean that the men drafted for partial military service would be called on in the same way as regular drafts in the Army?

Mr. WISE. Yes. What else does it mean?

It expressly says he is hereby authorized to draft for partial military service any man in any one of these classes named here who may be either exempted or discharged.

Mr. McKENZIE. Does my colleague presume to say that a man engaged in farming can be designated as engaged in partial military service?

Mr. WISE. It is just as essential to the carrying on of this war for men to make corn and wheat and oats as it is for men to go to the firing line. For that reason he can designate certain men, if he wants to, to farm, and if a man does not want to farm he can say, "I will draft you to perform partial military service." He could then be compelled to farm, it being essential to maintain the military forces.

Mr. McKENZIE. In that case would not farming be the man's occupation?

Mr. WISE. Not necessarily.

Mr. McKENZIE. Is it a branch of the military service?

Mr. WISE. He can draft any of these classes which are mentioned. Suppose a man is a customhouse clerk, and the President says, "I draft you into the partial military service of the United States; go down there and farm." How can the man escape going?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will my colleague permit me to say that, as he will remember, the classes mentioned here are all exempt by statute in peace time as well as in the emergency of war. This gives authority to use them for some special service in connection with military operations for which a man may be specially fitted on account of his experience. A customs clerk may be right at the water's edge, where on some occasion he may render special military service, and may render more aid than he would with a pen in his hand back in the office.

Mr. WISE. You provide that the President may exempt him after he is drawn; he can then continue in that work; but in the same paragraph you say that the President is hereby authorized to draft him into the partial military service of the United States.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Exactly; and if my colleague will permit me to continue, the words "military service" indicate the service for which he is to be drafted, and there is no confusion of ideas in the mind of the average man.

Mr. WISE. What do you mean by "partial military service"?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That is where a man may not be absolutely enrolled in the Army or carry a rifle. He may, upon occasion, perform some service in connection with military operations, so for the time being he is enlisted for that service.

Mr. WISE. Suppose they enlist him to go down and farm?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That has nothing to do with military service. That is work in civil life to supply the products that go to feed an army.

Mr. WISE. If you will read this section carefully, and will see the authority and the power you are giving to the President, he can either exempt these men or discharge them when they are drawn, and it is their duty to go to the front unless they are exempted or discharged. If he sees proper, he can let them go; or if he wants to, he can draft them for an additional service, a different kind of military service.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Does the gentleman think the President of the United States would take a railroad engineer, who is included in these same classes and who is essential to the transportation of the mail, and send him into the Middle West to farm?

Mr. WISE. What is the reason he could not do it? It is not a question of what would be done.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. What would be his purpose in doing it? We must read intelligent purposes into the acts of the President.

Mr. WISE. It is not a question of purpose. Take a man in any of these classes; if he is drafted into the service, he is in, and he must go where the military authorities tell him to go and work where they tell him to work. It is the power given which I think should not be, after a man is supposed to be exempt.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The military authorities are presumed to have a reasonable amount of intelligence and to employ men where they can do the most good.

Mr. WISE. And they might be exercising good sense when they sent men to farm.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. And then not have engineers to take the products of the farm to the troops?

Mr. WISE. The engineers would be useless unless products were first produced.

Mr. BATHRICK. It would be absolutely necessary.

Mr. CALDWELL. I call your attention to this particular situation: Suppose we were in the act of transporting troops across the United States to send them to Europe, to use them in military operations there, and there was a strike on the railroad. Do you not think the President ought to have the right to draft the employees of that railroad, in order to get those troops to their destination?

Mr. WISE. Those who believe in conscription and in giving the Executive absolute dominion and control over every man, woman, and child in the United States, to send them wherever he chooses and do whatever he may think necessary, can consistently favor this provision of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WISE].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Tennessee rise?

Mr. HOUSTON. For the purpose of asking unanimous consent to make a statement, and to return to the amendment just adopted, which struck out the words—

Regular ministers of any religious denomination—

And insert the words—

Ordained ministers.

I simply wish to state that there are a number of denominations that do not ordain their ministers. This exemption ought not to apply to ordained ministers if it does not apply to ministers of those denominations which do not ordain. Every Member of this House, I am sure, wants to apply the same rules and principles to every church and every denomination.

Mr. DILL. If the gentleman will yield, I will say that I intend to move to strike out that paragraph altogether.

Mr. HOUSTON. Let us agree on the amendments, and then the gentleman can offer his motion.

Mr. DENT. I offered that change in the language at the request of certain ministers. I have no objection to allowing the language to stand as it is printed in the bill. Then if the committee want to make any changes they can do so. So I ask unanimous consent that the amendment I offered be stricken out and that the language remain as it was reported to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the amendment referred to by him be stricken out and that the bill shall remain as it was when it was reported to the House in that respect. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, I could not hear all of this discussion, but if we return to the words "regular minister," what will be the status of a man who claims to be a minister, an itinerant? May he be excused on that ground?

Mr. HOUSTON. I should think the words "regular minister" are as specific a term as you can use. It would not mean a man who was not a regular minister. It would mean a man whose calling is the preaching of the gospel and who follows that calling for a life work. The plain, common-sense interpretation of the words "regular minister" would be a man who was engaged regularly and all the time in that service.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What is the objection to the words "regularly ordained minister"?

Mr. HOUSTON. A number of denominations do not ordain their ministers. There are religious denominations that do not ordain their ministers.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is a unanimous-consent request by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. CANNON. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman read the amendment as it was agreed to?

Mr. DENT. It struck out this language and inserted "duly ordained ministers of religion."

Mr. CANNON. I suggest to the gentleman that the words be restored as in the bill with his amendment and "duly ordained ministers of religion."

Mr. DENT. I have no objection to that.

Mr. RAKER. I object to it.

Mr. CANNON. Why?

Mr. RAKER. I am going to move to strike out the whole of it when I get a chance. I will withhold the objection and let the language be restored.

The CHAIRMAN. This is a request for unanimous consent, and will the gentleman from Alabama state whether he accepts the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Alabama if he objects to this language with the addition of the words "duly ordained."

Mr. DENT. I do not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That will cover a multitude of sins. [Laughter.]

Mr. DENT. If the House will permit me, the purpose I had in view in asking that the amendment I offered be stricken out and the original language of the bill restored was to put it in the shape that it was before so that everybody would have a right to make a change by moving to strike it out or amend it. It leaves it where it was. If the House will consent to that, we will expedite matters.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me, would he modify his request to restore this language by adding "and duly ordained as a minister"?

Mr. DENT. I have made that request, but the gentleman from California objected.

Mr. RAKER. I will withhold my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest that this matter can be agreed upon without difficulty, and that we can pass over it and take it up later.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] what objection there can be to the original language in the bill as it was written.

Mr. CANNON. "Regular" ministers do not cover "duly ordained" ministers. I do not want to cut out regular ministers, and if there be duly ordained ministers I do not want to cut them out.

Mr. DENT. I think the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is well taken and I have no objection to it.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Alabama will again state his request the Chair will put it to the House.

Mr. DENT. I ask unanimous consent that the language read as follows: "Regular or duly ordained ministers of any religious denomination."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that, notwithstanding what has taken place, the language of the bill shall read as follows: "Regular or duly ordained ministers of any religious denomination."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, the adoption of this amendment would not militate against offering an amendment to strike out the language now in the bill, including that which it is asked to insert?

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman could get back to it, it would not.

Mr. DENT. We are still considering this section, and amendments are in order to this section.

Mr. RAKER. I want to know before we pass this section if a motion to strike out that language would be militated against by the adoption of this unanimous request.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would think that the language read, being the language of the bill in the beginning, it would be competent for the House to act upon it by amendment. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, I ask the gentleman to include in his motion the words "prior to the passage of this act."

Mr. DENT. No; I am not undertaking to perfect this language at all. That is with the committee hereafter. I want to restore the original language so that it can be perfected later.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I ask unanimous consent to amend the request of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. CALDWELL. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 8, page 8, after the word "and," strike out down to and including the word "noncombatant" on line 17, of page 8, and insert the following:

"Nothing in this act shall be construed to require or compel service in any of the forces herein provided for by any person who is conscientiously opposed to engaging in such service. Any person who shall have been exempted from military or naval service on the grounds of conscientious objection shall be liable to be drafted and assigned by the President to any one of the following kinds of civil service under the civil branches of the Government:

"Agriculture, forestry, reclamation of waste land, highway construction and repair, public education, prison work, social-welfare work, Coast Guard life saving, relief and reconstruction among noncombatant sufferers, any other civil service of national or international importance.

"Any person so drafted shall serve during the period of the emergency and for one year thereafter, unless sooner discharged."

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is a neutral amendment. It may be considered and favored by gentlemen who supported conscription and by those who opposed conscription.

I call the committee's attention to the provision now in the bill to the effect that members of a religious organization whose convictions are against war or participation therein may be exempted. In other words, the committee has very properly recognized the organized conscience of the Nation. The man who belongs to an organization which is opposed to participation in war may be excused under the provisions of this bill. That applies to the Mennonites and other religious organizations of that kind.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. In just a moment. My amendment goes further and recognizes the unorganized conscience of the Nation. Mr. Chairman, England has been faced by this same problem and has dealt with it in a very broad fashion. I want to read to the members of the committee the exemption clauses of the British military-service act of January 27, 1916, which is the very latest enactment:

EXEMPTION CLAUSES OF THE BRITISH MILITARY-SERVICE ACT OF JANUARY 27, 1916.

Chapter 104.

2. (1) An application may be made at any time before the appointed date to the local tribunal established under this act by or in respect of any man for the issue to him of a certificate of exemption from the provisions of this act:

a. On the ground that it is expedient in the national interests that he should, instead of being employed in the military service, be engaged in other work in which he is habitually engaged or in which he wishes to be engaged, or if he is being educated or trained for any work, that he should continue to be so educated or trained;

b. On the ground that serious hardship would ensue if the man were called up for army service, owing to his exceptional financial or business obligations or domestic position;

c. On the ground of ill health or infirmity; or

d. On the ground of conscientious objection to the undertaking of combatant service; and the local tribunal, if they consider the grounds of the application established, shall grant such a certificate.

* * * * * * *

(3) Any certificate of exemption may be absolute, conditional, or temporary, as the authority by whom it was granted think best suited to the case, and also in the case of an application on conscientious grounds may take the form of an exemption from combatant service only or may be conditional on the applicant being engaged in some work which, in the opinion of the tribunal dealing with the case, is of national importance.

The amendment which I have presented has been prepared by a committee made up of three ministers of the Gospel, three Presbyterian ministers, and, whatever else may be said about Presbyterians, the military history of the world will show that they have never sought to avoid military service. They have been a hard-hitting and a hard-fighting sect. These three gentlemen are exempt under the provisions of the pending bill. They are not pleading for themselves, but they are pleading for the men throughout the country who are conscientiously opposed to war; and I wish the House to listen to the plea which these three gentlemen have prepared and which I am privileged to present here to-day:

In submitting the inclosed suggested amendment, in the interest of conscientious objecters, we respectively desire to make plain the following points:

First. Conscientious objecters in general are not expressing their approval of the principle of conscription to military service when they request exemption.

Second. Conscientious objecters of the sort whom we know personally are not cowards and are very eager to serve society. It is our hope that under a system of selected draft the great majority of conscientious objecters will be found to be giving unselfish service of recognized value to the State. The Fellowship of Reconciliation, which we represent, has sent out a letter urging its members to lose no time in facing, each for himself, the problem of the most useful service he can render. Several of its members are now engaged in dangerous forms of relief and prison camp work in the Balkans and in Armenia. The fellowship is seeking an opportunity to send out some of its younger men for the reconstruction of villages in those regions of Armenia where danger from disease and disordered conditions of life is very great.

Third. In urging this amendment, members of the Fellowship of Reconciliation are not actuated primarily by personal motives. Few of them would be liable under the present form of the act to military service. We are primarily desirous of saving the principle of freedom of conscience, which is absolutely vital to democracy, and of securing its recognition in this law, even in a form which may not seem to us ideal.

Respectfully submitted.

Rev. NORMAN M. THOMAS,
Rev. WILLIAM M. FINCKE,
Rev. JOHN E. STEEN,
For the Fellowship of Reconciliation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. Not now. Permit me to say that personally I am not a conscientious objector. I have done all that I could to keep my country out of this particular war, but I have no conscientious scruples against engaging in a war which I believe should be prosecuted for the best interests of my country, and yet I respect the conscientious scruples of these gentlemen and of others like them who feel they can not engage in military service without doing violence to the duty which they owe their God. This is a problem which has received most serious consideration from the Parliament of Great Britain, and which has been decided in that nation where they are fighting for their lives practically as I ask you gentlemen to decide it to-day; and shall it be said that here in America 3,000 miles from the scene of conflict we shall deal less generously with these men than they were dealt with in a country upon the verge of the great conflict?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I want to ask the gentleman a question for information. I did not catch the reading of the gentleman's proposed amendment. Under the provisions of his amendment would it be possible, say, for illustration, for Members of Congress who are too old to come within the provisions of conscription, who wanted to do some efficient work in connection with the service, to enter the service?

Mr. KEATING. This provision would not affect Members of Congress.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I mean if they wanted to do it.

Mr. KEATING. We all realize that Members of Congress have a peculiar quality of conscience.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I use that merely for illustration.

Mr. KEATING. I will say to the gentleman in all seriousness, that this affects no one except the man who says he is a conscientious objector to military service, and he would come under the provisions of this law.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Suppose a man is too old?

Mr. KEATING. Then he is not under the law at all.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. This would not help him?

Mr. KEATING. No.

Mr. FIELDS. In other words, the gentleman's amendment recognizes the conscience of the individual instead of the organization?

Mr. KEATING. Yes; I recognize that the man's claim to exemption is not due to the fact that he belongs to a religious organization of which he, perhaps, became a member just like some of us became members of political organizations, because our fathers belonged to that particular organization; but this recognizes his claim to exemption on the ground that conscience says to him, "Thou shalt not kill even when your Nation says you shall."

Mr. HOWARD. The practical operation of the gentleman's amendment, if it were adopted, would resolve itself into the voluntary system?

Mr. KEATING. No; it would not, and I want to clear up that point, because when a man claims this exemption he must go before the local board provided for in the bill, and before he can secure his exemption he must convince the members of that board that he is a conscientious objector.

Mr. HOWARD. How can he do it?

Mr. KEATING. It is like a lot of other things——

Mr. HOWARD. The board would have to be clairvoyants to look into a man's conscience in order to see whether he was conscientious or not.

Mr. KEATING. I call the attention of the gentleman from Georgia—a fair-minded and intelligent gentleman—to the fact that the percentage of clairvoyants in the population of Great Britain is no greater than in the population of the United States, and this same amendment is being enforced in Great Britain by 900 boards, and they do not experience any difficulty in determining whether a man is a conscientious objector or merely a coward.

Mr. HOWARD. Is it the gentleman's judgment that a man, because he has conscientious scruples about fighting, ought to be permitted to let his country's defense suffer on that account?

Mr. KEATING. I believe, as a matter of sound public policy—and in this I am sustained by the best thought of the world—that when you become convinced that a man is conscientiously opposed to performing military service you should put him to doing some other work for his country.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, this is the exemption section. I do not want to be unfair to anybody, and in order to test the sense of the committee I move that debate on this section and all amendments thereto be now closed. That, of course, does not prevent anybody from offering an amendment, but it prohibits debate.

Mr. LEVER. I suggest to the gentleman from Alabama to ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and amendments close at 6 o'clock.

Mr. DENT. Then I ask unanimous consent that debate on this section and all amendments thereto be closed at 6 o'clock.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, this section is one of the most important in the bill and there ought to be reasonable opportunity for genuine debate upon amendments. Now, if the gentleman wants to take the responsibility of this House not considering this section on its merits, he may do so and I will object. The gentleman can run until 6 o'clock without making this request.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, there were 15 minutes consumed on the last amendment. The gentleman perhaps can limit the time of debate on each amendment, but it is not fair to give one amendment 15 minutes and shut all the others out. I would be willing to have five minutes on my amendment and then end it.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I do not think anybody can accuse me of having been arbitrary in the handling of this bill at all or being unfair. I have tried to give everybody an opportunity to speak. I make this request: That there shall be a debate of five minutes on each amendment offered to this section of the bill by the person offering the amendment, and at the close of the discussion by each person offering his amendment that debate on this section and all amendments thereto be closed.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman couple with his suggestion that members of the committee reserve two minutes on each amendment?

Mr. DENT. I will add to that the request that debate be closed after each Member has offered his amendment and has had his five minutes in which to address the committee on the amendment, that the committee have 10 minutes with respect to all amendments that may be submitted thereafter, that each gentleman submitting the same shall have the right to discuss his amendment for 5 minutes, and that when all of these gentlemen shall have had an opportunity to be heard that the committee shall have 10 minutes in which to use for the purpose of replying to these different amendments.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Is it understood under the gentleman's proposition that each amendment will be voted upon in its order?

Mr. BORLAND. A parliamentary inquiry. That includes substantive amendments only and not the striking out of the last word?

Mr. DENT. That is intended to include substitute amendments and not merely pro forma amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair understand the request of the gentleman from Alabama. Does the gentleman mean there shall be 10 minutes on each amendment? The Chair did not so understand from the floor.

Mr. DENT. I will make it five minutes on each amendment. I ask that the right of the committee on each amendment be limited to five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama makes the following unanimous request, that each gentleman hereafter offering an amendment shall have the right to debate the same for five minutes and that the committee shall have five minutes in which, if it desires, to repel the arguments——

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to know whether that closes debate on this particular amendment of the gentleman from Colorado. I would like to obtain an opportunity to address myself to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair presumes it does—that the committee shall then have the right to five minutes in which to reply to each amendment, and at the expiration of the debate that all debate shall conclude on this section and all amendments thereto.

Mr. MADDEN. Each amendment to be voted on in its order.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand from the request that the vote is to be taken at the end of the debate on each amendment?

Mr. MADDEN. Surely.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] restate his inquiry? There is so much confusion that the Chair could not hear.

Mr. MANN. Is the vote to be taken on each amendment at the end of the debate on the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. That the vote shall be taken after the debate is over.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no; on each amendment.

Mr. DENT. After the debate on each amendment is concluded.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, is there objection to the request?

Mr. KING. I object.

Mr. DENT. Then I make a motion to that effect, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GARNER. That is not in order.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on this section and all amendments thereto close at 6 o'clock.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, in order to get this thing in some sort of shape, I move to close debate now upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves to close debate upon the pending amendment, and as a substitute therefor the gentleman moves that the debate on the amendments to the section close at 6 o'clock.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. All the amendments that are to be offered must be offered and debated within half an hour?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is a very unfair proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] that the debate on this section and all amendments thereto shall terminate at 6 o'clock.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 107, noes 53.

So the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] was agreed to.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. KEATING. Is it in order to secure a vote on the amendment I submitted?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is going to put that vote now.

Mr. KEATING. May I ask, on account of what has intervened, that the amendment be again reported by the Clerk?

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I will object. We have not much time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks that the amendment be reported. Without objection, it will be done.

Mr. RUBEY. I object.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. I would like to know what we are voting on.

The CHAIRMAN. On the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING].

Mr. HULBERT. What is the amendment?

Mr. RUBEY. It has been reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. KEATING. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 152.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MADDEN, Mr. LAGUARDIA, Mr. RUBEY, Mr. RANDALL, Mr. LENROOT, Mr. SLOAN, and Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MADDEN: Page 9, line 11, after the word "exists," insert:

"Provided, That, notwithstanding the exemptions enumerated herein, each State shall be required to supply its quota in the proportion that its population bears to the total population of the country."

Mr. MADDEN. Now, Mr. Chairman, this section of the bill authorizes the President of the United States to exempt men who are engaged in certain lines of endeavor, and certain other exemptions are authorized to be made which are not specifically enumerated. And I am in favor of granting the authority to the President of the United States to make these exemptions, for I believe that in many lines of endeavor men should be permitted to remain in their ordinary avocations, so that the ordinary business of the country may go on without disturbance and that the food supply and the manufactured products of the country may be made sufficient to meet the needs of the Nation during the continuation of the war. But I believe that where a man is permitted by exemption to engage in his ordinary vocation, although he may perform a very valuable service to the country, he ought not to be counted as a part of the military forces of the United States, and the State in which he lives and in which he is employed should not be permitted to count him as a part of the quota which that State furnishes to the Army to fight the war.

Mr. DENT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. DENT. I would like to state to the gentleman that I have seen his amendment and discussed it with him, and, so far as I am personally concerned, I think it is a good amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. I have not another word to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. PRICE: Page 8, line 5, after the word "Territories," strike out the "and," and on page 8, line 6, after the word "States," insert "and all persons actually engaged in tilling and cultivating the soil for the production of foodstuffs."

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, it is generally conceded that our great part in this war—the most important part that we shall play in this war—will be not only to feed ourselves but also to feed those with whom we have allied ourselves. This very day, gentlemen, in every newspaper in America, in startling headlines, appears the announcement that we are confronted with a world-wide famine, and I submit to this House that if the American farmer does nothing else except feed the nations he is doing his part in this great war.

In the district where I live—and I believe the same conditions exist elsewhere throughout this Union—the question of the scarcity of farm labor is acute. It is almost impossible to supply our farmers with labor, and if we are——

Mr. LEVER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from South Carolina rise?

Mr. LEVER. To ask the gentleman if he will yield for a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRICE. Yes; certainly.

Mr. LEVER. In the confusion it was almost impossible to get the full import of the gentleman's amendment. Do I understand that the amendment he has proposed exempts all persons engaged in agriculture from military service at all?

Mr. PRICE. Yes, sir. I submit that if the American farmer does that much he is doing his part in this war.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRICE. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would the gentleman's amendment cover the case of a person going to the country and performing the slightest amount of agricultural work?

Mr. PRICE. No, sir.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why not?

Mr. PRICE. He has to be an actual agriculturist, an actual farmer.

Mr. STAFFORD. The purport of the gentleman's amendment does include that class that I have described.

Mr. PRICE. I am perfectly willing to have it amended so that that can be avoided.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask the gentleman what is an "agriculturist" if it is not some person tilling the soil?

Mr. PRICE. I submit to the gentleman that the language of this amendment is very plain.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PRICE. Certainly.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If you establish this exemption before the draft is made, do not you think we will have more people out on the farm than in the homes. [Laughter.]

Mr. PRICE. Yes. That is what we need. I have two purposes in this amendment. One is that we shall be in the position to feed this Nation and the world, and the other is that we may augment our farm labor.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Does not the gentleman admit that if he opens up this way of evading military service he will have more people on the farm than the farmers can feed? [Laughter.]

Mr. PRICE. The nations of the world do not need as much of anything else provided in this bill as food, and they will have to depend upon America to feed them.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRICE. Yes.

Mr. MEEKER. Does not the gentleman believe that in the wisdom of those who have charge of this Nation they will see to it that the farmers are provided with help? This would eliminate 6,000,000 people.

Mr. PRICE. I think they ought to be eliminated.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRICE. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. I read in the papers that Minneapolis wheat is quoted at $3 a bushel. If the farmers are not exempted from military service in order to enable them to enlarge the volume of their production, what is the price likely to be a year from now?

Mr. PRICE. Every farmer in the Nation should be exempt from military service and be permitted to till the soil as never before, to try if possible to avert this threatened world famine which after all may prove the deciding factor in this war.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Page 9, line 16, after the word "administration," strike out the words "a majority" and insert "or."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the attention of the members of the Military Committee on this amendment. The sentence which the amendment proposes to correct reads as follows:

A majority of the members of each tribunal shall be citizens of the United States not connected with the Military Establishment—

That is, this tribunal that is to make the selective draft. The language suggests that the minority of the tribunal to select these American soldiers may not be citizens of the United States. I would like to have some explanation as to the intent of the committee in using the language they did—

A majority of the members of each tribunal shall be citizens of the United States.

Mr. CALDWELL. "And" and not "or."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think if you examine the language you will see there is an ambiguity.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will say to the gentleman that I drafted that provision, and the statement was made to the committee by the Secretary of War that he contemplated at least that the chairman or one member of the tribunal should be a military man, a military officer; so that the amendment was drafted, or this provision was prepared, so that if there were only three members, at least two of them would be civilians. I think it can be only by implication that it should be understood that they would not all be citizens of the United States. I do not exactly follow the argument of the gentleman from Philadelphia.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It says, "A majority of the members of each tribunal shall be citizens of the United States." What was the purpose of it? Was it to permit the President of the United States to introduce an alien officer, or was it the purpose of the language, as here written, merely to admit of the appointment of a minority member from the Military Establishment?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That the minority member should be a military man.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield, and to whom?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield first to my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman think that the language is capable of only one construction, namely, that the members of this tribunal shall be citizens of the United States not connected with the Military Establishment, but they are all to be citizens of the United States?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Well, it is susceptible to the other construction; and inasmuch as we are now cooperating with other countries and propose to permit foreign recruiting officers to recruit aliens in the United States, and inasmuch as our own military officers are very busy, or may be very busy, it might be that it was intended that we should utilize some of these foreign military officers as minority members of these tribunals.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GOOD. I suppose it was intended that the language should read like this: "Shall be citizens of the United States, and the majority members shall not be connected with any Military Establishment." But, as the gentleman stated, the language is that "A majority of the members of each tribunal shall be citizens of the United States not connected with the Military Establishment."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Well, if what the gentleman from Iowa says is the proper interpretation, I will withdraw the amendment and in my own time offer another amendment, which, I think, will clear up the matter. I have no objection to the use of one military officer, if he is to be in the minority.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraws his amendment and submits another in its stead. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Page 9, line 16, after the word "administration," strike out the words "A majority of" and insert a capital "T" in the succeeding word "the"; and on line 18, same page, after the word "not," insert the words "more than one of whom shall be."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I hope the committee will consider this favorably, because it gives the opportunity to put one military man on the board to be made up of a majority of civilians.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, the language in the bill is clearly that the majority of the committee are to be civilians not connected with the Military Establishment, that there can be only one military man.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

Page 9, line 16, strike out the words "a majority of."

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, the effect of the substitute is to make the members of the tribunal citizens and civilians. I understood the chairman of the committee to say that that was the practice in England, and if we have heard it once on this floor we have heard it a hundred times that we should follow the example of our democratic ally, King George. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RANDALL and Mr. HUDDLESTON) there were—ayes 50, noes 83.

So the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 4, after the word "industries" insert the words "including agriculture."

Mr. LEVER. Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it will be observed that in this section 3 the President is authorized to make an exemption of certain classes, and in these classes are included "persons engaged in industries found necessary to the maintenance of the Military Establishment or the effective operation of the military forces during the emergency," and my amendment proposes to amend, in line 4, after the word "industries," by inserting the words "including agriculture."

Mr. DENT. I will agree to accept that amendment.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment. I move to add the words "and mining."

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would not the amendment exempt all who happen to be engaged in agriculture?

Mr. LEVER. Not at all. I voted against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PRICE], because it took in all. This only gives exemption to the persons engaged in agriculture found to be necessary to the maintenance of the Military Establishment.

Mr. HAUGEN. It puts agriculture on the same footing as the other industries.

Mr. LEVER. Yes; it is putting agriculture on the same footing as the other industries, and unless you do it the President would not have any authority, no matter how great the necessity, to exempt for agricultural purposes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman consider agriculture an industry necessary for the Military Establishment?

Mr. LEVER. I would not so consider it.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Is not food necessary to maintain the Military Establishment?

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman knows, as a lawyer——

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I am not a lawyer.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman knows, as a military man, that when you are setting out classes by classes, that the exclusion of a class would not permit you to include a class, and that is your proposition here. You are making an exemption by classes, and you specifically set out industries, and agriculture is not included. Agriculture is a class by itself.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNER. Let me ask the gentleman from South Carolina if it is not true that this amendment has already been adopted by the Senate?

Mr. LEVER. It is true that the Senate bill as reported included this identical language.

Mr. RUBEY. The gentleman from Iowa has practically covered my question. I wanted to ask the gentleman if it has not already been agreed to by the committee and in the original Chamberlain bill as presented?

Mr. LEVER. That is true.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman state what particular agricultural commodity now is most used to aid the Military Establishment?

Mr. LEVER. That would be a long story.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not cotton?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; cotton, wheat, potatoes, corn, and oats.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Cotton is necessary for munitions of war?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; and I want to exempt those raising potatoes, corn, oats, wheat, and so forth, when absolutely necessary to the national defense.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Certainly.

Mr. WINGO. As a legal proposition, are not the people divided into classes—professional, industrial, commercial, and agricultural?

Mr. LEVER. That is supposed to be the classification.

Mr. WINGO. The President is authorized to exempt industrial manufacturers, mill workers, and that class, but the gentleman is trying to reach the agricultural class, which is a separate class, and the President nowhere in this bill is authorized to exempt them.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman has stated what I am trying to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the time of the gentleman be extended two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

SEVERAL MEMBERS objected.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Insert on line 23, page 8, after the word "clerks," the word "miners."

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be heard for a moment. It is absolutely essential that the men who are engaged in the coal-mining industry shall not be taken from their work. Their labor could not be substituted in any way by women, boys, or girls. The same argument applies to the copper-mining industry, which is essential to the manufacture of ammunition. The same is also true of the mining of bauxite, which is used in the manufacture of aluminum, which is necessary in the manufacture of ammunition and the automobile industry. The same is true in the zinc-mining industry, and their places can not be filled by boys, women, or girls.

Mr. CALDWELL. The word "industry" used four times. Mining is an industry. The bill itself says "engaged in industry." Why does not that cover it?

Mr. AUSTIN. I want this made specific, definite, and final, so that there will be no mistake.

Mr. ROBBINS. Is it not a fact that the laws of certain States forbid the employment of men as miners unless they are qualified? If these men are taken out of the mines, you can not put in green laborers.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; the gentleman from Pennsylvania is correct. We have not only to furnish fuel for American factories and transportation companies and munition plants, but here comes the report of the foreign commissioners that they must have relief immediately in the way of fuel for Italy and our other allies in Europe.

Mr. BLAND. Is it not a fact that the miners of Wales who have gone to the front have been sent back in order to supply coal for the British Navy?

Mr. AUSTIN. That is my understanding.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is not the point of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] covered by the exemption here on page 9, that "persons engaged in industries found to be necessary to the maintenance of the Military Establishment, or the effective operation of the military forces during the emergency" are exempted? Is it not wholly within the discretion of the President or the Secretary of War to exempt such men as the gentleman refers to?

Mr. AUSTIN. It is; but I want to make it absolutely positive and binding on the President of the United States to except this class; and not only the miners I have mentioned but men who are mining iron ore, which is used in the manufacture of pig iron and steel out of which we make our shells and other war munitions.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Does the gentleman intend by the use of the word "miners" to create a new class of men who may be exempted?

Mr. AUSTIN. Why, certainly. Their services are absolutely needed to-day in every branch of the mining industry.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What will he do, then, with those who, because they want to be exempt, go and hire out as miners?

Mr. AUSTIN. The War Department can prevent frauds and impositions of that kind.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Exactly as they can now under the bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. There is no provision here to cover their case.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. They can do it under the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment to the amendment, which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HUDDLESTON: Amend the amendment by inserting after the word "agriculture" the words "and transportation."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. To address the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. It is 6 o'clock. The time for debate on amendments to this section has expired. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that he was in doubt.

Mr. LEVER. I ask for a division.
The Committee divided and there were, ayes 96, noes 75.
Mr. STAFFORD. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.
Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. STAFFORD and Mr. LEVER.
The committee again divided, and the tellers reported, ayes 126, noes 100.
Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.
Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I ask the clerk to read.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.
Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the committee is not in order. Inasmuch as debate on these amendments has been cut off, it is more necessary to be able to hear them when they are read.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is entirely right; and the Chair asks the cooperation of Members on the floor in maintaining order. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.
The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SLOAN:
I move to amend section 3, on page 8, by striking out all of lines 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18, up to the word "regular," and inserting in lieu thereof: "and nothing in this act contained shall be construed to require or compel any person to serve in any of the forces herein provided for who is found to be a member of any well-organized religious sect or organization, at present organized and existing, whose creed forbids its members to participate in war in any form and whose religious convictions are against war or participation therein, in accordance with the creed of said religious organization.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman——
The CHAIRMAN. Before the Chair puts the question on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska, he will say to the members of the committee that if there are any Members who have not sent their amendments to the desk, if they will send them up, the amendments will all be read and considered in their order.
Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for one minute to explain this amendment.
Mr. CALDWELL. I object.
Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the order closing the debate at 6 o'clock be set aside. I think we can set that order aside.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that can not be done in Committee of the Whole.
Mr. SLOAN. I ask the gentleman to withdraw his objection. We will make time by it.
SEVERAL MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.
The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.
Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.
The CHAIRMAN. There are a number of amendments at the desk. They will be read in their order.
Mr. LENRQOT. Mr. Chairman, these amendments must be offered in the order of recognition. Members can not send a lot of amendments up to the desk and have them read.
The CHAIRMAN. That is precisely what has been going on all day.
Mr. LENROOT. I object to that, and insist on recognition for the amendment I have sent to the desk. I am entitled to that under the rule.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has been observing this practice uniformly with respect to Members on both sides, and after the amendments have been sent up they have been reported in their order.
Mr. LENROOT. Will the Chair bear with me for just a moment?
The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.
Mr. LENROOT. I insist, if the Chairman please, that the rules of this House must be observed, even by the Chair, and the Chair must recognize Members to offer amendments.
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman now wish the Chair to take the amendments seriatim, and require all of the Members who have offered them to rise in their places and ask recognition to offer them?
Mr. LENROOT. I certainly do.
Mr. BLAND. After the announcement of the Chair requesting Members to send up their amendments?
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will dispose of that very readily. The Chair will ask the Clerk to select the first amendment that was sent up to the desk, and then to select them in their order, and he will recognize the gentlemen who sent up each amendment. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. NICHOLLS] is recognized to offer an amendment.
Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, that has been already passed upon, and I withdraw it.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws his amendment. The Clerk will give the Chair the name of the next gentleman.
The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE] to offer an amendment.
Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which is at the desk, and which I ask the Clerk to read.
The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. IGOE: Page 10, line 2, after the word "person," insert the following as a new section:
"That upon the honorable discharge from the service of any officer or employee in the civil service of the United States who may enlist or be commissioned in the forces herein provided for, such officer or employee shall be immediately restored to the identical position, grade, and salary, in the civil service held by said officer or employee at the time of his becoming a member of said forces."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.
The amendment was rejected.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the next gentleman to offer an amendment is the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] and he will be recognized.
Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment at the Clerk's desk.
The Clerk read as follows:

By Mr. LEHLBACH: Amend, on page 9, by inserting, after the word "advisable," in line 8, the following words:
"Provided, That such a status does not arise out of a marriage contracted on or after the 7th day of April, 1917."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.
The amendment was rejected.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND] to offer an amendment.
Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment at the Clerk's desk.
The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLAND: Page 9, line 6, after the word "forces" insert "including miners engaged in such occupation prior to the passage of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.
The amendment was rejected.
Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana demands tellers.
Tellers were refused.
So the amendment was rejected.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] to offer his amendment.
Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment at the Clerk's desk.
The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 8, line 8, strike out all of lines 8 to 17, inclusive, and after word "noncombatant," on line 18, insert in lieu thereof the following: "No person shall be exempt from services in any of the forces herein on account of conscientious objections or religious convictions against war, but any person drafted into service as herein provided and found to honestly entertain conscientious objections or religious objections against war, or to belong to any recognized religious sect whose creed or principles forbid participation in war, shall not be required or ordered to render any services of a combatant nature, but shall be assigned to render such clerical, hospital, agricultural, or manual services of a strictly noncombatant nature as the Secretary of War shall direct."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.
The amendment was rejected.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS] to offer an amendment.
Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment at the Clerk's desk.
The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SEARS: Page 8, line 5, after the words "States and," insert "and in addition to the above county and city officials."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.
The amendment was rejected.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS] is recognized to offer another amendment.
Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment at the Clerk's desk.
The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SEARS: Page 9, line 9, after the word "physically," strike out "or morally."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] to offer an amendment.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LEVER: Page 9, line 6, after the word "forces," insert "or the maintenance of the national interest."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DILL] to offer an amendment.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr DILL: Page 8, line 18, strike out "regular ministers of any religious denomination."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] to offer an amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 4, after the word "industries," strike out the word "found" and insert the words "determined by the President from time to time."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and Mr. LENROOT demanded a division.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, in order to save time I desire to state that that amendment ought to be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, states to the House that he thinks the amendment ought to be adopted. The gentleman from Wisconsin demands a division on the amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 130, noes 3.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] is recognized to offer an amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 4, after the word "officers," strike out the word "legislative."

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAKER: Page 8, lines 3 to 18, after the words "SEC. 3," strike out the rest of line 3 and all down to and including line 18, and, on page 9, line 1, after the word "States," insert the following words: "and of the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia."

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman that this amendment relates to a section that has not been read, and will ask him to withhold the amendment.

Mr. LITTLE. I withhold the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That all male persons between the ages of 21 and 40 shall be subject to registration in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the President; and upon proclamation by the President or other public notice given by him or by his direction stating the time and place of such registration, it shall be the duty of all persons of the designated ages to present themselves for and submit to registration under the provisions of this act; and every such person shall be deemed to have notice of the requirements of this act upon the publication of said proclamation or other notice as aforesaid given by the President or by his direction; and any person who shall willfully refuse or fail to present himself for registration or to submit thereto as herein provided, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, upon conviction in the proper district court of the United States, be punished by imprisonment for not less than three months nor more than one year, and shall thereupon be duly registered: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent the President from beginning immediately the enrollment or registration of citizens liable to military duty as herein provided, or of otherwise commencing the execution of this act: Provided further, That in the call of the docket preference shall be given, in courts trying the same, to the trial of criminal proceedings under this act.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote first will be taken on the committee amendments as reported in the bill. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

Page 10, line 17, strike out the word "proper."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 17, at the end of the line insert the words "having jurisdiction thereof."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 22, strike out the words "enrollment or."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 25, strike out the word "preference" and insert the word "precedence."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, line 4, page 10, after the word "forty," insert "both inclusive."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 4, after the word "forty" insert the words "both inclusive."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KAHN: Page 10, line 20, after the word "registered," strike out all beginning with the word "Provided" down to and including the word "act," in line 24. The matter so stricken out reads:

"Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent the President from beginning immediately the enrollment or registration of citizens liable to military duty as herein provided, or of otherwise commencing the execution of this act."

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I simply wish to say to the committee that the purpose of this amendment is to perfect the text after adopting the plan of conscription. After adopting the plan of conscription, this language is unnecessary in the bill.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman puts back the word "enrollment."

Mr. McKENZIE. No; I strike it out.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman strikes that out?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKENZIE. Now, I desire to offer one further amendment. In line 24, strike out the word "further" after the word "provided."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 24, strike out the word "further."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. CALDWELL: Page 10, line 4, after the word "registration," insert "in such grade and classes with reference to previous military training, family dependents, age, trade, profession, occupation, and calling as the President may prescribe and."

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is to enable the President to select a certain proportion of the male population within the age limit of 21 to 40 who can be drafted according to their age and calling as specified in the proposed amendment. The idea is this: Suppose the President felt it was advisable to call as the first men he wanted all the men in the United States who had seen military service in this or some other country who were between the ages of 21 and 40, he could do it. Suppose the President wanted to call all the men in the United States between the ages of 21 and 40 who were unmarried. He could do it. Suppose he wanted to call all the men of any other class. Then this provision would permit him to do that thing. It does not compel him to do it, but permits him to do it. If he wanted the first men to be called to be of the ages between 21 and 25, and the second between 25 and 35, and the third call between 35 and 40, he could do it. It gives a latitude so he can make it a selective draft, as this bill provides. Without this provision the President must make his selection from all the men in the United States, whether they are married or unmarried, whether they are 21 or 40. He must first make his selection and then afterwards discharge them.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to ask my colleague if he does not think, as the bill is written now, it gives the President sufficient power.

Mr. CALDWELL. I understand not, and I understand that the Judge Advocate General has so held.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. This relates to registration. Does the gentleman expect to have a half dozen registrations?

Mr. CALDWELL. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. He fixes the people you would subject to registration. Does the gentleman propose, by his amendment, that the President shall first have the right to register those of 21 years of age?

Mr. CALDWELL. No.

Mr. MANN. That is what the amendment amounts to.

Mr. CALDWELL. No. I think what it means to do is this: That he can take those between the ages of 21 and 40 and can take them regardless of what their business or profession is, and that sort of thing.

Mr. MANN. This only fixes the people who are subject to registration. It does not have anything to do with those who are drafted under the registration.

Mr. CALDWELL. If you do not do it, how are you going to differentiate?

Mr. MANN. He has the right to make them give their ages and occupations under the regulations he fixes now.

Mr. CALDWELL. I do not think so.

Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LITTLE: Page 10, line 2, after the word "person" insert a new section, as follows, as section 4:

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, a point or order. We have passed that.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is made that it has been passed.

Mr. CALDWELL. The proposed amendment is to a place in the bill that we have already passed.

Mr. LITTLE. It should be on page 11, line 2, following the section which we are now discussing—following the word "Act."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LITTLE: Page 11, line 2, after the word "Act," insert the following as section 4a:

"That the sale of intoxicating liquor within 20 miles of any camp, barracks, fort, post, yard, school, or station of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States of America is hereby prohibited; that any person found guilty of any violation of this section shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $50 nor more than $1,000, or imprisoned for not less than 60 days nor more than one year, or both in the discretion of the court; but on a second conviction shall be imprisoned for one year; that the several district courts of the United States are hereby invested with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of this section, and it shall be the duty of the several district attorneys of the United States, in their respective districts, under the direction of the Attorney General, to institute proceedings in equity to prevent, enjoin, and restrain such violations, and such proceedings shall be by way of petition, and the court, on probable cause being shown, may at once, or at any time before final decree, make such temporary restraining orders as shall be deemed just in the premises, and on the request of the party complained of, or when said party shall have been duly notified of such petition, the court shall proceed, as soon as may be to the hearing and determination of the case, and the court may cause any other parties to be summoned to appear whenever the court shall find the ends of justice require said other parties to be present and testify, and whether they live in said district or not, in which the court is held, subpœnas may be served in any district by the marshal thereof; that if a permanent injunction be granted, or on trial the party complained of be found guilty of violating this section, it shall be the duty of the United States marshal to destroy all intoxicating liquors in possession of said party at the time the proceedings are begun, and said marshal shall at said time seize said liquors and hold them pending the trial or final hearing of said petition."

During the reading of the amendment the following occurred:

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order that I made against the same amendment farther back in the bill.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I make the same suggestion as to germaneness as I made the other time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to say——

Mr. LITTLE. And I would like to have the amendment read. I object to being interrupted.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment, of course, will be read if the gentleman desires to discuss it.

Mr. LITTLE. I did not care to be shut off by New York City again.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will conclude the reading of the amendment.

The reading of the amendment was concluded.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. LITTLE. It would not only improve the American Army, but New York City, better than anything that could happen.

Mr. CALDWELL. No doubt in the world; but this is an Army bill and not a liquor bill.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment to this effect was offered early in the evening——

Mr. LITTLE. I beg the Chair's pardon, but it is a very different amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Looking at the section of the bill and such portions of the bill as we have been over, and running through the bill, it seemed to the Chair that it was hardly germane. Since that time the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] have called attention to the language of the bill which they consider makes this matter in order. The Chair undertakes to say, and the Chair will be very glad to hear, because this is an important matter, discussion as to whether or not this amendment is in order. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] has the floor.

Mr. LITTLE. I am not asking for the floor now. I will speak later.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] wish to speak to the point of order?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes. Mr. Chairman, I submit that this entire bill is for the purpose of increasing and organizing the Military Establishment of the United States. On the first page of this bill, the first provision in it, is—

The President is authorized to immediately raise, organize, officer, and equip new armies.

Now, if you are going to organize the Military Establishment, that implies bringing soldiers together; it implies training them; it implies having an established place for that purpose. I submit, therefore, that any provision providing for the efficiency, safety, and morale of the body thus brought together is germane to this bill.

Now, not only that, but section 10 of this bill provides for an appropriation of $3,000,000,000 "for the national defense and for each and every purpose connected therewith." Now, if this money is to be expended for the national defense, it can hardly be held that a provision providing for a dry zone 20 miles around a military establishment, which is essentially a proposal for the national welfare and defense, is not germane to the measure. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this entire bill is to bring together great masses of men under the idea of universal compulsory service. Not only are we bringing soldiers together for the purpose of training, but we are doing it by a compulsory process, and this proposed amendment is of vital importance. I had prepared an amendment of similar nature, and I would like to submit a substitute in case it is held to be in order. I hold that this is a germane proposition to this bill and should be considered at this time while we are providing for training camps and mobilization camps and for the army that is to be assembled in them for training and mobilization for warfare.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that it is perfectly clear that this amendment is not germane to any feature of this bill. This bill is to raise an additional force for the Army of the United States, to organize and equip such additional Army; and to say that the Congress of the United States can make it unlawful for somebody to sell liquor within 20 miles of an Army camp is simply legislating on prohibition in that particular locality without any reference to the organization of the Army organized.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman mean to say that it has nothing to do whatever with the welfare of that Army?

Mr. DENT. Yes. I say that it has nothing to do with the welfare of the Army to make a prohibition law where it is now authorized by the law of the State. That is precisely what you are attempting to do.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has no regard, then, for the experience in the past history of this Nation in war. Every other nation has had experience in that matter.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Does not the gentleman believe it would be better business for Congress to legislate as to how these people shall be paid?

Mr. DENT. That has nothing to do with the point of order, but it seems to me to be perfectly clear, Mr. Chairman, that under this bill we can not undertake to declare that prohibition shall exist in certain localities in the United States where it does not exist now under State law within 20 miles of an Army post.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. How far would you extend them under the State law?

Mr. DENT. I would not extend them any distance, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, it is possible that it would be within the jurisdiction of this Congress to pass a law specifying that alcoholic liquor should not be used on a Government reservation in a place where the jurisdiction of that reservation has been surrendered to the United States; but how this Congress can pass a law governing personal liberty and governing the conduct of the people in a place that the State has surrendered to the Congress under the Constitution is beyond me.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Are we not in this bill depriving a whole lot of people of their personal liberty?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes; but that is under the constitutional provision that we have the right to raise an army. But there is no constitutional provision that says we have the right to say what shall be bought or sold in a certain county in any State in this Union.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Not even if it were a protection to the army that is raised?

Mr. CALDWELL. No. This Congress has a right to put up a wall around its soldiers, and to say that nobody shall bring anything to them; but what shall happen outside is none of our business.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Is not the argument to the effect that this amendment is germane based entirely on the merits of the morals involved, and not as to the machinery provided by this bill? This bill simply provides the mechanism whereby a certain number of men shall be assembled to be organized into an army. It does not say what shall be done with them or where they shall stay or be raised.

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes. All the rest of these things are entirely outside the scope of that legislation.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman admits that these camps may be placed wherever the Congress requires?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. And this provision determines only where these camps shall be located. It does not interfere with the personal liberty of anyone.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman will admit that for the welfare of the Army there must be a mobilization. The gentleman admits that?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. And further, the gentleman admits that the most essential element of the mobilization is the training of these soldiers?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman admits that. Now, the gentleman must admit that the most demoralizing influence on those soldiers is the permission of the Federal Government to sell intoxicating drinks to these men. I ask the gentleman if that is not the truth?

Mr. CALDWELL. Oh, the gentleman is making a prohibition speech.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes.

Mr. MEEKER. If that be true, why is it that the French and English Governments see to it that their soldiers get beer and wine daily?

Mr. HOWARD. I do not know what the French and English Governments do, but I know that Russia has stopped the sale of spirituous liquors to her soldiers and people.

Mr. SABATH. And the new Government of Russia has rescinded that ruling.

Mr. HOWARD. Oh, there is no evidence that there is any order in the new Government.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARDNER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia whether, in his opinion, a change in the Articles of War would be germane to this bill?

Mr. HOWARD. I would say yes.

Mr. GARDNER. Then the gentleman's argument is sound, but I can not agree with him.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This amendment is to prohibit the sale of liquor at any place within 20 miles of an Army camp. Now, suppose the Government should locate an Army camp within 10 miles of the city of Louisville, in Kentucky, or within 5 miles of Philadelphia, Pa., or within 8 miles of the city of Cincinnati, in Ohio. What would be the rights of the State?

Mr. HOWARD. Of whom is the gentleman asking that question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am putting that up to the gentleman from Georgia. The gentleman stands for State rights sometimes. I am asking him what would be the effect on the State law of locating a camp 10 miles from a city?

Mr. HOWARD. If we adopted the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE], then the sale of liquor in those places, if they were within the 20-mile limit, would be prohibited.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the Government, by simply locating training camps here and there and everywhere, could abolish the sale of liquor anywhere in the country.

Mr. HOWARD. If I had my way about it, I would decrease the limit.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I understand the gentleman's personal views on this question, but I am asking whether this proposition does not intrench upon the rights of the States?

Mr. BURNETT. Has not the Government done that at every immigration station all over the country under a similar provision?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If it has done so, there are immigration stations close to Boston, and yet liquor is sold in Boston.

Mr. BURNETT. Is not the sale of liquor prohibited within a hundred yards of an immigration station?

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, this proposed amendment does not say anything about where these troops shall be located. It starts off with the proposition that liquor shall not be sold within 20 miles of where they are located. Just as I stated when I started my argument, the proposition here is purely a local-option measure for the States, which this Congress is trying to pass, and is entirely outside of our constitutional authority. I ask for a ruling.

Mr. HOWARD. May I ask the gentleman one question on that point?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. Under the parliamentary situation here, does the gentleman think it will be germane to this bill to offer an amendment to make it a misdemeanor for anybody to sell to one of the soldiers to be enlisted under this bill a drink of intoxicating liquors?

Mr. CALDWELL. We will come to that when we get to it.

Mr. HOWARD. It is not germane to this proposition.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York attempts to argue the point of order, but he is not arguing any point of order. He is arguing a constitutional question. This whole bill may be unconstitutional, but that would not make my amendment out of order here. The courts can pass upon the question of its constitutionality. The question here is whether this amendment is germane to this particular bill. Now, here is a bill authorizing the President to raise an army for the United States of America, to organize it and put it in motion. Anything that will make it efficient and competent for that purpose is germane. It has been held, Hinds, volume 5, section 5910, as I suggested a while back, that target practice, for example, is a part of the organization of an army. The organization of an army does not include target practice any more than it does anything else that makes that army efficient. A man who is drunk can not shoot straight. And what is the use of having target practice if you do not bring men to it who are competent to shoot at the target?

The gentleman is discussing personal liberty. You take a man away from his home and send him away to be killed without asking him whether he wants to go, and then you propose to let another fellow sell whisky to him to kill him before he gets to the front, and you call that personal liberty. That does not touch the germaneness of this proposition.

Now, as to the distance, 20 miles or 5 miles, the gentleman has suggested that they should not be allowed to sell liquor in the Government reservation or camp. That would not help the Army any. Every time you establish a camp there will be a row of saloons within 20 feet of it. If they are not there when the camp is established, they soon will be. Nobody in this country is prepared for war except the saloons and bawdyhouses. After considerable observation of this evil while in the Volunteer Army, I have made up my mind that you could increase the efficiency of the American Army at least 25 per cent by taking liquor away from the training camps. I have concluded from experience that it is not a bit of use to shut off the sale of liquor within half a mile or a mile of the camp. If you put it 20 miles away you will have a sober army and you will send a sober army to Europe, and that is the purpose of this amendment.

Mr. SABATH. Would not a hundred miles away be safer?

Mr. LITTLE. I will accept that amendment, if the gentleman desires.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. If the Chair is ready to rule, I do not care to take up time.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I understood the Chair to say that he wanted to recognize any gentleman who desired to speak on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize any gentleman who wishes to speak on it.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the Chair of his own volition stated that in view of his attention having been called to certain language in the bill he had some doubt as to the correctness of his ruling on an amendment previously offered by me. The amendment which I offered, and which the Chair at the time ruled to be out of order, forbade and provided penalties for sale of liquor to officers and enlisted men in the Regular Army or in the new army that is to be organized, and I submit to the Chair that that amendment was in order.

The final purpose of this bill is to raise an efficient army, and whatever interferes with the efficiency of that army or detracts therefrom is entirely germane and material. There are provisions in this bill that relate to the pay, allowances, and pensions of officers as well as enlisted men. Certainly an amendment which seeks to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors to officers and soldiers in the Army, for whose pay, allowances, and pensions this bill undertakes to provide for, is in order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to direct the attention of the Chair to the fact that the bill under consideration provides only for the assembling of troops, and not for any establishment relating to the organization of those troops. In fact, the bill by its very title shows that it is of an emergency character, intended to increase temporarily the Military Establishment, and all through the various paragraphs and sections of this bill it is limited entirely to increasing the personnel. Nowhere do you find anything relating to an authorization providing as to the organizing of establishments.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Section 9 provides for the pay, allowances, and pensions——

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That is already in the national-defense act.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is already in the national-defense act, and it relates to the personnel. Now, Mr. Chairman, the amendment under consideration has nothing in common with that. It is different in character entirely. It relates to conditions apart from the personnel, and is for permanent conditions.

Nothing is better settled in the decisions of this House under subdivision 7 of Rule XVI, which reads as follows:

And no motion on a proposition or subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment.

That such an amendment is not germane under that paragraph of the rule there have been numerous decisions. For instance, we find under subsection D of the note—

Two subjects are not necessarily germane because they are related.

There are numerous citations confirming that.

For instance, an amendment relating to commerce between the States, an amendment relating to commerce within the several States is not germane; to a proposition to relieve destitute citizens of the United States and Cuba, a proposition declaring a state of war in Cuba and proclaiming neutrality, is not germane; to a provision for the erection of a building for a mint, an amendment to change the coinage laws is now germane.

There the Chair has instances of matters that were ruled upon as not being germane. But this amendment is very farfetched from a relation to anything carried in the bill, because there is nothing in the bill that relates to forts or army posts, or anything of that character. It relates exclusively to the personnel and provides for increasing the personnel.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Can the gentleman conceive of anything broader than the language in section 10 that "there is hereby appropriated for the national defense, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, $3,000,000,000"?

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no authorization whatever in this bill for any army post or any of the other establishments referred to in the amendment under consideration. It relates exclusively to the personnel, and the section referred to by the gentleman refers to the expenses occasioned by the necessary items carried in this bill. If you are going to hold this in order, you can hold in order anything relating to the general welfare of the country. It would be establishing a precedent of the wildest character and open the door for all kinds of legislation. You might as well negative and eliminate the whole paragraph of the rule I have referred to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Section 10 relates not only to the personnel but to each and every purpose connected with the national defense. If that is not broad enough to let in the prohibition of the sale of liquor to soldiers, I do not know what would be broad enough.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, prohibitive liquor legislation has almost uniformly been along the lines of prohibiting the sale within certain areas. In Tennessee, where was enacted what was called the 4-mile law, it was at first provided that no intoxicating liquors should be sold within 4 miles of an incorporated institution of learning not situated in an incorporated city or town. Immediately there sprung up corporations of institutions of learning within 4 miles of where liquor was lawfully sold prior thereto. The courts held uniformly that the sale of liquor then became unlawful. Whether it ought to be 4 or 20 miles was for the legislative body to determine, and while the courts might think the legislation was unwise, that the area was greater than necessary, yet the courts held that the legislature was the judge of the number of miles or the number of yards or the number of feet in the prohibitive provisions of the act. Congress is the judge of whether or not it is necessary for the proper protection of these young men at training camps to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors within certain distances, and it seems to me that regardless of the merits it is a question for the Chair to submit to the House, because it is certainly covered by the sweeping provisions of the bill, especially the one just read by the gentleman from Michigan.

While we might not vote for 20 miles, while we might be willing to provide for a less distance, in time of war the protection of the Army and the soldiers being trained in these camps is of the highest possible public interest, and if we believe it is necessary to stop the sale of liquor in Washington to protect the soldiers at the Washington Barracks, or any other place, I think we have the power to do it. Whether it would be wise or unwise is not the question, in passing on this point of order. It is not a question of prohibition so far as the local people are concerned. It is a question of the sale of liquor within certain proximity to training camps.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Suppose you prohibited the continuance of picture shows within 20 miles of a training camp.

Mr. SIMS. If Congress determined that it would be for the welfare and the proper training and drilling of the Army, I think it could prevent a picture show, and it could prevent even a Sunday school if it determined that it was in the interest of the efficiency of the Army to do so. In other words Congress is the sole judge of what should be done to protect the health and morals of the soldiers, and no technical point of order as to procedure in legislation should be allowed to stand in the way of such action.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. This is not a question of constitutional authority. Every Member who is familiar with the precedents of this body knows that for quite a while the tendency in this House has been to narrow the rule of germaneness so as to exclude many amendments that would seem to be naturally appropriate and in order. I do not know that the Chair is in sympathy with that tendency, but such are the precedents. The question is not one of constitutional authority, but whether or not this amendment is in order as a parliamentary proposition on this bill.

This bill is a bill to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States. It provides for raising an army and for various details in reference to same. The bill also provides for training the army and the pay of the army. On the ground of training it is suggested that this amendment would be germane as tending to surround the Government camps with proper moral surroundings, and thereby increase the efficiency of the men in training. This would be a very appealing argument if the question presented was a vote on the merits. But I think it will be perfectly plain that if this amendment is held to be in order, all sorts of amendments of a social character would be in order and could be attached to the bill. While the question is not without difficulty, I think that under the precedents the amendment is hardly germane. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order. The action of the Chair, of course, is subject to the superior authority of the House.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas appeals from the ruling of the Chair, and the question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 124, noes 3.

So the decision of the Chair stood as the judgment of the committee.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, do I understand that the ruling of the Chair applies to the amendment that I offered?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was dealing exclusively with the amendment under consideration.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reoffer my amendment, and ask that the Clerk read it.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COX. I thought that I was recognized to offer an amendment. I yielded to consideration of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ALMON. Was it not agreed and announced a while ago that amendments would be called as they appear on file?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not know of any amendments on file.

Mr. ALMON. I sent up three.

The CHAIRMAN. That announcement was with respect to another section of the bill, where debate had been exhausted and a number of amendments were at the desk. They were called in the order that they were placed at the desk. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I will ask that the Clerk report the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. COX: Amend by inserting, after the word "ages," in line 7, page 10, the following:
"including all aliens who have not taken out their first papers or declared their intention of becoming citizens, except countries with which our Nation is or may be at war."

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration of five minutes all debate upon this amendment shall close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that at the expiration of five minutes debate upon the pending amendment shall close. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENT. And may I take the time to make this statement, that I hope the committee will proceed to expedite this bill a little faster. I have just been informed that the Senate expects to vote upon a similar bill about 10 o'clock to-night, and I would like to have a vote upon this bill earlier than that.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I shall consume the whole of my five minutes. This is an amendment to section 4, and section 4 is the one in the bill which gives to the President of the United States the power to make an enrollment of all male citizens between the ages of 21 and 40 years. We are voting on a measure to-day providing for selective conscription, and in all human probability in the course of the next few months we are going to send hundreds of thousands of American boys, either American born or naturalized, to the infernos of France to fight. Our country as yet has not reached the point where we are bleeding white. Many of the allied countries over there are to-day and for the last 18 months have been bleeding white. Just how many aliens there are in this country who are allied with our country I do not know. I mean by that I do not know how many men of military age, between the ages of 21 and 40 years, who are subjects of those countries with which our country is now allied, are in this country who could become soldiers. Recently this House passed a bill which gave to the allies power to send their men here to use such moral suasion as they possibly could upon their subjects to induce them to go home and join the respective colors in France and Belgium. Considerable opposition to that system developed here at that time, but suffice it to say that the House finally passed the bill.

My amendment does not provide that these aliens, citizens of England, France, Belgium, Serbia, Roumania, Italy, or Russia, shall be drafted into the service of the United States. It only provides that while the registration of American citizens, of American soldiers between the ages of 21 and 40, is being had, the same machinery, the same power, the same Government influence, shall be brought to bear upon the subjects of these foreign powers who are here and who refuse to return home to defend their country upon European soil, when those powers have used every moral persuasion and influence they have at their command to induce them to return. I heard the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB], announce this evening that he thought his committee soon would bring in a bill that would enable this Government to conscript that class of men. I directed a letter to the Secretary of War, to the State Department, to the Department of Commerce, to the Department of Labor, with a view of finding out how many of these people of military age there are in this country. And absolutely down to this good hour, according to replies I have received from this department, there is no data at all in this country that will show or tell how many subjects of foreign countries are here who are subject to military duty.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield? Is this amendment only for registration purposes?

Mr. COX. That is all I intend. Now, it might be argued, as some one intimated here this evening, that it will be in violation of international law if not in violation of treaties made between this country and foreign countries if we undertook to draft these men into our Army. Great God of the universe, if that be true had not we better quickly amend our treaties? Now, should this legislation run and our Government deem it wise to undertake to conscript the subjects and citizens of England who are shirking their duty, who are refusing to go abroad, does anyone question for a moment that after the English Government is given the power to come over here and they refuse to go home to join their colors that England would be happy to have us conscript them? Now, the only purpose of my amendment is that, and that is all I seek to obtain. Whether it is in correct or proper language or not I am not clear, but I think it is, and the only purpose I seek to obtain is that when they are requiring of your boy and my boy between the ages of 21 and 40 years in the next two months that he present himself for enrollment, that the same machinery be put in motion against the subjects of England, France, Russia, Serbia, Rumania, Italy, and let us see how many of them are here, so if we reach the point later on when we pass a law that will conscript these people of military age we will know at that time how much of an army we can get by that system of conscription. Who is going to oppose it? What possible harm can come of it? What possible objection can there be to conducting this enrollment at this time, gentlemen, of the subjects of foreign powers who are here of military age and who refuse to go back and defend their flag when they have been fighting over there for the last two years and nine months? I ask, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 32, noes 57.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana demands tellers. [After counting.] Ten gentlemen have risen, not a sufficient number.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. CALDWELL: On page 11, line 2, after the word "act," insert as a new section:

"SEC. 4a. For the purposes of this act a man shall be considered 21 on the day before his twenty-first birthday and not to be above 40 until the day before his forty-first birthday."

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment, I will say, is for the purpose of providing that all the States shall have the same rule as to when a man becomes 21 and 41. There are some States—the State of Alabama, for instance—which fixes the date of the twenty-first birthday as the day when a man becomes 21, whereas the State of New York fixes it at the day before the twenty-first birthday as the day when he becomes 21. This amendment is offered in order that every State may have exactly the same day on which a man becomes 21 years of age. I think this bill ought to carry that provision.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I think the War Department can take care of the construction of the law without having us put in here the absurd proposition that a man is 21 the day before he is 21.

Mr. BURNETT. I will ask the gentleman if the War Department has not already fixed the rule?

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. ALMON: Page 10, line 17, after the word "States," insert the words "or State court."

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I requested time to speak during the time allotted for general debate but failed to secure it, as no doubt many others did, on account of the limited time and the large number who desired to speak, and, having failed to secure unanimous consent to address the House this morning, I will now, since the bill has been taken up for pending and amendments, avail myself of this opportunity to address the House and express my views upon the pending measure.

I voted against the war resolution and gave my reasons for doing so, and it is not necessary or proper to repeat them at this time. Time may change the views of some who at that time thought I was wrong; but, since the war resolution was passed by Congress and approved by the President, I am heartily and earnestly in favor of prosecuting the war to a successful end. Whether we wanted it or not, we are now in the greatest war in the history of the world, against the greatest military power in the world. The safety and honor of our Nation and the lives and liberty of our people, our homes, our women and children are all involved. The situation is indeed critical. It may be that we have a long, hard fight before us. We may have to raise an army of two or three million soldiers and send them to Europe. There may be fighting on this side of the Atlantic, too, before it is over. No one knows or can tell at this time. It is the imperative duty of Congress to make provision for men and money with which to prosecute the war. We can not and should not shirk our responsibility and undertake to pass it up to some one else. Then, how shall this army be raised? Who should be included and who exempted from service?

At the time the war resolution was under consideration in the House we all understood from what we could hear and read that certain Army officers had prepared a bill to be submitted to Congress making provision for this increase of the Army. We understood that such a bill would require all of this great Army to be selected from our young men between the ages of 19 and 25; that it failed to make any provision for State units, so that men from the same State, or from political subdivisions of the State, could be placed in the same command. We also understood that in it there was no provision for the selection to be made by local citizens not connected with the Military Establishment. This was the bill which I had in mind and to which I expressed my opposition in my remarks on the war resolution. I was then opposed to such a measure, and if it were before the House to-day I would oppose it and vote against it. The very idea of drafting our 19-year-old boys into the military service to fight in the trenches in Europe and exempting all over 25 was something that I could not and would not indorse or vote for. This turned out to be true, as such a measure was sent a few days later by the War Department to the Military Committees of the House and Senate, but was rejected or amended so as to relieve it of those objectionable features.

Provision for raising this Army must be made now by this Congress. The Military Committees of both Houses have had the subject under consideration and have had hearings for some time. There is but one bill before the House to be considered, and we all know that is the only one that can be passed by this Congress. Most of the provisions of this bill have the approval of each member of the Military Committee of the House. It is true that there are two reports from the committee—one the majority and the other the minority. The only difference between the majority and the minority reports of the Military Committee of the House is that the majority report favors raising the first 500,000 men by the volunteer system, but the bill reported by the committee expressly authorizes the President to resort to the selective-draft system to raise the first 500,000 whenever he decides that it can not be effectively done by voluntary enlistment. It fixes no time for the President to make such decision. He might do so in 24 hours, and it is perfectly reasonable to suppose that he would, for the reason that he has repeatedly objected to the volunteer plan. Why, then, put it within his discretion to do something we all know he is opposed to? So, after all, the effect of the plan of the majority report is to place it in the discretion of the President to undertake to raise the first 500,000 men by voluntary enlistment, and the result would be that it would not be done and all would be raised by one plan, and that the selective draft, which the President, the Secretary of War, the General Staff of the United States Army, and all the other Army experts and officers insist is the best and quickest way to raise an army under present conditions and secure an early victory. There is in reality no volunteer plan before us to vote for. To inject the plan of the majority report into the bill would only result in delay and confusion. It is agreed by all that the second installment of 500,000 men shall be raised by the selective-draft plan. The President and all those connected with the War Department insist that all should be selected under one and the same plan, and that is the selective draft.

The bill before us for consideration now, as amended, fixes the age limit from 21 to 40 years. It makes express provision for State units, so that men from the same State or political subdivisions thereof will be together and in the same command. It requires that the boards or tribunals to be appointed to make the selections and pass on the exemptions shall be composed of citizens not connected with the Military Establishment. The House bill fixes the age limit from 21 to 40 years. The Senate bill from 21 to 27 years. The difference as to age limits, as well as all other differences, will be adjusted between the two Houses in the usual way. The bill before us, as we have amended it, also provides for an increase of the wages of the private from $15 to $30 per month. It also prohibits substitutes and exemption from service by the payment of bounty.

All male persons within the age limits finally fixed in the bill will be required to register at such time and place as may be fixed by proclamation of the President, or other public notice given by his direction.

The bill as amended expressly exempts from the draft system the Vice President of the United States, the officers, legislative, executive, and judicial, of the United States and of the several States and Territories, and all other persons in the military and naval service of the United States, regularly and duly ordained ministers and certain others on account of religious creed, who are particularly described in the bill, and also authorizes the President to exempt from the draft system those engaged in industries, including agriculture, who may be determined by the President from time to time to be necessary to the maintenance of the Military Establishment or the effective operation of the military forces during the war, and those in a status with respect to persons dependent upon them for support, which renders their exemption advisable. The President is also authorized to establish throughout the United States tribunals for the purpose of enforcing and carrying into effect the terms and provisions of the act, together with such regulations as he shall prescribe and determine necessary, the members of each of such tribunals to be citizens of the United States not connected with the Military Establishment. Such exemptions, however, do not relieve any State of supplying its quota in proportion that its population bears to the total population of the country.

The question of who will be exempted, including those engaged in industries, farmers, and those who have others dependent upon them for support, will be passed upon by boards composed of citizens who are not connected with the Military Establishment, and anyone feeling aggrieved by his enrollment or draft is given a remedy by habeas corpus proceedings either in a State or Federal court. We are also informed by the Secretary of War that the process of registration and selection after registration will be under the direction of the governors of the several States, through the county officers; that the plan of registration will be similar to registration of voters; and that the plan of selection will be somewhat after the plan of selection of jurors—all by local authorities.

Instead of referring to the splendid young men who are selected, and who answer the call of their country in defense of the Nation, as "conscripts," they should be referred to as selected soldiers or "selects," which implies that they go forth because they are selected by those in authority as being capable and dependable in time of trouble and danger. Why should not the young men of Alabama who are selected be referred to as Alabama's select soldiers, and the different divisions be given such titles as "First Alabama Select Cavalry" and "Fourth Alabama Select Infantry," and so forth? They will be composed of young men, some of whom are descendants of those who constituted the immortal Fourth Alabama Infantry and other brave and patriotic commands during the Civil War. [Applause.] Let all the people and the newspapers speak of the plan as the "draft system" and not "conscription," and of those selected as "selects" and not "conscripts." Neither the word "conscription" nor "conscript" appears anywhere in the bill. When one comes up to all of the requirements of the law and is selected, he goes forth in answer to the call of his country just like a juror who is selected on account of his qualifications and goes into the jury to pass upon the life of his fellow man. One is no more a conscript than the other. These are duties which the citizen owes his country and his Government.

From the registration of eligibles there will be selected 500,000 for the first draft or installment, to be pro rated among the States, Territories, and District of Columbia in proportion to the population, and credit shall be given to each State or subdivision thereof for the number of men who are in the military service of the United States as members of the National Guard. It is estimated that from about 8,000 to 10,000 would be Alabama's part, which would be from 800 to 1,000 from each congressional district. After allowing credit for the number enlisted in the National Guard from the eighth district of Alabama, as provided by the bill, it would seem, according to such estimate, that there would be only about an average of 100 from each of the seven counties, both white and colored, less than the number who enlisted in the National Guard a couple of years ago from some of the counties in the district. Probably only 1 out of every 20 of those who are required to register will be selected for the first installment of 500,000. The percentage would, however, depend upon the maximum age limit that may finally be agreed upon between the House and Senate.

I am no doubt like most of the other Members of the House, especially from the South, naturally prejudiced against the word "conscript" as applied to soldiers, and at the beginning of this war we were inclined to oppose anything like conscription. Lasting impressions were made upon my mind when I was a boy as we sat around the big log fire at night in our old country home, after the Civil War, and heard Confederate soldiers whose lives were spared, who were allowed to return to their homes, and whom I will always honor, revere, and admire, as they told of the contempt and odium attached to the conscripted soldiers, who often undertook to evade service by deserting and hiding in caves and swamps, and sometimes deserted and joined the enemy. No odium should attach to soldiers who are each selected like all others, in the manner provided by law, on account of their peculiar qualifications. Such soldiers are not conscripts. Neither the word "conscription" nor "conscript" appears in this bill. The conscript law passed by the Confederate Congress gave all an opportunity to volunteer, and no one was conscripted until he failed and refused to volunteer.

It is now evident to us all that there is but one plan that can be adopted by this Congress at this time, and that is the draft system, which not only has the approval but the earnest and hearty support of President Wilson, the War Department, and, it seems, a very large majority of both Houses of Congress.

It is said that every Confederate veteran who is a Member of this House and Senator BANKHEAD, of Alabama, the only one in the Senate, and almost every one of the 20 Spanish-American War Veterans who are Members of this House favor the selective draft.

I have not had any military training or experience and know but little about military affairs. Our country is in a critical condition. We find ourselves unprepared to prosecute this great war. We must make preparation, and that as quickly as possible. One of the things we all agree must be done, and that is to secure at least a half million more soldiers and train and equip them as quickly as possible. How can this be done and at the same time have each State furnish its pro rata part? Who knows best how to do it? Men like myself, without military training or experience, or men who have been educated by the Government in our military schools and have made such questions their life work and study—President Wilson, the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy during this war, the Secretary of War, also the General Staff of the Army and all the other great military experts of this country who have been educated and trained by the United States Government for military service, instruction, and advice, all indorse and insist upon one plan, and that the selective draft, for making this increase in the Army to continue during the war? Should we not respect and give weight to their views and opinions, realizing, as we must, that the responsibility for the conduct and prosecution of this war must rest largely upon them? So, taking all of these things into consideration, I believe that it is my duty to vote for the bill which has the indorsement and approval of the President of the United States and all those connected with the War Department. To do otherwise would mean that I was opposed to making provision which would authorize our Commander in Chief to raise an army for the prosecution of this war.

As I stated in my remarks on the war resolution, billions of dollars will be required to defray the expenses of this war. Billions have already been appropriated. Whatever sum may be required must be paid, first or last, out of the pockets of the American people. This war is going to be a hard experience for all of our people. It will demand universal sacrifice, but this sacrifice should be as equitably apportioned as it is possible to be. It should not fall upon any one person in a way that means actual want and suffering while another is left untouched. Justice in taxation means equality in the effect of the tax upon the actual conditions of the people who pay it. It may be a far greater sacrifice for a person of small means to be taxed a few dollars than for one of wealth to be taxed very heavily. It will be just as much the duty of Congress to make provision for the raising of money with which to enable the President, who is Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, to prosecute this war as it is to make provision for the raising of an army with which to fight the battles of the war. It will become the duty of Congress, however unpleasant it may be, since the war has been declared and this additional expense is made absolutely necessary, to increase taxes, to levy new and additional taxes, and to pass many other war measures. No doubt the rate of tax on incomes will be greatly increased and the amount of exemptions reduced. Many things may be taxed which were never taxed before, as the expense of the great Army and Navy will be many times as much as it ever was before in the history of the Nation. Stamp taxes will be imposed, no doubt, on many things and articles not heretofore taxed during prior wars, but I hope and believe that it will all be done in a fair and equitable manner. But money is the smallest part of the probable cost. Far above money cost is the irrecoverable cost in men, that can not be measured by money; a loss which can not be computed in gold.

But when this measure is passed and put into operation by our Commander in Chief, the State of Alabama, which I represent in part, can be depended upon to furnish her full quota of brave and patriotic men as she has always done in the past, and they will discharge their duties in a manner creditable to themselves, the State, and the Nation. The eighth district of Alabama, which I have the honor to represent, embracing the beautiful Tennessee Valley, will furnish her full quota from her brave and gallant young men who will prove to be as fearless as any soldiers who ever marched upon a battle field. There will be no cowards or shirkers among them. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have not had anything to say on this legislation. I have refrained from participating in it for reasons fairly well known. The term of "conscript" is awfully odious to me. I suppose that feeling is sentimental, and I presume it is because I have lived most of my mental life in the history of the United States.

I voted to retain the volunteer system. I also voted to authorize Col. Roosevelt to raise a division for European service at once. Both of these provisions were stricken out, and, of course, nothing is left now to me except to stand by the Nation in war; and, therefore, I must vote for the conscript system, although it is hard to do so; but we must not declare war one day and refuse to raise an army the next day. I wish that the membership of this House would listen to the reading of a letter in the form of a call from Maj. Smith, of the Third Regiment of Ohio, in recruiting that regiment. I ask the fairness of this House, in justice to our sons who will serve their country on the field of battle, to put a ban upon such matters as this call suggests, for our boys will go into this war, and we do not want them branded, as this letter is doing. I want the unanimous consent that the Clerk may read this call, which is officially signed by the major of the Third Regiment of Ohio. It will accentuate our intense opposition to conscription, the uniform odium that surrounds this un-American system.

Mr. ALMON. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. FESS. I will.

Mr. ALMON. Do you not think it would be a credit to the young man who passes this examination and is selected as a soldier, and do you not think he would esteem it as an honor, and therefore should be referred to as a selected soldier and not as a conscript?

Mr. FESS. When our sons go to this war, if it be their lot thus to serve the Nation, I want them to be regarded as men who have gone at the call of their country, in order to save the honor, if not the life, of this Nation, and I do not want any brand to be placed upon them. [Applause.]

I would say that this article is in the newspaper owned by Gov. Cox, of my State, and published in my own district, and it is no reflection upon the governor, a former Member of this House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the article.

The Clerk read as follows:

URGENT APPEAL 'S ISSUED BY MAJ. SMITH—ARE YOU GOING TO VOLUNTEER OR BE A CONSCRIPT SOLDIER? IS ASKED.

Are you going to be a volunteer or a conscripted soldier? is the question you are confronted with if you are eligible for service.

Imminence of the selective-draft law is facing every man eligible for the service in the face.

There are only four days left before men will face the choice of joining by their own free will or by force.

The Third Regiment needs 400 men to bring it up to peace strength and 500 additional to reach the war-strength requirements.

Men who join now will have the opportunity of selecting the company in which they have the most friends. When the draft bill goes into effect, they will be put wherever the officer sees fit.

I personally would advise every man who is eligible for service to join immediately, and thereby be among the choice.

If you volunteer, you'll be treated as a gentleman by your fellow soldiers. If you're drafted, you'll be branded for life.

The man who joins now has every advantage over the man who waits. He will be fully equipped when he enters the service, and will not be subjected to the horrors of the concentration camp.

He will have the honor of being a volunteer, fighting for his country, and will not be placarded by his comrades with shame.

Will you act or will you wait until the Federal officer knocks at your door, while a jeering crowd stands without?

Maj. LEON E. SMITH.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. SMALL. I judge that is from an officer of the National Guard of Ohio seeking volunteers for the National Guard. Does not that indicate a lack of willingness on the part of Ohio to furnish its quota for the National Guard, and does it not make necessary the selective conscription in order to obtain an Army? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given five minutes more.

Mr. BURNETT. Does it not show that they have not been given a chance to volunteer?

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I think it is only fair that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] should have a minute in which to answer that question, but after the expiration of that time I am going to ask to close debate. We must get on.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's request is for an extension of time. How much?

Mr. HULBERT. Five minutes.

Mr. FESS. I do not want that much time.

Mr. HULBERT. Not exceeding five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the extension of the gentleman's time five minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENT. I think the gentleman ought to have time to answer.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I do not ask for five minutes, but I do ask for time to say this: That we here propose to conscript our boys and then attempt to exempt the boys on the farm. I have here seen men demand conscription and then vote to exempt their own people. We conscript our boys and then attempt to exempt those in the mines. We conscript our boys and then attempt to exempt those in the munition plants. Members have loudly demanded this conscript system and then, in crowds, walked between the tellers to vote an exemption of special classes. We do it by the selective draft. I want to know who speaks for the college boy and the boy who is preparing to be useful to his country? Is there anybody here? Have they no friends to speak for them—those that do not happen to be engaged in this or that profession or industry? I know sons who have nothing to offer but sound bodies and clean minds and pure hearts. Such boys make good soldiers, but I would like to have somebody speak for their honor as they go into the field. I do not dare in this place speak of rights of our sons, as we have been told over and over again that they have no rights.

Mr. TEMPLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. While I do not concede the inhuman philosophy thus announced, I do not want our sons to be called "conscripts," even though by your proposed enactment here you are fixing the stigma upon those who are denied the common rights never before questioned.

Mr. MAYS. Why do you call them conscripts?

Mr. FESS. I mean in the way in which this published call comes. It is the general attitude of the entire country toward conscription. Now, since we have decided for conscription, do we in this Congress want to put a ban or stigma such as that call places upon the boys who have no exemption? It is not fair; it is not just. These boys have no rights. It is not theirs to ask the question why; it is only theirs to do and die. [Applause.] If we deny our sons all rights, we can at least protect their good names while they tender their services and, it may be, their lives.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FESS. My time is up.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT].

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON]. The Clerk will first report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 10, line 17, after the word "States," insert the words "or State court."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. ALMON. It gives the State courts authority.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. ALMON. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 41, noes 61.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. ALMON: After the word "than," on line 18, page 10, strike out the word "three," and, on line 19, strike out the words "months nor more than one year" and insert in lieu thereof "not less than one month nor more than six months."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SEARS: Page 10, line 14, after the word "shall," strike out the word "willfully" and insert after the word "or" the words "without reasonable excuse."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. ROSE: Page 10, line 8, after the word "registration," insert "which proclamation or notice shall be published in one or more newspapers published in the district where such registration is to be made."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. WILSON of Texas: Page 10, line 10, after the word "act," insert the following: "And each person so registering shall at such time have the right to offer his services to the country for military duty during the period of the war, and a record of any such tender of services shall be made."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. McCLINTIC: Add at the end of the section, on line 2, page 4, the following proviso: "Provided, That all aliens who shall become citizens of the United States shall, upon becoming naturalized, be subject to military duty, and their names shall be certified to the proper authorities to be added to the list of those subject to be drawn for the Army."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a new section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BATHRICK: After line 2, on page 11, insert the following as a new section:

"That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to enlist and equip an army of not to exceed 1,000,000 male and female persons, to serve no longer than during the term of the war, or a lesser term if the President may so elect, as farm laborers. The President shall have power to prescribe all rules and regulations for enlistment, for duty assignment, for officers, for pay from farmers receiving the services of said persons, or otherwise: Provided, That no officer or private of the said agricultural army shall be eligible for retirement pay or pensions."

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that.

Mr. BATHRICK. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

SEVERAL MEMBERS. No!

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. MEEKER. I make the point of order.

Mr. BATHRICK. The Chairman has ruled. Now, gentlemen, I think it is needless to assume you are not familiar with this question of food and its important relation to the success of this war. The Agricultural Department and those gentlemen upon whom devolves the labor of accelerating the planting of foodstuffs this year are appealing to the farmers of this country. I think that is all they are doing. I do not intend to condemn them for doing no more than that, but I beg your attention to this matter. They are simply appealing to the farmers to plant more foodstuffs. Yet in 1915, with the greatest prize that could be hung up before anybody to give the last ounce of energy to raising more foodstuffs on the farm, we did not have enough. That incentive was the high prices, but it did not give us enough in 1915.

Now the news comes from the West that there is a short wheat supply. That means bread lines next winter in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, and our larger cities. This year the same incentive, only to a greater degree, is before all the farmers of this country to raise every pound of foodstuffs they can, and they are bending their backs to the task, but it is the price moving them more than the appeal. They are doing what they can to raise more, but it will be in vain, because they have not enough labor. Men high in the Agricultural Department are thoroughly familiar with the facts, and they say that we are now short 1,000,000 men for work upon the farms of this country. You can not get more foodstuffs without more labor. So I propose in this amendment that the President be simply authorized to do this thing. In no sense does it interfere with this bill. In no sense can it harm the operations of this bill in any of its provisions, and I appeal to the gentlemen of this House to vote this amendment into law so that the President of the United States may mobilize farm labor both male and female.

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BATHRICK. As briefly as possible.

Mr. MEEKER. Does the gentleman think the cause of the grain shortage is lack of help, or is it weather conditions?

Mr. BATHRICK. Oh, well, the weather conditions are one factor to be sure, but the shortness of help has left millions of acres in this country untilled; and if the gentleman has studied the question as long as I have, he certainly knows that is true. Now, let the President organize men to work on the farms. Central control in this matter is necessary. There are various classes of workers in this country who would make good farm laborers, who can not be used in the trenches, who can not be used to make up our regular Military Establishment, and they could be drawn on, and if properly mobilized under military control, and put where they could do the most good, we would have more foodstuffs.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATHRICK. No; I can not yield at this moment. We would feed ourselves, we would feed the allies, and thereby accomplish the greatest help that we can give them in this war. If you do not do it we will again be short of food supplies, and as sure as fate people will die of starvation in this country. I tell you, gentlemen, a few of you sit here and smile in the face of this great emergency. You do not understand, you do not comprehend the danger that confronts the people of this country, nor scent the near-by trail of famine. You have got to do something practical. An appeal is not enough. When boards of trade in cities are offering $3 a day for common labor, what chance is there to secure farm labor at $30 per month? You can appeal to people until you are black in the face, and you can not get enough of them to go.

Mr. LOBECK. Would this army of farm laborers be paid the same as soldiers?

Mr. BATHRICK. Agriculture is a business proposition, and they should get going wages.

Mr. LOBECK. How much would they get?

Mr. BATHRICK. I would ask the farmers to pay regular farm wages, and this great army I am talking about to provide this food supply will not cost this country one penny. I think they should get good wages, as I believe the soldiers of this country should have good wages. I believe the pay of private soldiers should be double what it is now, and I want farm labor to be well paid.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment be now closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BATHRICK].

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That the President is hereby authorized to utilize the service of any or all departments and any or all officers or agents of the United States, and of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, in the execution of this act, and all officers and agents of the United States and of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, are hereby required to perform such duty in the execution of this act as the President shall order or direct, and the officers and agents of the several States shall hereby have full authority for all lawful acts done by them in the execution of this act by the direction or request of the President. Any person charged as herein provided with the duty of carrying into effect any of the provisions of this act or the regulations made or directions given hereunder, who shall fail or neglect to perform such duty, and any person charged with such duty or having and exercising any authority under said act, regulations, or directions, who shall knowingly make or be a party to the making of any false or incorrect registration, physical examination, exemption, enlistment, enrollment, or muster, or any false or incorrect report or return pertaining to any registration, physical examination, exemption, enlistment, enrollment, or muster, and any person who shall make or be a party to the making of any false statement or certificate as to the fitness or liability of himself or any other person for service under the provisions of this act, or regulations made by the President thereunder, or otherwise evades or aids another to evade the requirements of this act or of said regulations shall, if not subject to military law, be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction in the proper district court of the United States, be punished by imprisonment for not less than six months nor more than one year; or, if subject to military law, shall be tried by court-martial and suffer such punishment as a court-martial may direct.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 12, in line 5, strike out the word "proper."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 6, after the word "States," insert the words "having jurisdiction thereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. As I recall, we have inserted a new section. The Hayden amendment is inserted as a new section.

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Ordinarily it is the duty of the Clerk in engrossing the bill to number the sections consecutively, regardless of what the committee or the House may do. I have looked through this bill and do not find any reference to a particular section except section 1, and in section 8 reference to section 7. I think it may make it a little easier for the Clerk if we renumber the sections after the Hayden amendment, and then when we come to section 8 change that reference.

Mr. DENT. I ask unanimous consent that the sections be renumbered in consecutive order, in accordance with the adoption of the Hayden amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, that will be done.

There was no objection.

Mr. DENT. I move that all debate on this section and amendments thereto be closed in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves that debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois: Page 12, line 4, after the word "regulations," insert the words—

"Or whoever shall speak or publish any words, language, or pictures referring to any person called into the military service under this act as a conscript or drafted person, intending to bring such person into public disrepute or disgrace."

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I make a point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with great care and attention to what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] said about this matter, and it impressed me as having a great deal of weight and merit. There ought not to be any stigma attached to persons who go into the military service under this act. It is just as well to put the law in such condition that there will be no stigma attached to it. We can by amendment make it impossible for them to be stigmatized by such articles as have been read from the newspaper, and like the placard or poster that was exhibited here this afternoon.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I will.

Mr. BLAND. I want to ask the gentleman if he does not think that the present policy of paying the postmaster $5 for each recruit inspires some of these advertisements that have been referred to?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I think so; and we ought early in the game, before there has been any move under this law, to make it impossible for anyone to speak in a slighting way of a person who is going out to serve his country under the provisions of this act. I have nothing more to say, except that I think that my amendment ought to be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois) there were 47 ayes and 85 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 11, after the word "States," add the words "and counties."

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 6, after the word "States," add the words "or State courts."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 11, after the word "than," strike out the words "six months nor more than one year" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one month nor more than six months."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment, which I offer as a new section.

Insert as a new section on page 12, line 10, the following:

"That no person, corporation, partnership, or association shall sell, supply, or have in his or its possession any intoxicating or spirituous liquors at any military station, cantonment, camp, fort, post, officers' or enlisted men's club, which is being used at the time for military purposes under this act, but the Secretary of War may make regulations permitting the sale and use of intoxicating liquors for medicinal purposes. Any person, corporation, partnership, or association violating the provisions of this section or the regulations made thereunder shall, unless otherwise punishable under the Articles of War, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, or imprisonment for not more than 12 months, or both.

"It shall be unlawful to sell, furnish, or give away any intoxicating liquor, including beer, ale, or wine, to any officer or member of the military forces while in uniform, or to knowingly furnish to such person or persons intoxicating liquors whether in uniform or not, or to any person in the employ of the Army."

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is not germane.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The point of order, Mr. Chairman, has been discussed, and I submit to a ruling by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that while there is some difference in detail between this amendment and the one formerly ruled on, the ruling should be the same, and the Chair therefore sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk, continuing the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 6. That the qualifications and conditions for voluntary enlistment as herein provided shall be the same as those prescribed by existing law for enlistments in the Regular Army, except that such recruits must be between the ages of 18 and 40 years at the time of their enlistment; and such enlistments shall be for the period of the emergency unless sooner discharged. All enlistments, including those in the Regular Army Reserve, which are in force on the date of the approval of this act and which would terminate during the emergency, shall continue in force during the emergency, unless sooner discharged; but nothing herein contained shall be construed to shorten the period of any existing enlistment: Provided, That all persons enlisted or drafted under any of the provisions of this act shall, as far as practicable, be grouped into units by States and the political divisions of the same: Provided further, That all persons who have enlisted since April 1, 1917, either in the Regular Army or in the National Guard, upon their application, shall be discharged upon the termination of the existing emergency.

The President may provide for the discharge of any or all enlisted men whose status with respect to dependents renders such discharge advisable; and he may also authorize the employment on any active duty of retired enlisted men of the Regular Army, either with their rank on the retired list or in higher enlisted grades, and such retired enlisted men shall receive the full pay and allowances of the grades in which they are actively employed.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That the qualifications and conditions for voluntary enlistment as herein provided shall be the same as those prescribed by existing law for enlistments in the Regular Army, except that recruits must be between the ages of 18 and 40 years at the time of their enlistment; and such enlistments shall be for the period of the emergency unless sooner discharged. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 14, after the word "that" insert the word "such."

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, my attention has been called to the fact that that amendment was put in out of an abundance of caution, in the committee. I really think the language was all right as it was, because there are no recruits referred to previous to that. I am willing to have that amendment rejected.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me it ought not to go in, but does not the gentleman want to insert the words "both inclusive" after the word "years"?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama desires the committee amendment to be rejected?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in line 15, after the word "years," by inserting the words "both inclusive."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 15, after the word "years" insert the words "both inclusive."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HILLIARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, may I ask that at the expiration of five minutes all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto be then closed?

Mr. HILLIARD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to proceed for 10 minutes, if I find it necessary. [Cries of "No!"]

Mr. DENT. I would be perfectly willing myself, but I do not think the committee would.

Mr. HILLIARD. I shall make the request anyway.

Mr. SWIFT. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Chairman, I desire about two minutes in which to present an amendment which I think the chairman of the committee will accept.

Mr. AUSTIN. And I desire to offer an amendment to this section.

Mr. DENT. Will two minutes be enough?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. DENT. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILLIARD. Mr. Chairman, if on the final vote this bill shall contain a provision by which the patriotism of the American people may have reasonable opportunity to be made manifest through the voluntary enlistment of its citizens, the time therefor to rest in the discretion of the President, I shall vote for it. Otherwise, although favoring in the main the other provisions, I shall find it consistent with my oath and my conception of the history of the Republic and the traditions of the people to cast my vote against the measure.

Mr. Chairman, democracy is but the name of that condition which obtains among men who are in the enjoyment of liberty. It is not something that is bestowed by those in authority, but rather is the growth resultant from the passion of the people to enjoy freedom. [Applause.] There have been many fields where democracy has flourished. Some have failed because the group was too small and the territory held not of sufficient extent to enable it to be maintained against the forces without. Some democracies have failed because they were not in truth democracies. The United States is the one place in the world where men have achieved liberty, and where the population is sufficiently strong numerically to withstand assaults from whatever source emanating, vast enough in territory, and rich enough in production that, if need be, can live within itself.

Many causes bring about democracies, but the student of history can not fail to see that the cruelties and devastations of war more than all other things combined have caused the people to throw off the power, by whatever name exercised, that without their consent could order them into battle. The world is not yet free from selfishness and men are prone to pursue the god of money, and the difference between the richest and the poorest in that regard is but one of opportunity. But no man is so rich but that he would give all his wealth for his life; and no man is so poor that he would yield his life for worldly wealth. The psalmist has truly said: "What a man hath, that will he give for his life." Life is the supreme concern.

It is idle to say that some contribute their brains, some raise food products, some produce munitions of war, some go to battle, and that all contribute alike. The man who furnishes money but extends the use of that which he does not need and for which he and his heirs will collect interest for the years to come. Those who produce the foodstuffs from their toil on the farms after all enjoy a prosperity brought about by war-time conditions that they would have under no other circumstances. And by the same token men employed in the factories receive such wages as never before were paid. But the men who are to be sent to the front, and who, in almost every instance, will receive much less than in civil life, will be required to hazard, not money, not property, but life itself.

Men may say that the individual shall not be considered, and whatever the Government wishes shall be his pleasure, but I undertake to say that men who advocate that doctrine have little conception of a democracy, and would, if subjects of the German Emperor, fitly grace his cabinet.

On the 5th of this month, in the early hours of the morning, when scarcely a seat in the Chamber of this great and numerous branch of the people's Congress was vacant, and when the galleries were filled as never before, there was a silence, a hush, said to obtain in the death chamber at Sing Sing. As a Representative in the Congress I had to determine my course then, and it was the most solemn moment of my life. I approached the solution at first as an American politician. And oh, what a shameful approach! And what a cowardly answer! It did not satisfy. Then I sought as a Congressman to make determination, when I quickly found myself coming to the same conclusion as I had in weighing the question as an American politician. In either case I could not help setting myself apart from the masses of the people, and I was not content.

Then I walked on the earth and touched elbows with the plain people. I listened to their heart throbs; I pictured their dreams, their hopes, their aspirations. I knew their love of liberty, their fear of God. I saw clearly how they deprecated the great war in Europe, and how, could their prayers have been answered, not a shot would have been fired, not a life taken, not a drop of blood shed. They appreciated that it was not theirs to say who should prevail in the struggle of death and destruction which grew out of the edicts, purposes, and schemes of crowned heads in Europe, and their hope was that the people there, tiring sometime of the oppressions of selfish and base rulers and ruthless interests, would see the light of democracy as it shone forth from this land of the free, and emulating our people, would themselves be free. Thus comprehending, my course became clear, and when I cast my vote against declaring war I was never so in accord with the common man and so in harmony with God. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the General Staff of the Army, created by law, which the Congress of a free people passed, now arrogates to itself the power to determine the form and substance of laws, to comply with which many men must yield life itself. Shall I, as a free Representative of a free constituency, yield obedience to this little band of presuming gentlemen and at their behest vote for a conscription law and at the same time do violence to my own convictions on the subject, as well as tear away the foundation stones of the traditions of a free people? Gentlemen have said here that we should follow the President.

Why, gentlemen, the President himself may be but the victim of the General Staff of the Army, and having succeeded for the moment in dimming his vision of democracy, the same agency hopes to prevail upon Congress to surrender its convictions. Gentlemen, let us stand forth as sponsors of a free people and show our independence, and we will encourage the President in his, and together we will save to the people, our own American people, if you please, their liberties, their traditions, and their very lives. I wonder if it ever occurred to gentlemen who speak so glibly of the determination of the War Department as to just whose country this is. This is a people's country, inhabited by free men, long used to the enjoyment of liberty, and who, though their representatives in Congress may yield their rights so far as they can, will in their own good time and in a perfectly constitutional and effective manner restore them all.

Men engaged in inflaming the minds of the people that they may consummate their own wicked purposes direct their batteries against the Kaiser. They feign not to know and would have the people never learn that the Kaiser, wicked and tyrannical as he may be, is after all only the instrument in his part of the world through which the moneyed oligarchy plies its evil trade. Germany will not be free when it has only thrown over the Kaiser. It will be free when it is able to cast out the money changers. So with the other powers of Europe which are now enthralled under the yoke of monarchical government; likewise our own country.

Kings may be tyrannical or benevolent, but they are retained, fostered, kept alive that wicked and designing men behind the scenes may visit tax burdens and reap a rich collection of spoils. This country of ours, unhampered with kings, yielding obedience only to the principles of democracy, rich in resources, proud of its history, has to-day within its borders thousands of starving people and millions of other people who can barely obtain the necessities of life. These conditions, Mr. Chairman, are not due to the crowned heads of Europe, the English King, the Russian Czar, or the German Kaiser. They are due, and wholly due, to the damnable conspiracy of the consolidated money power of the world, and which in this country has its lair in Wall Street. And, Mr. Chairman, so far as this country was concerned, the war was fostered by this very oligarchy, which, grown rich through the suffering, privation, and needs of the peoples of Europe, and fearing that out of the result of that war their investments in allied securities, aggregating billions, would be endangered, and knowing that at its conclusion the profits they had enjoyed during its progress would cease—this very oligarchy, through as wicked a purpose as ever prompted man to lie in wait in the dark to cut the throat of his fellow man, urged this country to enter a war, with the commencement of which it had no part, that their profits—and oh, such conscienceless profits—might continue for another term of years.

I warn them to beware. This country and its institutions are in no danger from any source except from the wickedness of certain interests within, and my faith is that while these interests are powerful for the moment, that in comparison with all the people they are so few in number that the righteous will rise in their might and drive into the sea those who have brought about in a peace-loving Republic the horrors and fears of war, and will not permit their sons to be slaughtered that the money power of the world may realize its hopes. [Applause.] For, Mr. Chairman, the ultimate scheme of the money interests is to distribute the debts of this war, heretofore contracted and hereafter to be made, among all the people of the world and to cause them to be impoverished all the days of the generations to come; and the further purpose is to enforce the collection thereof through a combination of standing armies, not the least of which is to be kept and maintained in this free Republic.

Mr. Chairman, many Members, while professing to admire the volunteer soldier and to abhor conscription, have, nevertheless, announced their intention to vote for conscription, because they say the President wishes that plan to be adopted. I know that to men who have not stout hearts there is no refuge like a strong temple, and just now they look upon the President as the citadel of protecting power; but I know as well that when the storm shall break and the temple is threatened, and when only strong men will stay to stem the tide, these same men will desert the President. And if the supreme test comes, and the struggle in this country shall be to maintain constitutional government, and when the men here who stand for constitutional government shall be engaged shoulder to shoulder with the President to maintain it, then these very men who profess such allegiance to the President now will be the first to take to the bushes of darkness.

Gentlemen, let us not forget that this is a free country. We should not lose sight of the picture or the effect it will have on the minds of the people when the taxgatherer shall come in the morning and knock at an humble door and the father shall open it—the father who has been upright, honest, and hard working, whose hair is grayed, whose face is wrinkled, his shoulders stooped—and is required to give up the little he has. And then in the afternoon, when a sergeant and four troopers shall knock at that same humble cottage door and it is opened by the mother, whose temples are prematurely whitened, in whose eyes there is that distressed look of the mother who has sacrificed every personal comfort that she might rear a family in liberty, secure from the domination of European military service, haunted now by a fear she never knew before, and is told to yield up her first born, the boy on whose face there is the first growth of down and whose voice is just beginning to be like father's—Mr. Chairman, with these people free and having the right to vote it does not require a prophet to determine what will take place in this country. Mr. Chairman, I am no pacifist nor do I come from that kind of blood. History does not record, for they were an humble people, but the fact remains that men of my blood and name have served as volunteers in every war that this country ever had; and if my brethren from the South will pardon, I should like to say always on the historically right side. My father was a volunteer and private soldier in Company B, Thirty-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, a regiment commanded by the late Gen. John C. Black, than whom a more constant Democrat nor more distinguished citizen never had a seat in this House and as gallant a soldier as ever drew a sword. Mr. Chairman, and with this I conclude, shall I, the first of my blood measureably to emerge from obscurity, do violence to the liberty for which my forebears fought? Never! I am free, made free by the blood of men who dared all and defied every autocrat; and, being free, I refuse to have part in making slaves of other men. [Applause.]

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SANFORD: Page 13, after line 3, insert "and all persons who have enlisted in the National Guard since June 3, 1916."

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Chairman, when the national-defense act of June 3, 1916, went into effect it absorbed under its provisions the militia organizations of the several States, but made very radical changes in the relation of the members of these organizations to the Federal Government.

Then came the emergency which required the presence on the Mexican border of all available men, and almost before the provisions of the new law could be understood the men in the old militia organizations of the States came forward and without asking too many questions offered themselves unreservedly for this service. They did not hesitate to sign the new form of oath required of each and every one of them. They did not count the cost to themselves, their families, or their future. They were soldiers. After that emergency had passed they came home and began for the first time to ask questions about their obligations to the Government, only to find that they were bound as hired soldiers to hold themselves in readiness to respond at all times during a six-year enlistment that they had in many cases at least entered on unconsciously.

If the present emergency should last but two years, these particular soldiers will come out of the war with years of soldier service to look forward to. This is contrary to the spirit of this bill, the averred purpose of which is to place obligations equally on all. The bill now provides that those who have enlisted this month or who shall enlist hereafter in the National Guard may be discharged after the present emergency. The purpose of my amendment is to assure the old and faithful members of the guard that when this war is over they, too, are free.

One dares to hope that by that time the new system which recognizes the universal character of the liability to service will be firmly established and that there will be no need for Federal reliance on State troops.

The men of the National Guard need no urging to come forward at this time, but they are entitled to this earnest of fair treatment.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state that the gentleman from New York submitted that amendment to me, and I think it is only fair for the National Guard that it be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. AUSTIN: At the end of line 13, page 13, insert:

"Provided, That on and after April 1, 1917, the basic pay of all enlisted men during the continuance of war shall be increased $15 a month over and above the rates of pay as fixed by law proper for times of peace: Provided, further, That this rate of pay shall apply to enlisted men of the National Guard called or drafted into the service of the United States during the war."

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that I do not think that amendment should come in as an amendment to that section.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. DENT. Section 9 of the bill is the one that provides for pay and allowances. I think it would be very much more appropriate as an amendment there.

Mr. AUSTIN. If I can have the gentleman's support, I would just as soon offer it later as now.

Mr. DENT. Well, I do not know. I could not promise the gentleman that I would support it, and I hope the gentleman will wait until we reach section 9.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment for the present.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 1, after the word "same" strike out the semicolon and insert "and shall not be assigned to duty in any European country except they expressly volunteer for such service."

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Chairman, if you will give me just a few minutes I will not take up the five minutes. I want to say this——

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I understood the committee ordered the time closed in 10 minutes. How much of that time has been consumed I do not know.

The CHAIRMAN. That was a unanimous-consent agreement. The gentleman's amendment can be voted upon but the time for debate has closed.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may proceed for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the House is committed to this bill, which is now a conscript bill, I shall vote against the Kahn amendment, and I would like to perfect this bill so that I can vote for it, but I can not vote for it so long as there is no provision in the bill which will encourage volunteering.

If we will insert in this bill a provision that the Army of the United States will not be assigned to duty in foreign lands, we will have all the volunteers we need, and you will take the sting out of your conscription, so that it will meet the approval of the American people. As it is, it is absolutely obnoxious, and will not meet with the approval of the country, and I fear will be a failure.

Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 1, after the word "same," strike out the semicolon and insert "and shall not be assigned to duty in any European country, except they volunteer for such service."

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment for the purpose and desire to perfect this bill so that it will more nearly meet what I believe to be the sentiment of the people of the country, and especially of those in my district.

Earlier in the day, by a vote of the committee, it became evident that the membership of the House is overwhemingly in favor of "selective conscription" as against "voluntary enlistment" as the best method of raising an army for the prosecution of the war, in which we have most unfortunately become involved. It is needless to say that I think this is a serious mistake.

So far as I have been able to learn it is not resorted to in any country except as a last resort, and conscription has always been very objectionable everywhere, and especially in this country, and whenever resorted to has met with great opposition.

This is no doubt due to the fact that we have been teaching and proclaiming against militarism and military service, and especially compulsory military service, but, rather, have been boasting of our liberties and freedom. For this reason I have been strongly in favor of voluntary enlistment.

It has, however, apparently been decided that what we want is not a volunteer army but an army raised by selective conscription, for it is asserted in this way each State and every community will bear an equal burden and it will be possible to conserve our resources and develop the greatest possible strength.

The bill provides and it is the purpose of the administration to exempt from the draft those engaged in raising and producing the things needed for the prosecution of the war and only draft those who can be spared, and especially those not at work in needful occupations or perhaps not at work at all.

The exemptions are to include miners, railroad men, farmers, and so on, and especially those engaged in industries necessary for the maintenance of the Military Establishment of the country.

It is also hoped that rich and poor alike shall serve with absolutely no preference shown whatever.

This plan of selective conscription has been very widely commented on, and as a result many letters and telegrams have been received by Members urging the adoption of the plan.

It can not be denied that the plan is an ideal one in theory, and I hope will prove successful in its practical application, but I notice that those most insistent for its adoption, those writing and wiring, practically all belong to the classes that hope to be exempt from the draft.

Now, it is evident that all can not be exempt; if so, no army could be raised. What I am concerned about is what will those think about it who will be drafted.

It has been asserted time and again, and just as often denied, that we can not raise an army of sufficient size by the volunteer system. If our people are not enlisting there is a reason for it. I am sure they are not lacking in patriotism nor love of country. In my judgment, we need not go far to find the reason. In the first place, the President has not as yet issued a call for volunteers. While efforts have been made to get recruits for the Army with rather poor results, the truth is that the term of enlistment is entirely too long. Men do not care to leave their positions and their homes to enlist for seven years, except where there is an actual crisis confronting the Nation or when our country is in danger of invasion.

Nor do many of our men care to enlist to fight in foreign countries and fight the battles of other nations which this country and especially the men who do the fighting had no part or responsibility in bringing about.

If the enlistments are to be for service in this country and only for the duration of the war there is no question but that the response will be quick, immediate, and in sufficient numbers for our every requirement.

As I have said, I believe the draft will be extremely objectionable—of course, only to those that are drafted—but if you will adopt my amendment it will be less so, because it will prevent them from being sent to the battle fields of Europe unless they themselves elect to go.

I sincerely hope and plead most earnestly in behalf of the men who will be drafted that you adopt this amendment. Do not send them to Europe without their consent. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KRAUS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a new section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. KRAUS: Insert immediately at the end of section 6 as a new section the following:

"That all persons who are employed by employers of the classes hereinafter stated shall not on enlistment lose any right of seniority or right to old-age pension, or interest in any insurance fund they may have acquired by reason of the discontinuance of their service to and with such employer during the period of the present war. The employers hereinbefore referred to are any and all corporations, associations, organizations, partnerships, firms, and individuals who are engaged in the transportation of interstate or foreign commerce, or in the manufacture or sale of commodities that are the subject and become articles of barter, exchange, or sale in interstate or foreign commerce, and who at the time of the enlistment of such employee are maintaining a system of seniority to determine the present or future rights or emoluments of their employees, or are maintaining an old-age pension fund, or are maintaining an employees' insurance fund. On request made by such employee he shall be reinstated in the service of such employer, in the grade and with the rank as to seniority rights and old-age pension rights and insurance rights that he held at the time of his enlistment: Provided, That such employee shall make application for reinstatement in the service of such employer within three months after his discharge from the armed forces of the Government."

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. On what ground?

Mr. DENT. On the ground it is not germane to the bill.

Mr. KRAUS. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that it takes care of the positions of the enlisted men after their terms of enlistment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say, after running through the amendment, it does not look to the Chair to be germane and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. KRAUS. Mr. Chairman, I submit, of course, to the ruling of the Chair, but I would like to have one minute upon this.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I object—I withdraw the objection.

Mr. KRAUS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have your attention expressly for less than one minute. The purpose and intention of this amendment is merely to protect the positions the men hold at the time they join our new army so far as their rights of seniority and old-age pensions are concerned in companies that are maintaining such departments and fixing relative rights of their men at this time, by seniority methods, provided within 90 days after the end of the term of enlistment they apply for reinstatement. In other words, you merely put them back at the point they left.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That the appointments authorized and made as provided by the second, third, fourth, fifth, and sixth paragraphs of section 1 and by section 7 of this act, and the temporary appointments in the Regular Army authorized by the first paragraph of section 1 of this act, shall be for the period of the emergency, unless sooner terminated by discharge or otherwise. The President is hereby authorized to discharge any officer from the office held by him under such appointment for any cause which, in the judgment of the President, would promote the public service; and the general commanding any division and higher tactical organization or territorial department is authorized to appoint from time to time military boards of not less than three nor more than five officers of the forces herein provided for to examine into and report upon the capacity, qualifications, conduct, and efficiency of any commissioned officer within his command other than officers of the Regular Army holding permanent or provisional commissions therein. Each member of such board shall be superior in rank to the officer whose qualifications are to be inquired into, and if the report of such board be adverse to the continuance of any such officer, and be approved by the President, such officer shall be discharged from the service at the discretion of the President with one month's pay and allowances.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that, in line 12, page 14, he offer an amendment to strike out the words "section 7" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the last preceding section."

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I accept that. I overlooked it. That is in line with the suggestion the gentleman made a little while ago.

Mr. MANN. It is no longer section 7.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that that change may be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the change indicated may be made. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 12, strike out the words "section 7" and insert the words "the last preceding section."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the formal amendment to strike out the last two words, if it is in order at this time. Mr. Chairman, I desire just one minute's time upon this amendment merely to say that I earnestly, honestly, and heartily believe in the volunteer system, and so voted, and to the best of my ability for a short time addressed the committee.

I agree with the Speaker of the House, and this perhaps is the only opportunity I may have to say so, that the Committee of the Whole House by a decided majority having turned down the volunteer system, while I would be glad if I could by my vote reinstate it and put it in the bill and pass it, yet I am up against this proposition: As the volunteer system is to go out, evidently, by the action of the House and Senate as well, I can not vote against giving the power to draft, because it is that or nothing, and I am for an efficient Army under existing conditions. [Applause.]

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman about a section already passed. I intended to ask it then, but I did not have the opportunity. Section 7 says:

That the President is authorized to appoint for the period of the existing emergency such general officers of appropriate grades as may be necessary for duty with brigades, divisions, and higher units in which the forces provided for herein may be organized by the President and the general officers of appropriate grade for the several Coast Artillery districts.

I wanted to ask the gentleman if that gives the President authority to appoint a general above the grade of major general? Is that the intention?

Mr. DENT. No.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It does not?

Mr. DENT. No.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It says "appropriate grades as may be necessary for duty with brigades, divisions, and higher units." For a higher unit than a division the appropriate grade would be lieutenant general, would it not?

Mr. DENT. I confess my attention had not been called to that language. I had overlooked it, but it was not the intention of the committee to allow the appointment of anybody but a major general.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I was going to suggest that to the gentleman. Under this section it occurs to me that the President can appoint lieutenant generals to command the corps and can appoint a full general to command an army.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Or field marshal.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Not a field marshal, because I understand we have no such thing. Now, the grades of lieutenant general and of general have been reserved in all our history for military men of very distinguished ability and conspicuous service in time of war. Gen. Grant, and maybe Gen. Sherman and Gen. Sheridan, were made full generals. Gen. Miles was made a lieutenant general. McArthur, I am told, was a lieutenant general. But I take it it is not the purpose of this House to authorize the President right out of hand to appoint lieutenant generals, and certainly not to appoint full generals.

Mr. DENT. It certainly was not the purpose of this committee to have it done, because the present law limits the appointment of major generals, and there was nothing expressly in the law, unless the point the gentleman calls attention to would make a change in it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I ask unanimous consent to revert to section 7 and insert "their appropriate grade not above the grade of major general."

Mr DENT. I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, it is out of order because the section I am speaking of now has been passed.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to refer to section 7 for the purpose of amending it by adding on page 13, line 16, after the word "grades," the words "not above major general."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to return to the section indicated for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. DENT. To have it read "not above the rank of major general."

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, suppose it should happen that we were sending an army of 100,000 or half a million over to the other side of the water, does not the gentleman from Alabama think that we ought to have an officer to command them of as high a rank as any officer in the French or English Army, rather than to put our troops under the orders of an English or French general?

Mr. DENT. I will state to the gentleman that this question was not presented to the committee in any manner, shape, or form, except there has been a proposal to change the law in another bill which would provide for the reestablishment of the rank of general and lieutenant general, but the committee has not considered that at all. It ought to be considered in another bill.

Mr. MANN. I am not in favor myself of writing such a provision in this bill as a part of this law, which we may be called upon to change next week. And if we are ever to send an army over to France we ought to send a general in command of them who will be on equal terms with the generals in the foreign armies. [Applause.]

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my request to return to the section.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOOD of Indiana: Page 15, line 8, after the word "allowance," insert the following:

"Provided, That all commissioned officers of the National Guard when mustered into the service of the United States, without regard to the length of time they may have served in an inferior rank, shall receive as pay for their said services, as long as they are engaged in the service of the United States, the same emolument that is paid officers of like rank in the Regular Army of the United States."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I offered this amendment for this reason, that when officers of the National Guard are enlisted into the Regular Service that they shall receive the same emolument——

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL. What pay would they get without this provision?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I was going to explain to the gentleman. This was the practice during the late unpleasantness in Mexico. A member of the National Guard, when taken into the Regular Army, if he was serving as captain at the time he was mustered into the Regular Service, unless he had served three years as lieutenant, would not receive the pay of a captain in the service of the United States until the time he served as captain added to that he had served as first lieutenant amounted to three years' service as first lieutenant. He is charged with all the responsibility of a captain; he is charged with all the duties of a captain, but receiving the pay of a lieutenant. That is absolutely unfair, and it occurs to me that the very suggestion is sufficient to warrant that such a wrong be cured.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Is the gentlemen well informed that men who were in the National Guard and drafted into the Federal Service for duty on the Mexican border did not receive the pay of the grade for which they were commissioned?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I know absolutely what I am talking about, and I cite one instance where a captain of the Medical Corps who had served about a year and a half as a lieutenant in that corps became captain immediately on his being mustered into the United States service and received one month's pay as captain, and then they discovered there was a law prohibiting that thing until his length of time should amount to a three-year service as first lieutenant. And he served all the rest of the time until they were called back from the border and only received the pay of first lieutenant.

Mr. MANN. Does not the next section cover it?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not think it does.

Mr. MANN. The next section provides he shall receive the pay of the corresponding grade in the Regular Army. Of course, the pay of the Regular Army captain is increased after five years' length of service. That National Guardsman would receive only the basic pay, but he would receive the basic pay of a captain under that provision. That is perfectly clear.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. May I inquire of the gentleman whether this case that the gentleman referred to was the case of a man belonging to the Medical Reserve Corps before he was mustered into the Federal service?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes, sir.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Was he not commissioned as of the grade he had in the Medical Reserve Corps?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No. He was mustered in as a captain; but from the fact that he had not served three years as a lieutenant he received only the pay of a lieutenant, although he was discharging all the duties and resonsibilities of the rank he held.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. As a member of the Medical Reserve Corps, he was not a member of the National Guard. He was then in the Federal service, at that time, and subject to all the regulations to which a Federal Army officer is subject.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. He was of the grade of captain.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. He was not a member of the National Guard.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not care whether he was a member of the National Guard or not. If he was charged with the responsibility of a captain, he ought to receive the pay of a captain.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and amendments thereto shall close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves that all debate on this section and amendments thereto be closed. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That all officers and enlisted men of the forces herein provided for, other than the Regular Army, shall be in all respects on the same footing as to pay, allowances, and pensions as officers and enlisted men of corresponding grades and length of service in the Regular Army.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from Maryland a member of the committee?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I am not.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from Iowa a member of the committee?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HULL of Iowa: "Page 15, line 13, change the period to a colon and add: 'Provided, That during the continuance of the war with Germany the pay of the enlisted men of the forces herein provided for shall be $30 per month, and that each enlisted man in the forces herein provided for shall for such time as he shall serve in the military service of the United States during the continuance of said war receive the monthly pay of $30 a month.'"

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. DENT. I understand the gentleman reserves a point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order against the amendment. Does the gentleman desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. MANN. I think it is subject to a point of order, but I leave that to the Chair. However, I do not believe in discriminating against those who are drafted into the service as is done in the amendment that is proposed.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer a substitute or amendment which meets the objection made by the gentleman from Illinois. I offer my substitute now. It is in the hands of the Clerk. It meets the criticism or objection of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GOOD. Let us settle the point of order first. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be heard. Section 8 provides that the pay of the force herein provided for shall be the same pay as is provided for the enlisted men in the Regular Army. I think perhaps this amendment is subject to a point of order in this: It not only increases the pay of the force herein provided for but also increases the pay of the Regular Army enlisted man.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that the effect of the amendment at the desk?

Mr. GOOD. I think it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. AUSTIN. I ask, Mr. Chairman, that my amendment be now presented.

Mr. GOOD. I offer the following amendment. The gentleman can offer his as a substitute later.

Mr. AUSTIN. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee has offered a substitute to the pending amendment. Of course, that could not be offered as a substitute to the amendment, because the amendment is held to be out of order.

Mr. GOOD. I offer an original amendment.

Mr. AUSTIN. Then, I offer mine as a substitute for his amendment.

Mr. GOOD. Let the amendment be read, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GOOD: Page 15, line 13, change the period to a colon and add:

"Provided, That during the continuance of the war with Germany the pay of the enlisted men of the forces of the United States herein provided for other than the Regular Army shall be $30 a month, and each enlisted man of the forces herein provided for other than the Regular Army shall for such time as he shall serve in the military service of the United States during the continuance of said war receive the monthly pay of $30 a month."

The CHAIRMAN. To which amendment the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] offers an amendment, which can be reported at this time. The Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered as a substitute by Mr. AUSTIN: At the end of line 13, page 15, insert:

"Provided, That on and after April 1, 1917, the basic pay of all enlisted men during the continuance of the war shall be increased $15 over and above the rate of pay proper fixed by law in time of peace: Provided further, That this rate of pay shall apply to enlisted men of the National Guard called or drafted into the service of the United States during the war."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of the substitute offered by the gentleman from Tennessee to the amendment I have offered. The substitute was clearly subject to a point of order. My amendment was not subject to a point of order, but no point of order having been made against the substitute I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee will prevail. It accomplishes just what I desired to accomplish. Gentlemen, we are transacting serious business in this House to-night. Let no one underestimate its importance. I ask you to vote for the substitute to my amendment. We are conscripting 1,000,000 of men from the farms and the factories and the places of business throughout the United States.

We are providing that the conscripted man when in the military service of the United States shall receive pay of but $15 a month. Canada, right across the line, a people speaking the same language and having the same aspirations, pays her enlisted men $33 a month and makes provision for the soldier's family. Should we do less for our boys?

Mr. SIMS. The Canadian soldiers are volunteers.

Mr. GOOD. We ought, at least, gentlemen, to place the enlisted man on the same footing that we place capital. I have before me the report of the hearing before the committee on seacoast fortifications. Gentlemen, I ask you not to interrupt. We are sending these boys to the trenches. Let us be fair with them, because you will have to answer to the father and the mother, who will have to hire some one to take the place of the boy who goes to the front, and they will have to pay more than $15 a month. We fixed the pay at $15 a month when the average rate of pay to the farm hand in the United States was about $15 a month and board. To-day there is hardly a farming community in the United States where the farm hand does not receive more than $30 a month, up to as much as $45 a month and board. I have here a statement made before the Committee on Seacoast Fortifications as to what we are doing for industry. We are buying limbers for 3-inch guns from the manufacturers, and we have never bought one for less than $1,586. We are manufacturing the same thing in the arsenals of the United States, and have never manufactured one that cost us more than $686. You say to the manufacturer, "The price of your patriotism shall be 300 per cent profit," but you say to the enlisted man and to the drafted man whom you send into the trenches to receive shot and shell of the manufacturer, "The price of your patriotism shall be a loss of from two to three times your earning capacity." Is it fair? Is it just? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. DENT. I would like to have an agreement, if we can possibly reach it, that the debate on this proposition may close in a reasonable time.

Mr. AUSTIN. I want five minutes.

Mr. MANN. I just want a minute or two. I have a problem for you that you can not either one of you answer.

Mr. DENT. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this proposition close in 10 minutes.

Mr. MANN. The time I want to use will be neither for nor against the proposition. I should like to have a little more time, because I want to ask a question.

Mr. BARNHART. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman from Alabama include me in that 10 minutes for 5 minutes?

Mr. DENT. The gentleman from Alabama is not specifying anybody, but is leaving recognition to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. BARNHART. I shall object unless I can have 5 minutes. I have not taken 10 minutes time of the committee in all this discussion.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Move to close debate.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that we certainly could get a vote on this bill by this hour. This is a proposition that I think ought to be left for the consideration of the committee in an independent bill and not in this particular measure, and I am going to move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be closed in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves that debate on this section and all amendments thereto close at the expiration of 15 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I made the point of order a moment ago against one of the amendments that was offered, because it provided for an increase in the pay of enlisted men. I supposed that some one would have an amendment couched in proper language. Two amendments have been offered since then, both proposing to increase the pay of the enlisted men, but no increase of pay for the drafted man. Now, of course, at present all men in the Army below commissioned officers are enlisted men; but when you provide for an army of a million men by enlistment and another million by drafting, the gentleman's amendment would not reach the men who are drafted but would only reach the men in the Regular Army and the National Guard. I am not in favor of that discrimination.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman understands that the language of the bill was followed.

Mr. MANN. The language of the bill that was followed was not the language of the bill that is to be passed, and even if the bill was passed in the form in which it was brought in, if anybody had been drafted he would not have received an increase in pay. I do not know what terms should be used, but I am very certain you will not increase the pay of the men who are drafted by calling them enlisted men, because they are not.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I heartily indorse this amendment, and if it is not sufficient to provide the additional pay for the conscripted men as well as the volunteers, it ought to be put in such form that it will do so.

Mr. AUSTIN. I want to suggest, if the gentleman will permit me, that it does cover the drafted men, and this amendment was drawn by an official of the War Department.

Mr. BARNHART. My religious training and conviction, both by inheritance and by adoption, has always convinced me that the practice of nations going to war to determine questions of state by seeing which side can pile up the dead and wounded the highest is wrong; that our 2,000 years of Christian civilization ought to have found a humane way to settle such disputes. But we are attacked by an enemy, who blows up our ships and kills our people; and I am in favor not only of providing all the men necessary by volunteers, if possible, because that, I believe, is the patriotic way, but by conscription if necessary. Then, back of it all I want to see this Government, great and rich and resourceful as it is, furnish the means to pay the men who go to the front to fight its battles for it, at least as much money as men can earn at home who are left out of danger to continue in the vocations that will furnish them prosperity not only for the present, but after the war is over when the soldier boys are out of their jobs, and I hope, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment will prevail. [Applause.]

I said I favor trying the volunteer plan. I do this because we have not yet given the patriotic manhood of our country the privilege of volunteering their services during this war. No such call has been issued, for there is no law now to that effect. I favor trying the volunteer plan while we are putting conscription into effect, which, we are told, will require four to six months' time. During this time I believe thousands and thousands would volunteer and be put into immediate training. I favor trying the volunteer system because it will put men of the same States and communities into the same companies and regiments. I favor the volunteer privilege, at least long enough to enable all who want the honor of volunteering their services to do so.

But if this bill is amended so as to preclude the possibility of volunteering in this special service there is no other method but conscription, and I will vote for it, for we must furnish the soldiers necessary to protect our interests against an enemy which, if it could, would change our principles of liberty to a system of government which thousands of our German citizens left across the ocean to find more acceptable conditions here. [Applause.]

Let us pay the men who must do our fighting as much as laboring men earn at home, where they will be out of danger. This amendment will not do that, but it is a step in that direction, and there should not be one vote on this floor against it. [Applause.]

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I just want to call the attention of the House to the fact that we are raising the pay of the enlisted privates to a sum equivalent to $9 more a month than is paid to a common corporal; and I want to offer a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN], which substitute I send to the desk.

Mr. GOOD. We increased the pay of corporals in the last appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ZIHLMAN as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. AUSTIN: On page 15, section 9, line 13, strike out the period following the word "army" and insert a colon and the words:

"Provided, That hereafter the monthly pay of sergeants of the Regular Army shall be not less than $50, of corporals not less than $40, of privates not less than $33 per month: And provided further, That nothing in this section shall be so construed as to reduce the pay of any noncommissioned officer."

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, there are pending before the Military Committee numerous propositions for the amendment of the general law covering the military affairs of this country, and among them is a proposition to increase the pay of the enlisted men and the noncommissioned officers. Under these circumstances, in view of the fact that this provision says that they shall have the same pay, by taking care of that kind of a bill asked for by the War Department we can do the thing in a scientific way.

Mr. LANGLEY. This proposition is not only just but is an essential part of the emergency with which we are dealing and ought not to be delayed. Can the gentleman assure us that his committee will act promptly and favorably upon it?

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman say whether the General Staff has recommended that?

Mr. DENT. It has.

Mr. BURNETT. I thought that they recommended only an increase of brigadier generals. [Laughter.]

Mr. DECKER. Does the statement meet the approval of the chairman? Because there are many of us that want to see the pay of the private soldier increased and do not want to embarrass the passage of the bill. We do insist that the men that are going forth to fight the battles of the country shall have pay commensurate with the wealth of this great Nation, and if the bill is not going to be reported soon we want to pass this thing now. [Applause.]

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my substitute by adding four or five additional words.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the modification.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "men" in the second line of the substitute the words "with the rate of enlisted men," so that the modified substitute will read: "Provided, That on and after April 1, 1917, the basic pay of all men with the rate of enlisted men during the continuance of the war shall be increased $15 a month over and above the rates of pay proper as fixed by law for times of peace: Provided further, That this rate of pay shall apply to the enlisted men of the National Guard called or drafted into the service of the United States during the war.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment as reported at the desk. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I submitted this proposed amendment or substitute to the officials of the War Department. The General Staff, or rather a member of the General Staff, drew this amendment for me, and every word of it except the words added by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is in the exact language of said official. So it is regular, it is proper, it is practical; just what the department would draw for the Committee on Military Affairs for any bill the committee might consider and report carrying the same increase of pay. To pass this amendment does not mean the delay of the pending military bill. It means justice to the men who are going out to fight for the Republic. [Applause.] Every man who volunteers or is drafted makes a great sacrifice for his country. He sacrifices his time, he sacrifices his present wages, ah, he may sacrifice his life. The pay of our private soldiers in times of peace and war remains where it stood practically 20 years ago in the Spanish-American War. Fairness and justice demand this increase. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I earnestly hope this amendment will prevail. We are organizing an army which may be sent to the trenches of Europe under different conditions than it has ever been organized before. Heretofore the private soldier has received $15 per month, which is entirely insufficient; but he enlisted at his own free will. These men are now being brought to the service of their country under different circumstances and conditions; they are to fight the battles of this country, and we must and will win the victory. And it seems to me the private soldier should be encouraged in every way possible. They should receive additional and more pay. This Government should show its appreciation for the services these men are to render in the great war in which we are now engaged. I hope the amendment will prevail. [Applause.]

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the committee to indulge me for one minute?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, there is a proposition pending before the Committee on Military Affairs to increase the pay of the private soldier. It is a big question. There is great discrimination between the pay of some noncommissioned officers and other noncommissioned officers. It is a question that ought to be worked out in detail. The Secretary of War has said that he was in favor of increasing the pay. I have no right to speak for the committee on the subject, but I do think that this is not the proper time to pass upon a subject of this magnitude.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for half a minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for half a minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if we put this into this bill and then the Committee on Military Affairs brings in a bill covering the subject, the House will welcome the opportunity to consider that bill, and in the meanwhile this question will be sewed up. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the committee is this: The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] offered an amendment, and to that the gentleman from Tennessee offered a substitute. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN] has offered an amendment to the substitute. The first question is on the amendment to the substitute, offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment to the substitute be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the substitute.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were 257 ayes and no noes.

So the substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment as amended by the substitute.

The question was taken, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as an additional section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. CLARK of Florida: Amend, on page 15, by adding a new section after line 13, to be known as section 9½, as follows:

"SEC. 9½. That as soon as the existing war with Germany shall terminate the Regular Army of the United States shall be reduced to 250,000 men, who shall remain in the service of their own volition, and the remaining armed land forces of the United States shall immediately be mustered out of such service."

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon this amendment close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all debate upon this amendment close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, so far as I am concerned, I shall not take a minute. I simply want to say this: So far as I have been able to see, there is but one provision in this bill in reference to the duration of service, and that is on page 2. The second paragraph of the first section reads as follows:

Second. To draft into the military service of the United States, organize and officer, in accordance with the provisions of section 111 of said national defense act, so far as the provisions of said section may be applicable and not inconsistent with the terms of this act, any or all members of the National Guard and of the National Guard Reserve, and said members so drafted into the military service of the United States shall serve therein for the period of the existing emergency unless sooner discharged: Provided, That when so drafted the organizations or units of the National Guard shall, so far as practicable, retain the State designations of their respective organizations.

That provides simply that two classes shall serve during the emergency. They shall at least serve that long unless sooner discharged. It does not provide that when the emergency terminates their service shall cease, nor is there any provision with reference to the service of the Regular Army, and I think this House and this Congress ought to declare now that it is not our purpose to enter upon an era of militarism in this country, because in times of peace we do not need any more than 250,000 men in the Regular Army, and I want it fixed so that when the war ceases, when the emergency is at an end, these men can go back to their homes and leave us with a Regular Standing Army of not more than 250,000 men.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman turn to page 12 of the bill and read lines 16 and 17, and tell me how he interprets them?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. That reads as follows:

That the qualifications and conditions for voluntary enlistment as herein provided shall be the same as those prescribed by existing law for enlistments in the Regular Army, except that recruits must be between the ages of 18 and 40 years at the time of their enlistment; and such enlistments shall be for the period of the emergency unless sooner discharged.

But it does not provide that they shall be discharged at the end of their enlistments.

Mr. GARDNER. How does the gentleman interpret it in such a way as that?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. They simply enlist for that period. Who is to muster them out?

Mr. GARDNER. It is just like all of the enlistments.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will they simply of their own voluntary motion, when that time comes, disband? My amendment provides for the mustering out of all these people down to 250,000.

Mr. GARDNER. It is just like our existing law. There is no provision for the mustering out after a seven-year enlistment. This simply says that a man enlists for the period of the emergency.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes; and this act says that he shall serve during the emergency unless sooner discharged, and what is the objection to making it absolutely beyond cavil?

Mr. GARDNER. It is beyond cavil now.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CLARK of Florida) there were—ayes 30, noes 130.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that we may recur to page 7 for the purpose of offering an amendment. I ask unanimous consent that, in line 24, page 7, we strike out the word "eight" and insert in lieu thereof the word "nine," so that it will read "section nine of this act." The numbers have been changed, and I do this now in the hope that it may possibly help in the engrossment of the bill, which they are now trying to do in the Printing Office.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to return to the portion of the bill indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 24, strike out the word "eight" and insert in lieu thereof the word "nine."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, in order to perfect the bill, while we are on that subject, I ask unanimous consent to return to section 3, on page 8, which is the exemption section, and, in line 5, after the word "territories," insert the words "and the District of Columbia."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to return to section 3 for the purpose indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 5, after the word "Territories" insert the words "and the District of Columbia."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WEBB: Add at the end of the section as amended the following:

"Provided, That officers and enlisted men described in this section shall not receive any pay or allowance for any service while serving in a mobilization or training camp hereafter located within 12 miles of a place where intoxicating liquors are legally sold for beverage purposes."

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DENT. That it is not germane.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has already been made by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, the only way in which the Chair can hold the amendment germane is that it is a limitation which might be prescribed in this matter, and it is clearly a limitation in that way as the purpose of the amendment is to prevent hereafter the location of mobilization camps for young men within 12 miles of a place where liquors are sold. If you will take the testimony of any colonel or any major on the Mexican border, he will tell you that that amendment ought to be adopted. That is all I care to say.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, just a word. It is true it has been held under the precedents that you can on an appropriation place a limitation, but it is equally true that this limitation can not change existing law or under the guise of a limitation change the control or discretion of executive officers. Now, under the disguise of a limitation the gentleman can not make in order what has this evening been declared out of order. This is not an appropriation bill nor an appropriation. The gentleman is seeking to enact a legislative feature providing for something that relates to legislation and that is legislation, and as the Chair has held to-night the identical proposition was not in order, he must consistently hold this is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair presumes that this amendment is submitted upon the theory that it comes within the following principle:

"Although the rule forbids the insertion in a general appropriation bill of a provision 'changing existing law,' and this is construed to mean legislation generally, the House practice has established the principle that certain amendments by way of 'limitations' may be admitted," upon general appropriation bills. This pending bill is not a general appropriation bill. It is a legislative bill which happens to carry a lump-sum appropriation. This hardly brings it within the principle supra relating to general appropriation bills. The point of order strikes the Chair as being well taken, and the same is sustained.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROGERS: Page 15, line 13, after the word "Army," insert the following as a new section:

"That the act approved March 1, 1911, entitled 'An act to protect the dignity and honor of the uniform of the United States' be amended by adding the following as a new section:

"That hereafter no proprietor, manager, or employee of a theater or other public place of entertainment in any State shall make or cause to be made any discrimination against any person lawfully wearing the uniform of the Army of the United States because of the uniform, and any person making or causing to be made such discrimination shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine not exceeding $500.'"

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is clearly subject to the point of order and sustains it.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. That there is hereby appropriated for the national defense, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, to be expended at the discretion of the Secretary of War and to remain available until June 30, 1918, $3,000,000,000.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 15, line 18, after "$3,000,000,000," insert "Provided, That the person giving first information leading to the conviction of any officer, employee of, or person occupying an advisory position in, the Government of the United States of the crime of bribery in connection with the expenditure of any of this appropriation, shall be paid the sum of $1,000 out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

Mr. MANN. Clearly it is not germane to the section, either.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think the amendment is germane to this bill and sustains the point of order.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to propose the adoption of the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk reads as fololws:

Amendment offered by Mr. LITTLE: Page 15, line 18, after the figures $3,000,000,000, strike out the period and insert "but no part of this money shall be expended to maintain a camp or quarters for the troops raised under this act within 20 miles of any place where intoxicating liquor is sold as a beverage, in the United States of America, and the sale of intoxicating liquor as a beverage shall not be allowed within 20 miles of such camp or station when so established and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to carry out and enforce this provision.

Mr. LITTLE. I move the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. DYER. I make the point of order against it, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LITTLE. I have heard gentlemen here crying "No!" "No!" to the first amendment offered here, except the one to raise his wages, that has been put in here to benefit the enlisted man. [Cries of "Rule!" "Rule!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas has the floor and will be protected in his rights.

Mr. LITTLE. I repeat that except the one to raise his wages, this was the first proposition that has been made here to help the enlisted man. Everything that will send him to his death you vote for. When a suggestion is made to protect these young men, men cry "No! No!"

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is not speaking to the point of order.

Mr. LITTLE. There is no point of order made that I know of.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was made to the amendment.

Mr. LITTLE. I did not hear it.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is not speaking to the point of order.

Mr. LITTLE. I beg pardon, but I did not hear the point of order. All I heard was people crying, "No! No!" when they were not asked to vote. As to whether this is germane or not, it seems to me that anybody who will read it carefully will see that it is evidently germane. Here is an appropriation of $3,000,000,000, and this is merely a limitation upon it. It is self-evident that it is germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's amendment offering a limitation is a highly technical one, but the principle connected with it is familiar to the older Members of the House. It will be seen that by reading this amendment there is a provision of affirmative law in it saying that no part of this money shall be expended to maintain a camp or quarters for the troops raised under this act within 20 miles of any place where intoxicating liquor is sold as a beverage and shall not be allowed within 20 miles of such camp or station where so established. That is a statement of affirmative law, and as such it does not come within the rules with respect to limitation.

Mr. LITTLE. The statement is that "no money shall be expended."

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. LITTLE. The Chair has not gotten that exactly as it is intended. This does not provide that they shall not sell liquor anywhere they want to. We are not in this amendment interfering with anybody selling drinks who wants to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. That is true as to one part of the amendment, but the rest of it is affirmative in its character, and if the point raised is obnoxious to the point of order in part, the point of order runs to the whole amendment. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. LITTLE. I will begin when you quit, Mr. Chairman. I have the floor yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman had the floor in connection with the argument on the point of order.

Mr. LITTLE. You will save a lot of time if you let me finish, without interruption. I send to the Clerk's desk an amendment which obviates that objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] will be recognized later. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is recognized.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FITZGERALD: Page 15, strike out all of lines 14 to 18, inclusive.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida objects, and the gentleman from New York is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] whether it is the purpose to press to enactment the Army appropriation bill which is now pending in conference?

Mr. DENT. It certainly is.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this is one of the most important questions to be presented in the House in connection with this bill. The bill provides an appropriation of $3,000,000,000 for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act. The Secretary of the Treasury on April 5, 1917, transmitted to Congress an estimate of $2,932,537,933 for the purposes of providing, equipping, and supplying a million men in the field for one year. The Army appropriation bill now pending in conference carries $281,176,044.67, so that if this $3,000,000,000 be appropriated and the $281,176,044.67 be appropriated, the amount provided will be $3,281,176,044.67. The Secretary of War has admitted that the estimate of $2,932,537,933 includes every dollar contained in the Army appropriation bill. Revised estimates have been submitted to the committee, which, after eliminating the duplications, aggregate $2,629,768,723.01, a sum which, together with amount in the pending Army bill, is $370,231,276.99 less than the amount proposed by this bill and the pending Army bill.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have only five minutes, and I wish to complete my statement.

In addition to that, after close investigation, the Committee on Appropriations believe that about $430,000,000 should be eliminated from the estimate.

The committee spent practically two weeks in making an exhaustive and searching investigation of the estimate. This $3,000,000,000, together with the amount in the Army bill, is about $800,000,000 in excess of what can possibly be expended by the War Department in the period mentioned. Eight hundred millions in the next fiscal year is about $20,000,000 more than the entire revenues of the Government for the fiscal year 1916, exclusive of the postal revenues. So that if this appropriation be carried here the Committee on Ways and Means in preparing revenue legislation will be required to prepare legislation to raise more than $800,000,00 next year; this will be necessary for the expenses of the Government. More than that, the sum of $3,000,000,000 is placed in the hands of a single official of this Government to be expended by him in his discretion, without any restriction or limitation whatever upon his power.

It is a greater sum and a greater power than has ever been committed to any one man in any country in the history of the world. It is practically three times the entire annual cost of the Federal Government up to within a few years. There is not the slightest justification for Congress failing to appropriate for the raising, organization, the equipment, and the support of this Army in the same way that it appropriates for the support of the Army every year. [Applause.]

If this appropriation be carried in this form next December, when the Committee on Military Affairs is called upon to make up the regular appropriation bill for the following fiscal year, when the Committee on Naval Affairs is called upon to make up the naval appropriation bill for the following fiscal year, an appeal will be made for lump appropriations upon this precedent. Congress will have given $3,000,000,000 to the War Department for the national defense in a lump sum, and it will ask us to surrender all of our power and our exclusive control over the expenditure of public money and to place in the hands of two officials a sum that may be equal to $4,000,000,000 annually.

That is not all. Under the emergency existing it has been necessary for the War Department, without authority, to enter into contracts, to make purchases, to employ persons, in order to carry out the great work that is essential at this time. There must be provisions of law making possible the payment of money for these purposes. This is a critical time for us. We are the guardians of the public purse. We should give every dollar essential for the proper conduct of this war, but we should not, in the guise of doing so, surrender the most precious right reserved to the Representatives of the American people—the control of the public funds—and I hope the amendment will be adopted. [Applause.]

The Committee on Naval Affairs was requested to report legislation increasing the enlisted force of the Navy to 150,000 men.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. If this amendment offered by the gentleman should be adopted, is the Committee on Appropriations prepared to bring before the House at once a bill making the additional appropriations necessary?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Committee on Appropriations, if this amendment be adopted, will report to the House on Monday, if it then convenes [applause] a bill making appropriations, additional to those in the Army bill, specifically and in detail, for the support of the Military Establishment of the Government for the balance of this fiscal year and for the next fiscal year.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. ALMON. Is the $3,000,000,000 appropriation to be in addition to the funds provided by the bond issue?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The bond issue is to provide the means to obtain the money. This is to provide one of the means for expending the money. The mere issuance of the bonds does not permit any expenditure except for purchase of the bonds of the belligerent nations.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman was going to say something about naval affairs.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; just one moment. I am going to speak of it. The Navy Department submitted estimates of almost $524,000,000. Investigation disclosed that it desired to have the enlisted strength of the Navy increased to 150,000 men and to have the enlisted strength of the Marine Corps increased to 30,000 men. The Committee on Appropriations directed the Navy Department to go to the Committee on Naval Affairs for legislation increasing the enlisted strength of the Marine Corps and of the Navy, as the War Department officials should go to the Committee on Military Affairs for this legislation. The Committee on Naval Affairs has reported the legislation providing for the increases in the personnel and for the assembling of the additional force without providing an appropriation in a lump sum, because that committee realizes that to make the appropriation in that way will be to eliminate entirely our right of control over the public purse.

In France, where they are spending money at a rate not contemplated by us yet, perhaps, the appropriations for the military establishment are carried in 139 separate items. The estimates are submitted in advance every four months. I know that representatives of the Secretary of War and the Secretary himself, the members of the General Staff, urged that this budget system, as they called it, should be adopted because so many things might turn up that could not be anticipated. The reply to that suggestion is that the Congress has already given to the President of the United States $100,000,000 to take care of unforseen emergencies, and if there be other unforseen emergencies, if there be other things that can not be anticipated, that amount can be increased. Congress is not to be obliterated from the face of the earth by the passage of this bill. Whether we stay in session long or only a short time is a matter of indifference. We will be here in December. The million men authorized can not be organized and equipped and placed in the field inside of six months—the entire million men.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DENT. I understood the gentleman from New York to say that his committee was prepared to report a bill on Monday. Will the gentleman state to the committee if that appropriation bill contains provisions to carry into effect the proposed legislation that we have been debating here, and which is now about to pass?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It does, and for this reason: The estimates were based upon an army of a million men in the field for one year, and it made no difference whether they were raised by the volunteer system or by the draft system; the pay and allowance provisions would be the same, as well as practically all other necessary expenses. So far as I am informed the bill will not carry pay for the million men for the full year, because a million men can not be placed under arms or with the colors for a full year.

The amount of subsistence for a full year will not be required. One hundred and forty-four million dollars included in the estimates for dependents, contingent upon the volunteer system, will not be included, because it is not now necessary. Fifty-one million dollars, the amount required for the proposed 20 per cent extra pay for war service, will not be required. But if the legislation recommended by the House to-night be adopted, increasing the pay, then an additional sum must be provided in the pay item alone to take care of change in the law.

This House will make a great mistake, and the Committee on Military Affairs will make a greater one, to insist at this time on turning this money over to this department without any restriction whatever.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question that he will not want, perhaps, to answer at this time, and that is whether or not there is any substantial difference between the total amount of the bill he is going to report on Monday and the total amount of the bill here?

Mr. FITZGERALD. As nearly as I can estimate, the amount carried in this bill is $800,000,000 in excess of what is necessary, and that $800,000,000, if appropriated, must be raised by taxation, because we can not appropriate money and refuse to raise the money so appropriated by taxation or an issue of bonds.

Mr. DENT. I did not exactly understand the gentleman's answer to my question. It may be that the gentleman is not prepared to answer it at this time. The question I am trying to get an answer to is, whether the gentleman's committee, having worked on the details of this appropriation, will bring in a bill the total amount of which is substantially $3,000,000,000?

Mr. FITZGERALD. As I have just stated, this amount includes the $281,000,000 now contained in the Army appropriation bill. It is intended to give that $281,000,000 additional, and $67,000,000 is included here in excess of the estimate submitted by the department. A committee which has been investigating the matter, representing both sides of the House, consisting of myself; the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], who has charge of the fortifications bill; the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], who has charge of the legislative bill; and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON], who serves both in the preparation of the legislative and the deficiency bills; the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], who has been on the Committee on Appropriations about 14 years; the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], who has been on the committee for a number of years; and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. Those seven Members, in agreement upon the amount to be included in that bill, have acted unanimously and in absolute harmony, and the amount required, together with the amount in the Army bill, as I have already indicated, will be about $800,000,000 less than the $3,281,000,000 that will be provided in this bill and by the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. GARDNER. Deducting the $281,000,000 that you propose in a separate bill and deducting $380,000,000, then deducting the $100,000,000, which is the difference between the estimate of $2,900,000,000, and $3,000,000,000, I find that this bill, according to the gentleman's figures, exceeds the amount by $761,000,000. Is that the figure?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Substantially that figure.

Mr. GARDNER. Seven hundred and sixty-one million dollars too much. Now, if this sum is reduced by $761,000,000, the net issue is whether the Appropriations Committee is going to control how the $2,239,000,000 is to be appropriated or the Military Affairs Committee is going to control it. That is the net issue, is it not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has nothing to do with which committee is to do it. It is a question of what Congress will do. The Committee on Appropriations proposes that Congress shall determine that the amount appropriated to pay the Army shall be reserved for the pay of the Army; that the amount appropriated to subsist it shall be reserved for subsistence; that the amount appropriated to arm it shall be devoted to that purpose. The provision in this bill proposes that the Secretary of War shall do as he pleases with this money, and it may be that there will be no money to pay the Army, no money to subsist the Army, no money for the munitions, and Congress will not have any control over it. [Applause.]

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I have stated the facts quite fully. I wish to make this additional statement: This is too important a matter upon which to ask the Congress to abdicate absolutely its powers. [Applause.] We ought either to exercise all proper control, or, if we appropriate in a lump and in the dark, as is proposed, we shall be compelled to legislate to levy taxes in the dark. The Congress will become so despicable, so little more than a mere automaton, that we ought to quit, and, admitting our uselessness, our incapacity, and our helplessness in the important duties arising from the existing crisis, turn over all of the power of the Government to the executive departments. [Applause.]

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. GARDNER: Page 15, line 18, strike out "$3,000,000,000" and insert "$2,239,000,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is not a substitute for a motion to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. GARDNER. I think it is germane.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, this is a very serious and a very important proposition that is submitted to the Congress of the United States. I consulted with some members of the Appropriations Committee about this matter, and others who are considered and who ought to be considered leaders of the House, as to whether or not the Military Committee should undertake, in one lump sum, to give to the War Department what they were asking for in order to carry this legislation into effect. It is only fair to the Military Committee to say that after we had deliberately and earnestly considered this proposition we reached the conclusion that it was absolutely impossible at this time for anybody to say exactly and accurately what this new legislation was going to cost the Government, and we had to trust somebody, and we had to receive the figures submitted to us by the War Department, at least as an estimate of what it would cost to carry this new legislation into effect. [Applause.] The Military Committee decided, furthermore, to take jurisdiction of this proposition, tremendous as it is and important as it is, at this particular time, because the Military Committee reached the conclusion that if you were going to change your entire Military Establishment, if you were going to build a great army at this particular period of the crisis that exists to-day, the most essential and the most vital thing necessary was the money to carry the legislation into effect, and we thought this was the quickest and the best way to do it. Now, we have to-night passed an amendment to this bill increasing the pay of the enlisted men in the Army, which will add a sum of money that nobody can possibly estimate for. So that we are put in this position to-night: We are put in the position of passing a bill creating a new establishment, increasing your Army tremendously, without providing the money by which it can be done. If you do not provide the money you had better wait until next week to provide the men.

Mr. GARDNER. May I be heard on the point of order on my own amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will rule in favor of the gentleman. The amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts can be directed to the amount in the section of the bill, and can be treated as a provisional amendment to reduce the amount in the bill. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. GARDNER. I desire to be heard on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. GARDNER. The whole question now is whether you want to vote a lump-sum appropriation or whether you do not want to do that. I have met the figures given by the gentleman from New York. If you believe in the lump-sum appropriation, vote for my amendment. If you do not believe in the lump-sum appropriation, vote for the other amendment.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I had not quite finished. I simply want to say in conclusion that if this Congress believes in standing behind the President, the quickest and most effective way after you have provided for the increase of the Army is to provide the money to take care of it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, can not we fix some time to close debate?

Mr. DENT. Yes. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that debate on this section and all amendments thereto be closed in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that debate on this section and all amendments thereto be closed in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, the proposition presented here is whether or not we are going to give the executive department the money to carry on the war after we have given him a statute that will enable him to get the men to carry on the war. There is no question in the world that there is not a man or a human being that can say within a million dollars what any particular item for which we must make appropriations will amount to. Who can say what the tentage of the Army is going to be? We know that there are not enough tents in America. We know that there is not enough cloth to make them. When you go out to buy them you must have the money to buy them. So it is practically with every other item for which money must be expended. There is no man in America that can say what will be required to pay for any particular item. Under these circumstances we must appropriate a lump sum, and it was for that reason that the Committee on Military Affairs appropriated a lump sum, and I hope it will stay in the bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, no one could accuse me of desiring in any way to handicap the administration in vigorously prosecuting this war. I have given earnest of my desire in every possible way, but because we desire to do that is no reason that we should disregard every restriction that men of sense and judgment should put around the appropriation of money.

Think of it. We are asked to appropriate in four or five lines the greatest amount ever appropriated by one act since the beginning of time and put it in the hands of one individual, without any restriction. The proposal is impossible for sensible men to accept. The Committee on Appropriations has taken hold of these estimates, examined them in detail, not with the idea of tying the department so as to prevent it from properly and efficiently spending the money, but so as to coordinate the real work that is to be done.

The officials of the War Department have, after days of testifying before our committee, consented to the reduction in various items because the money could not possibly be expended between now and the time when the next appropriation bills will make new funds available. According to the estimates submitted there are appropriations being asked not simply for matters that are ordinarily carried in the Army bill but of the $3,000,000,000 of estimates, a thousand millions nearly related to matters that belong to the fortification bill, and one hundred millions or more belong to the sundry civil bill. To appropriate money in this fashion is to absolutely destroy all semblance of real appropriation bills in the future. It means that there will be no method to check up, and if the war should end suddenly there would be no limit or restriction on the power of the Secretary of War. This Congress is not expected to absolutely abdicate its functions. [Applause.] It is not expected to simply vote money in sums like this without any consideration. If I believed that, by what we are asking to-night, in any sense the efficiency of the Army would be crippled, that it would be in any way delayed, I would not stand on the floor and ask it. But I say to you that we have worked for two weeks going over the details. We are not doing the thing blindly. We are not doing it to hamper the administration, but seven of us have sat there day after day and heard the details of these items, and we will bring in to you a bill that will give every dollar that can be expended within the time the provision in the pending bill provides for.

This is only the beginning. You must get used to big sums. We will be having estimate after estimate come in. If we establish now the principle that we are simply to appropriate them in four lines, why we might as well appropriate an unlimited sum and absolutely cease to consider or have any concern over expenditures. [Applause.]

The Naval Affairs Committee recognized that situation. They have not undertaken to bring in here an appropriation bill. They have recognized that, for the present, in order for these matters to be coordinated one committee must deal with them. It is not that we desire to steal jurisdiction, but we do want to do in a sensible way one of the most important tasks before Congress. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, although on this side of the House, I believe I am just as anxious and desirous of giving to this administration all of the money it needs and to give it freely and liberally as any man on that side of the House. I want this administration to have all the money it needs to carry on the war, but I do not think in doing that we should diminish the influence of this body. The administration, we are told, wants the $3,000,000,000 in a lump sum. Of course the Secretary of War wants it in a lump sum. They always want their appropriations in lump sums and have wanted them in lump sums every year since I have been on the Committee on Appropriations. The one struggle of the last 14 years in every appropriating committee in this House has been to compel departments to abandon lump-sum appropriations and to give Congress some control as to the manner in which those appropriations should be expended. It has not been a matter of partisanship. It has continued, no matter whether this House was Republican or Democratic, no matter whether the White House was Republican or Democratic.

The one purpose for the last 15 years has been to forbid the departments getting their money in lump sums, and to accomplish that this House has year after year placed restrictions and limitations on bills, generally by unanimous consent, because the House wanted to control the expenditure of the appropriations. There is always a contest in every constitutional government between the executive and the legislative branches. Each wants power, and in the last few years in our country it is the executive which has gained power. The only place I know of where the legislative branch has increased its power is in control over appropriations, and the one method by which they have done that is by taking away from the departments lump-sum appropriations and by prescribing in detail how that money shall be expended. That is just what we do here. The Appropriations Committee in the last two weeks has been framing a bill in just the way the Military Committee and every other committee has always framed their bills in the past. It has framed it in detail; it has prescribed how the money shall be spent; it has been liberal. We propose to give them more power and elasticity than they would ordinarily have, because we recognize that in war times they can not calculate so accurately; but you must remember that in war time more than in other times there is apt to be extravagance and recklessness and scandals, and there ought to be more watchfulness in war times than in other times. It seems to me that to grant this in a lump sum would be preposterous and unreasonable. It would be to abandon the influence of Congress which every Congress in the last 20 years, no matter what its politics, has sought to retain by restricting the expenditure and appropriation by forbidding lump sums and by itemizing expenditures and appropriations in specific detail. That, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] suggested, is the issue before us now. Will you give it in detail or in the lump sum? It will be just as quick to give it in detail. No one wants to delay this matter. No one wants to hamper the administration. We will report that bill next week, and it is just as likely that it will be a law before this bill becomes a law as it is that it will be a law after this bill is passed. It is astounding that at this juncture there should be this effort to throw down all the barriers we have erected against executive encroachments and vote this stupendous sum in one lump. Therefore it seems to me that if you want to stand by the prerogatives of the House and not abdicate our proper and normal functions, you will vote to take out this lump sum and appropriate the money in the ordinary form. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers a preferential amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, line 18, strike out "$3,000,000,000" and insert "$2,239,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] to strike out the paragraph, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. FITZGERALD: Page 15, strike out all of lines 14 to 18, inclusive.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] has offered an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, the striking out of this section leaves no place for my amendment, and in view of that fact, I withdraw it. It seems to have saved the country $3,000,000,000 for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman will withdraw his amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3545) to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the Kahn amendments, striking out the volunteer system.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the Lever amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a separate vote on the Kahn amendments—there are five of them—be taken en bloc.

The SPEAKER. Does that include all of the Kahn amendments?

Mr. KAHN. Yes; there are five amendments which I offered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the five Kahn amendments be voted on en bloc.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURNETT. Does this embrace the draft amendment?

Mr. MANN. It embraces all of those amendments on the same subject——

Mr. BURNETT. I see.

Mr. MANN. So if one goes in they all ought to go in, and if one goes out they all ought to go out.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the Lever amendment exempting those engaged in agricultural pursuits from draft.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania demands a separate vote on the Lever amendment in reference to exempting agriculture.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the Fitzgerald amendment to see whether we are going to stand by the President or by the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee demands a separate vote on the Fitzgerald amendment. Are there any other separate votes demanded? If not, the Chair will put the question on the rest of the amendments en bloc.

The question was taken, and the rest of the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Before these votes are taken the Chair wants the Sergeant at Arms to keep these aisles clear. You can hear just as well sitting down as you can standing up. The vote is now to be taken on the five Kahn amendments.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, may we have those amendments again reported? [Cries of "No!"]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the amendments being reported again?

Mr. BARKLEY and SEVERAL MEMBERS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky objects. Those in favor of the Kahn amendments will say aye——

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama demands the yeas and nays. Evidently a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 313, noes 109, not voting 10, as follows:

NOT VOTING—10.

Blackmon	Martin, Ill.	Shackleford	Taylor, Colo.
Capstick	Moon	Smith, Idaho
Dies	Nelson	Sterling, Pa.

So the Kahn amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. SMITH of Idaho (for Kahn amendments) with Mr. BLACKMON (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. MARTIN of Illinois with Mr. NELSON.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado with Mr. CAPSTICK.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. CAPSTICK, who is very ill, has asked me to announce to the House that if he were here he would vote for the Kahn amendments.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, is in a hospital here in the city, having been operated upon a few days ago. He asked me this evening to announce that he was paired, but that if he were present he would vote for the Kahn amendments and the final passage of the bill.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Illinois, Mr. MARTIN, is sick in the hospital in Chicago. If he were here he would vote "yea" on these amendments.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Wisconsin, Mr. NELSON, wished me to report him as being ill at home. If he were here I feel certain he would have voted against the Kahn amendments.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. BLACKMON, is at home on account of the serious illness of his mother, and he has wired me that he would ask to be recorded, if present, as voting against the Kahn amendments.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Speaker, my brother-in-law, Mr. SMITH of Idaho, is absent because of the serious illness of his boy in Idaho, and therefore did not vote.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to say that my colleague, Mr. DIES, is ill and not able to attend the session to-day. But if he were here he would vote for the Kahn amendments and the final passage of this bill.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LANGLEY. Would it be in order for me to state that the Senate has passed the Roosevelt amendment by a vote of 56 to 31?

The SPEAKER. All we can do is to attend to this House.

The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] to strike out the lump sum.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 351, noes 25.

So the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs, with instructions to report the same back instanter with the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from California opposed to the bill?

Mr. RANDALL. I am opposed to the bill. On that motion I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California presents a motion to recommit, and on that he moves the previous question.

Mr. MANN. You can not do that until it is reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. RANDALL].

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RANDALL moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs, with instructions to report the same back forthwith with the following amendment:

Amend, on page 12, line 10, after the word "direct," by inserting the following:

"Provided, That no registration, physical examination, exemption, enlistment, enrollment, or muster shall be made in any city, county, or State wherein intoxicating liquors are sold as a beverage by local or State authority. And for the purposes of this Act the President of the United States shall have authority, by proclamation, to prohibit the sale, gift, manufacture, transportation, importation, or exportation of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes during the period of the war."

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against that.

The SPEAKER. What is the point of order?

Mr. MEEKER. It is not germane.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from California [Mr. RANDALL] desire to be heard?

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, I do not think it is necessary.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MEEKER. I do not think it is necessary. [Laughter.]

Mr. RUCKER. Let us knock the whisky junk out. [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair is in doubt at all——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the Chair is in doubt at all as to the question of its being in order——

The SPEAKER. The Chair was trying to read the bill to see in what connection it came.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the Speaker will indulge me, we had this proposition submitted in two different amendments in the Committee of the Whole to the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole for decision. On both occasions the Chairman ruled that the amendment was not germane to the provisions of the bill, and I direct the attention of the Chair to the fact that even as the bill was presented to the committee, and was pending when the chairman made that decision, there were greater grounds for holding it in order than there are now, since the Fitzgerald amendment, eliminating the $3,000,000,000 appropriation, which authorized that amount of money to be expended for each and every purpose connected with the national defense has been agreed to. The Chair will observe that the provisions of this bill relate entirely——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will inquire of the gentleman what the Fitzgerald amendment has to do with this?

Mr. STAFFORD. I was saying that the Fitzgerald amendment might have been used as a handle, and was attempted to be used as a handle, for making in order the amendment prohibiting the sale of liquor within a certain distance from any Army post or any Army establishment.

Mr. SABATH. If the gentleman will yield——

Mr. STAFFORD. Anyhow, the appropriation is stricken out, so that it can not be used as a handle for that purpose.

Now, I want to direct the attention of the Speaker to this fact: The Chair held that the bill relates exclusively to increasing the personnel of the Army. I direct the Speaker's attention to the title of the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. The title of the bill is, "A bill to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States."

The first part of this amendment, I might say, might be in order, but the second part negatives and makes the amendment itself clearly out of order under the rules of the House, because it is not germane to the subject matter.

Now I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman has already admitted that it is applicable to this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; I do not see where I made any such admission as that. I did not do so consciously, I am certain.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. As a matter of fact, does not the last provision in this amendment create another class of exemptions in addition to the number of exemptions already created in the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like the gentleman to talk louder, so that the Chair can hear. The Chair will have to decide this question.

Mr. HOWARD. I say, Mr. Speaker, this simply creates a new class of exemptions, to wit, exemptions affecting all citizens residing in cities, counties, and States where enlistments are had and muster is sought to be made and intoxicating liquor is sold. That is another class of exemptions. In other words, the people living in those particular zones are exempted from the use or sale of intoxicating liquor by the Randall motion to recommit. It creates another class of exemptions, and I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that this amendment is germane to the whole bill. [Cries of "Rule! Rule!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule, and his ruling is that this motion to recommit is not in order. [Applause.]

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I offer another motion on this same amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman offers a motion to recommit with instructions, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RANDALL moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs with instructions to report the same back forthwith with a committee amendment, as follows: On page 12, line 10, after the word "direct." insert the following:

"Provided, That no registration, physical examination, exemption, enlistment, enrollment, or muster shall be made in any city, county, or State wherein intoxicating liquors are sold as a beverage by local or State authority."

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against that.

The SPEAKER. On what grounds?

Mr. MEEKER. On the ground that it is not germane.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman wants to be heard, the Chair will hear him.

Mr. MEEKER. The gentleman does not care to be heard. He will trust to the judgment of the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is overruled. The question is on agreeing to the motion to recommit.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for a division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California demands a division. Those in favor of this motion to recommit with instructions will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Forty-three gentlemen have risen in the affirmative. Those opposed will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Three hundred and nine gentlemen have risen in the negative. On this vote the ayes are 43 and the noes are 309.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of taking this vote by the yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Six gentlemen have risen in the affirmative—not a sufficient number—and the motion to recommit is lost. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 397, nays 24, answered "present" 1, not voting 10, as follows:

SENATE.

MONDAY, April 30, 1917.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, through the strife of this world Thou art winning Thy way into the hearts of men. Our needs are driving us to Thee, and we are finding that the way of the cross is the way into Thy heart. If we are thinking more deeply upon the great questions of duty, if we are touching the springs of life that we may save life, if we are entering more fully upon the high and holy passion of patriotism that we may establish freedom and justice, we are already harvesting the rich results of our efforts to stand for God's great program of life.

We pray that Thou wilt lead us on. Give to us a passion of service that in all things we may be guided by the divine will and be a part of the force that Thou art using in the world to accomplish the divine plan for men. We ask for Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Monday, April 23, 1917, when, on request of Mr. OVERMAN and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

CLAIM OF NORWAY (H. DOC. NO. 81).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

At the request of the Norwegian minister at this Capital, and in view of the recommendation of the Secretary of State, I transmit the latter's report and a copy of an accompanying note from the Norwegian minister relating to the claim made by the Norwegian Government in behalf of three members of the crew of the Norwegian ship Ingrid, and I recommend, as an act of grace, and without reference to the question of the liability of the United States, that an appropriation be made to effect a settlement of this claim in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of State.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 28, 1917.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CURTIS presented petitions of the Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic of Topeka and the Young Men's Christian Association of Marshall County, in the State of Kansas, praying for the protection of military camps, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Golden Belt Road Association of the State of Kansas, praying for the designation, construction, and maintenance of a system of national highways, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of John A. Martin Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Atchison, Kans., praying for an increase in pensions to meet the increased cost of living, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Salina, Kans., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of the faculty and students of the Kansas State Normal School; the Defense Council of Rush County, and of sundry citizens of Muscotah, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the conservation of food, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I present a memorial from the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the memorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 5.

To the United States Senate and House of Representatives:

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, in third regular session assembled, do most respectfully and earnestly represent that—

Whereas there is now pending in the Congress of the United States H. R. 17499, introduced August 18, 1916, by Mr. ALEXANDER, of Missouri, and entitled "A bill for the protection, regulation, and conservation of the fisheries of Alaska, and for other purposes"; and

Whereas the fishermen and residents of the coast of Alaska have better knowledge of the requirements for regulation and conservation of the Alaskan fisheries than the legal advisers of the fisheries corporations and representatives of the United States Bureau of Fisheries, who drafted H. R. 17499; and

Whereas section 22 of H. R. 17499 expressly prohibits the Territory of Alaska from levying taxes upon the business or property of the fisheries interests and thus rescinds the rights granted this Territory by Congress under the Territorial organic act, and thereby retards the development of our Territory and the upbuilding of our public-school system; and

Whereas section 6 of H. R. 17499, which provides for title in perpetuity to holders of fish-trap sites in Alaskan waters will surely lead to monopoly of the Alaskan fisheries and forever exclude portable fishing gear from certain sections of our tidewater; and

Whereas numerous appeals have been sent to the Congress of the United States from all sections of Alaska imploring Senators and Representatives to prevent this great injustice to Alaska: Now, therefore

We, the representatives of the people of Alaska, in session assembled, do most respectfully urge that the provisions of the Alexander bill be not forced upon our people and that our rights to levy taxes, given under our organic act, be preserved to us; and

We would further appeal to Congress to grant the people of Alaska the right to control and regulate our own fisheries, and your memorialists will ever pray.

Passed the senate April 4, 1917.

President pro tempore of the Senate.

Attest:

W. M. EDDY,

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FARGO, N. DAK., April 28, 1917.

Hon. P. J. McCUMBER,

M. A. THORFINNSON.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I present a telegram from the faculty and students of the Dakota Wesleyan University, of South Dakota, and a number of other telegrams and letters, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MITCHELL, S. DAK., April 25, 1917.

Senator JOHNSON,
Washington, D. C.:

In order to conserve the food supply, factory and farm productiveness, the faculty and students of Dakota Wesleyan University petition you to do all in your power to urge Congress to take whatever action necessary to prohibit the liquor traffic immediately.

C. V. GILLILAND,
Acting President,
OLIN D. JACKSON,
President of Student Association.

GEDDES, S. DAK., April 22, 1917.

Hon. ED. S. JOHNSON,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR BROTHER JOHNSON: My church sent you a telegram about "Congress take such action as may be necessary to prohibit the liquor traffic as a war measure to conserve the food supply, factory and farm productiveness, and military efficiency of the Nation." We will consider it quite a favor if you shall see your way clear to push this through. Do it now, please.

The count of 214, as sent in the telegram, did not count the children of the congregation. This count will give you an idea of how your loyal town of Geddes stands.

Yours, as ever,

C. S. LYLES.

CENTERVILLE, S. DAK., April 26, 1917.

Hon. Senator JOHNSON,
Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned, hereby petition the Congress of the United States and each of the Senators and Congressmen of the State of South Dakota that Congress take such action as may be necessary to prohibit the liquor traffic as a war measure to conserve the food supply, factory and farm productiveness, and military efficiency of the Nation.

J. A. THOMSON
(And others).

BRIDGEWATER, S. DAK., April 23, 1917.

Hon. EDWIN JOHNSON,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. JOHNSON: Last Sunday morning at our service in the Bridgewater Presbyterian Church the congregation by a rising vote unanimously requested you as our Senator in Congress to vote for the prohibition of the liquor traffic in the United States of America as a war emergency measure in order to conserve the food supply and to promote the military efficiency of the Nation.

In the afternoon of the same day the congregation of the Canistota Presbyterian Church in the same manner unanimously made the same request.

Very truly, yours,

A. C. McCAULEY,
Pastor Presbyterian Churches.

GANN VALLEY, S. DAK., April 23, 1917.

Senator JOHNSON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a Sunday-school convention held in this town yesterday about 125 people assembled and voted unanimously to ask you to vote for prohibition of the liquor traffic as a war measure.

Very truly, yours,

WALTER J. HILL,
Pastor of Congregational Church.

BROOKINGS, S. DAK., April 23, 1917.

Senator EDWIN S. JOHNSON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Inasmuch as the food supply during the continuation of the war seems to be a vital factor in the success of our cause, I suggest that there should be cooperation on the part of all to conserve the food supply and see that it gets used only for legitimate purpose. With this end in view, we trust you will use your influence to bring about a law prohibiting the manufacture of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes as a sensible and logical way to meet this situation. We are sure such action on your part would be warranted by reason of the position taken by our voters at the last general election and the recent legislative action in this State, making South Dakota "bone dry."

Yours, truly,

G. F. KNAPPEN.

HURON, S. DAK., April 24, 1917.

Hon. EDWIN S. JOHNSON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We herewith inclose you copy of a petition signed by 81 citizens of Huron. This is, of course, not a very large signature, but this is due to the fact that we did not have time to circulate it further. We feel sure that we could get 90 per cent of the people in our city to sign this petition.

You will notice the heading of this petition calls for national prohibition as a war measure to conserve the food supply. We find a great many of our people figure that if this is a good war measure, it certainly would be good in times of peace, and suggest that our representatives in Congress try to make it permanent.

Trusting that we may have your support on this proposition, and with kindest personal regards, we beg to remain,

Yours, very truly,

GEO. W. GEIGER.

HURON, S. DAK., April 23, 1917.

We, the undersigned, hereby petition the Congress of the United States and each of the Senators and Congressmen of the State of South Dakota that Congress take such action as may be necessary to prohibit the liquor traffic as a war measure to conserve the food supply, factory and farm productiveness, and military efficiency of the Nation.

GEO. W. GEIGER
(And others).

LOOMIS, S. DAK., April 23, 1917.

Hon. EDWIN S. JOHNSON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: My congregation voted unanimously to ask you to do all you can for the passing of a national prohibition law now at the beginning of the war. We need the law to conserve our grain, the strength of our young men, and to eliminate waste.

Yours, truly,

ROLLIN B. HOLDEN.

MURDO, S. DAK., April 23, 1917.

Hon. EDWIN S. JOHNSON,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: There were 75 in my preaching service last night. I was telling them of the prospects of national prohibition within our Nation in a very brief time.

I requested all who would cast a ballot if the opportunity was given them for national prohibition to take place at once to raise their hands, and as far as I could see every hand went up as high as they could raise them.

So I request you in behalf of the very large majority of the people of Murdo, and especially the Christian people of Murdo and vicinity, to use your influence in the interest of national prohibition to take place at the earliest possible moment.

I am, respectfully, yours,

H. W. BUNTON.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask to have inserted in the RECORD without reading resolutions passed at the National Conference of Shippers held in Chicago April 13, 1917, and also a short statement of the Chamber of Commerce of Hawkinsville, Ga., and a letter from the Institute for Public Service, of New York, all with reference to the proposed increase of freight rates.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions passed at national conference of shippers held in Chicago April 13, 1917.

[NOTE.—According to the registration, this conference was attended by delegates representing more than 1,000,000 shippers. They perfected a permanent organization, as shown by these resolutions, and have since been invited to appear before the Interstate Commerce Commission and outline methods of procedure and character of investigation to be pursued.]

I.

The principal carriers in official, western, and southern classification territories are seeking permission from the Interstate Commerce Commission to establish horizontal advances in freight rates amounting to 15 per cent or more on all commodities, except coal, coke, and ore; and also advances of other amounts on coal, coke, and ore.

The enormous increase in freight revenue, it is estimated, will total more than $350,000,000 annually—an added tax on the American people of nearly $1,000,000 a day.

The financial condition of the railroads of the United States for the year 1916 was the most favorable in their history. The net earnings for 1916 exceeded those for 1915 by more than $300,000,000, and exceeded the earnings for any other year in their entire history by more than $200,000,000.

The chief justification alleged for the proposed increase is the operation of the Adamson law and the related wage advances. But the main intent of the act is to reduce the working hours to eight per day, and it has been asserted that this can be effected by increased efficiencies without any material advance in wage expenditures.

However, estimates of wage advances on this account vary from $20,000,000 to $100,000,000. Increased cost of coal and other supplies are also the subject of conflicting estimates. But the increases in net revenue in 1916 and 1915 were ample to absorb increased costs and still leave returns greater than ever before.

Whatever of justification there may be for increased rates, if any, can only be determined by an investigation of the facts.

The Government is entitled to demand from all its citizens the fullest support in this national emergency, and by contributing their property and investment on like terms with other citizens railroad stockholders can prove that they are "stirred by a high sense of their opportunity to be of the greatest service to their country in the present national crisis." While other people are called upon to sacrifice their lives, while other industries are content to declare to the people and to the Government that they will accept prices for their products and services approximating those of former years, and while still other industries have announced their intention of furnishing their products and services without any profit whatsoever, this attempt of American railroads to obtain for their stockholders an enormous increase in the earnings they have received, seeks to impose for their private benefit a tax of almost $1,000,000 a day upon the people at large in addition to the heavy burdens of taxation which we will have to bear directly because of the war. Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the representatives of the shippers' organizations convened in national conference at Chicago on April 13, 1917, That a full and adequate investigation, as contemplated by law, should be made as to the alleged financial needs of the carriers and as to the reasonableness of the proposed rates before any conclusion is reached or order made by the Interstate Commerce Commission upon the proposed advances, and before such advances can become in any degree effective, at which hearing the shippers shall be accorded a full opportunity to be heard and to present their evidence.

II.

Resolved, That we are opposed to paying increased rates for the purpose of building betterments, improvements, and extensions out of earnings.

If the railroad companies own these properties, they should build them, and the public should not be required to build railroads and supply facilities and then pay a return on what they build.

III.

In order to efficiently carry out the purposes of this conference and resolutions passed, be it

Resolved, That in our judgment it will be impossible for any single organization or committee to assume the grave responsibility of guarding the interests of the many thousands of shippers in various industries throughout the country who are represented at this conference. It will be necessary for each shipper, or organization of shippers in any industry, to take all the steps necessary for looking after their interest and protecting their rates in the proceeding before the Interstate Commerce Commission in such manner as they may deem wise and proper.

However, we believe it to be essential that a committee shall be created for the purpose of assisting in looking after such matters wherein our interests are common. Therefore we move that the chairman appoint a committee of five to offer evidence and argument relative to the financial condition of American railways. This committee shall have full authority to solicit funds from various shippers' organizations, and to expend the same in such manner as may seem wise and proper for the purpose above stated. Any vacancies occurring on said committee shall be filled by appointment of the chairman of this conference. Be it further

Resolved, That this conference be considered as permanently organized to carry out its purposes expressed in its resolutions, and that the name of the organization formed under the call of the conference be "The National Shippers' Conference," and that the chairman, H. C. Wallace, be continued as chairman, and M. R. Myers be continued as secretary, and H. W. Danforth as treasurer, who, with the committee, are to represent this organization before the Interstate Commerce Commission, and otherwise as the interest of shippers may demand, and at such time as they shall deem proper to call the conference together for such action as shall seem necessary.

Protest from the Hawkinsville Chamber of Commerce against proposed increase of 15 per cent by railroads at large.

To the honorable INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C.:

The undersigned members of the Hawkinsville Chamber of Commerce and shippers of Hawkinsville, whose names appear below, desire to protest against the increase in rates and have taken into consideration:

I. That the recently enacted legislation increases the operating expense of the railroad to some extent.

II. That equipment is costing considerably more than a few years ago.

III. That on account of higher labor the cost of maintenance of said roads is greater.

But we suggest also:

I. That we were subjected to an increase in rates from the East and West on January 1, 1916, and that the railroads have shown greater revenues in 1916 than ever before in their history.

II. That during this time of war that they will be the recipients of a great deal of additional business.

III. That every class of business in our country will feel the effects of a depression in business.

IV. That the increase proposed will be borne by the consumer, and that the high cost of living is an extreme burden on the consumer to-day.

V. That the railroads should bear their part of this burden as well as the consumer.

VI. That this increase would seem as a protection for organized interests while there is none for the consumer.

We respectfully ask that before this increase be allowed, that the proposed rates be gone into thoroughly, giving an opportunity for protestants to make a showing before your honorable body.

HAWKINSVILLE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
By F. B. WATERMAN, President.
C. W. E. MARSH, Secretary.

INSTITUTE FOR PUBLIC SERVICE,
New York City, April 23, 1917.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

SIR: It has been with a great deal of satisfaction and appreciation that I have read of your fight to have any proposed increase of rates to the railroads on a fact basis.

There can be no question, in my mind, that if a basis of real facts be set up there will be no cause for anything like a flat 15 per cent raise. The papers to-day carry the announcement of the earnings of the New York Central last year showing a net of $71,846,000, based on present capital, including water. The net increase of earnings over 1915 was $13,328,000.

What has even more generally been overlooked are the possibilities of enormous savings by improvements, particularly at the terminals. It is a fact that freight to-day moves, on an average, less than 25 miles a day. The answer to the claim that the Adamson law will so greatly increase costs is that, with anything approximating efficiency, freight could be moved much farther in an 8-hour day than it does now in 10 or 12. So with other items. For example: The recent reduction of free time will mean a great saving to the railroads. Regarding savings due to concerted operation and direction, such as is possible under the organization now established for "war-time operations," the newspapers contain interviews with big railroad men showing that from 20 to 50 per cent slack will be eliminated from railroad operation, with resultant efficiency and economy.

With regard to the claim that railroads are prevented from increasing efficiency because their earnings are not sufficient to warrant expenditures for such improvements, will you not insist that, if the fact basis proves such claim to be warranted, any increase granted be only for a limited period, sufficient to finance the improvements up to the time when they are ready for operation, and that the public get the benefit of these improvements?

Will you care to look over the inclosed copy of a letter I addressed to the Interstate Commerce Commission about three weeks ago along these lines?

Must we not "so provide that no longer shall the wealth we create develop a strength to destroy"?

Very truly, yours, ROBERT ROSENBLUTH,
Assistant Director.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I present several telegrams embodying resolutions adopted by meetings and associations held for patriotic purposes. I ask that they may be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MAYWOOD, NEBR., April 27, 1917.

Hon. G. M. HITCHCOCK,

The following resolution was passed by unanimous vote at a mass meeting here last evening to the Representatives in Congress, Hon. G. W. NORRIS, G. M. HITCHCOCK, A. C. SHALLENBERGER, Washington, D. C.:

At a mass meeting here of over 500 it was unanimously resolved that President Wilson is entitled to the sympathy and wholehearted support of the Nation in his present difficulty with Congress over selective conscription; that the people and Congress should stand as a unit in this crisis, supporting the administration policies; that we offer to the President ourselves and all our resources.

Hon. G. M. HITCHCOCK,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We beg to submit the following resolution:

"Resolved by the directors of the Nebraska Manufacturers' Association in regular session assembled, That, as an association and as citizens, we pledge our hearty support to the President of the United States to carry out the pledge of our Nation as set forth in the war resolutions adopted by the Congress on April 6, 1917. This pledge of our Nation is to provide funds, food, factory products, and men to make this pledge a living reality and force delivering as above outlined; means selective draft for farm, factory, and military; means the maintaining of each department to its highest degree of efficiency in order to secure the result so vitally important at this critical period: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we favor the selective draft for military service, as this system, and this alone, will make it possible to maintain the productive efficiency of our farms, factory, and other industries. We strongly urge our Senators and Representatives to support and vote for the measure providing for this selective draft for military service."

Mr. TRAMMELL. I present resolutions adopted by the Key West Council of Defense of Florida, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the export of foodstuffs from the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, promises to be less than in former years; and

Whereas the price of foodstuffs in the United States has been steadily climbing until it has become a serious problem for wage earners and salaried men to secure the bare necessities of life; and

Whereas we are advised that there is stored by food speculators in the commercial centers and elsewhere over our country large quantities of foodstuffs, which are held for speculation; and

Whereas we consider that speculation in foodstuffs should be prohibited by national law at all times, especially in times of war; and

Whereas we believe that in the present unsettled condition of affairs that prompt and effective measures should be taken to give much-needed relief to the whole people: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Key West Council of Defense, That the Congress of the United States be, and they are hereby, petitioned to enact a law requiring all persons, firms, and corporations, upon demand of the President, to furnish him with a detailed statement and list of all foodstuffs in their possession or under their control; that in said law the President be empowered to seize and take into his possession any and all foodstuffs in the United States that may be in the possession and control of any person, firm, or corporation, paying therefor such reasonable sum as he shall see fit, and that said foodstuffs be distributed throughout the country for sale to the people at cost; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to our Senators and Representatives in Congress and one copy to the Secretary of Agriculture.

Passed the council this April 25, 1917.

W. D. CASH, Sr., President.

Mr. THOMAS. I present a series of resolutions recently adopted at a meeting of citizens and consumers of the city of Denver, Colo. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution passed at a meeting of citizens and consumers of the city of Denver.

Whereas the declaration of war recently made by Congress was taken as an excuse for exorbitant increases in price of all staple articles of food; and

Whereas there is no more shortage of food now than before war was declared: Therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of this meeting of citizens of Denver and Colorado that we most seriously protest against the unjust, extortionate, and merciless increases in prices of food. There can be no one who will attempt to justify the advance of over $1 per hundredweight on sugar, the same on flour, and the same on potatoes, except on the theory that the speculators thought they could get it. The sugar, flour, or potatoes in the warehouses in this city had not cost any more because war had been declared, but the owners evidently felt that the people would have to stand and deliver whatever price they demanded: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we denounce such acts as unpatriotic and unworthy of good citizens and that we demand that the Federal Government take over the stocks of staple food, such as sugar, flour, potatoes, etc., including all necessities of life, and fix a maximum price for the sale of same.

Resolved further, That the President be asked to close up all stock exchanges speculating in foodstuffs.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to the President of the United States, the Federal Trade Commission, each of the Senators and Representatives from Colorado in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. I present resolutions of the Legislature of Massachusetts, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, 1917.

Resolutions requesting Congress to take measures regulating the price of anthracite coal and other commodities.

Resolved, That the Senate and House of Representatives of Massachusetts in general court assembled hereby request the Congress of the United States to take such measures as may be necessary, under the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution, to regulate the price at which anthracite coal may be sold by mining companies and their agents, in order to prevent the extortion which has been practiced upon the public, and especially upon the retail purchasers of coal; and that a maximum price be established for wheat, corn, oats, and other cereals and cereal products which so largely enter into the high cost of living in our Commonwealth and Nation; and

Resolved, That the secretary of the Commonwealth be directed to send copies of these resolutions to the presiding officers of both branches of Congress and to each Senator and Representative from Massachusetts in Congress.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Boston, April 17, 1917.

A true copy of resolutions adopted at the present session by the Senate and House of Representatives of Massachusetts in general court assembled.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that action will be taken.

The resolutions are as follows:

Mr. MYERS. I present a memorial of the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the memorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial 4. (By Mr. Snow (by request).)

To the President of the United States, the United States Senate, and the United States House of Representatives:

Your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the Territory of Alaska, most respectfully represent that—

Whereas the Government of the United States is now engaged in the construction of a railroad from Seward to Fairbanks, Alaska, for the purpose of developing the resources of the Territory tributary to said railroad;

Whereas several towns have been and will hereafter be established along the line of said railroad;

Whereas the act of March 12, 1914, authorizing the construction of said railroad empowers the President to withdraw and dispose of lands belonging to the United States for town-site purposes, and the said act further provides that all funds received from the sale or other disposition of town-site lands be paid into the Treasury of the United States as other miscellaneous receipts are paid;

Whereas most, if not all, of these new towns are established and located upon undeveloped land, which requires large expenditures of money to make it suitable for habitation; water supply must be furnished, streets and sidewalks constructed, as well as schoolhouses, municipal buildings, and other public improvements of that nature;

Whereas Congress has on many occasions, by law applicable to the disposition of town sites in other portions of the United States, provided that a certain portion of the funds received from the sale of town sites shall be devoted to making improvements within such towns: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we respectfully urge that suitable legislation be passed requiring that at least 50 per cent of the funds received from the sale of town sites sold under the provisions of the said railroad act be devoted to making improvements within the respective towns; be it further

Resolved, That a copy hereof be sent to the President of the United States, the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, the chairmen of the Committees on Territories and Public Lands of the United States Senate, and the chairmen of the Committees on the Territories and the Public Lands of the United States House of Representatives, the Hon. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, and the Delegate to Congress from Alaska.

Passed the house March 31, 1917.

Mr. MYERS presented a petition of the Inquiry Club, of Red Lodge, Mont., indorsing the action of the President and Congress in entering the present world war, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present a memorial from the Legislature of Alaska, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD, it not being the same as the memorial just presented from that body.

There being no objection, the memorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 5. (By Senator Sutherland.)

To the United States Senate and House of Representatives:

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska in third regular session assembled, do most respectfully and earnestly represent that—

Whereas there is now pending in the Congress of the United States H. R. 17499, introduced August 18, 1916, by Mr. ALEXANDER, of Missouri, and entitled "A bill for the protection, regulation, and conservation of the fisheries of Alaska, and for other purposes"; and

Whereas the fishermen and residents of the coast of Alaska have better knowledge of the requirements for regulation and conservation of the Alaskan fisheries than the legal advisers of the fisheries corporations and representatives of the United States Bureau of Fisheries who drafted H. R. 17499; and

Whereas section 22 of H. R. 17499 expressly prohibits the Territory of Alaska from levying taxes upon the business or property of the fisheries interests, and thus rescinds the rights granted this Territory by Congress under the Territorial organic act, and thereby retards the development of our Territory and the upbuilding of our public-school system; and

Whereas section 6 of H. R. 17499, which provides for title in perpetuity to holders of fish-trap sites in Alaskan waters, will surely lead to monopoly of the Alaskan fisheries and forever exclude portable fishing gear from certain sections of our tidewater; and

Whereas numerous appeals have been sent to the Congress of the United States from all sections of Alaska imploring Senators and Representatives to prevent this great injustice to Alaska: Now, therefore,

We, the representatives of the people of Alaska, in session assembled, do most respectfully urge that the provisions of the Alexander bill be not forced upon our people and that our rights to levy taxes given under our organic act be preserved to us.

And we would further appeal to Congress to grant the people of Alaska the right to control and regulate our own fisheries, and your memorialists will ever pray.

COUNTY MOBILIZATION BLANK.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I take a good deal of pleasure and feel some State pride in the fact that one of our counties, and I think many more, through its commercial organizations has attempted to organize in a systematic manner the resources of that county. They have undertaken the project, and are meeting with great success, of listing all the people in the county, getting their names, ages, where they live, their nationality, educational qualifications and employment as to every member of the family, and what that member is doing; also the resources of the family or the individual, the amount of land they own and cultivate, and various other things which are comprehended in a blank which I ask to have inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the blank was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MANISTEE BOARD OF COMMERCE,

ALLIES' TRIBUTE AT TOMB OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article in this morning's Washington Post giving an account of the visit yesterday of the French and English war commissions to the tomb of George Washington and the speeches made there by M. Viviani, Mr. Balfour, and Marshal Joffre.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"The flags of Great Britain, France, and the United States floated proudly together yesterday over the tomb of George Washington at Mount Vernon. Beneath them spokesmen of the three great democracies paid homage to America's soldier and statesman, and pledged themselves each to the other, in the name of the dead, to prosecute the present mighty struggle against autocracy on the lines he himself had followed in bringing America into being.

"Nature was in her most bounteous garb. The evergreens, eternal sentinels before the tomb, stood out boldly in the new life just blossoming. The only sign of human change since Washington was laid to rest so long ago was the flags of the three allies over the arched entrance to the tomb itself.

"In groups of twos and threes an eminent gathering, including the members of the French and British war commissions, the President's Cabinet, and Members of Congress, had strolled up through the sloping grounds from the river bank until perhaps 500 people stood with bared heads in a semicircle before the tomb.

"The day, which had been heavy and threatening as the party approached on the Mayflower, suddenly burst into sunlight, which played through the trees on the uniforms and faces of those assembled.

"Without formality Secretary Daniels motioned to M. Viviani, minister of justice and former premier of France, who advanced slowly into the center. Before the tomb of Washington, whose efforts toward liberty his own ancestors had gloriously aided, M. Viviani delivered an address, in which the whole force of his emotional power, deepened by the significance and somberness of the occasion, fought for expression.

"The spectators, though most of them could not understand French, caught the suppressed feeling and fire of the orator, and followed his words spellbound as they quickened under the thrill of his imagination. Apart from his voice not a sound could be heard.

"And as he finished the silence became supreme with the general realization that no applause could express the emotions aroused.

"M. Viviani said:

"'We could not remain longer in Washington without accomplishing this pious pilgrimage. In this spot lies all that is mortal of a great hero. Close by this spot is the modest abode where Washington rested after the tremendous labor of achieving for a nation its emancipation.

"'In this spot meet the admiration of the whole world and the veneration of the American people. In this spot rise before us the glorious memories left by the soldiers of France led by Rochambeau and Lafayette; a descendant of the latter, my friend, M. de Chambrun, accompanies us.

"'And I esteem it a supreme honor as well as a satisfaction for my conscience to be entitled to render this homage to our ancestors in the presence of my colleague and friend, Mr. Balfour, who so nobly represents his great nation. By thus coming to lay here the respectful tribute of every English mind he shows, in this historic moment of communion which France has willed, what nations that live for liberty can do.

"'When we contemplate in the distant past the luminous presence of Washington, in nearer times the majestic figure of Abraham Lincoln, when we respectfully salute President Wilson, the worthy heir of these great memories, we at one glance measure the vast career of the American people.

"'It is because the American people proclaimed and won for the Nation the right to govern itself, it is because it proclaimed and won the equality of all men, that the free American people at the hour marked by fate has been enabled with commanding force to carry its action beyond the seas; it is because it was resolved to extend its action still further that Congress was enabled to obtain within the space of a few days the vote of conscription and to proclaim the necessity for a national army in the full splendor of civil peace.

"'In the name of France I salute the young army which will share in our common glory.

"'While paying this supreme tribute to the memory of Washington I do not diminish the effect of my words when I turn my thought to the memory of so many unnamed heroes. I ask you before this tomb to bow in earnest meditation and all the fervor of piety before all the soldiers of the allied nations, who for nearly three years have been fighting under different flags for the same ideal.

"'I beg you to address the homage of your hearts and souls to all the heroes—born to live in happiness, in the tranquil pursuit of their labors, in the enjoyment of all human affections—who went into battle with virile cheerfulness and gave themselves up, not to death alone, but to the eternal silence that closes over those whose sacrifice remains unnamed, in the full knowledge that save for those who loved them their names would disappear with their bodies. Their monument is in our hearts. Not the living alone greet us here; the ranks of the dead themselves rise to surround the soldiers of liberty.

"'At this solemn hour in the history of the world, while saluting from this sacred mound the final victory of justice, I send to the Republic of the United States the greetings of the French Republic.'

"Then came forward Arthur James Balfour, foreign secretary of Great Britain, who stood for a moment in silence, a tall, erect, kindly figure. Overcome with all that the situation meant in the lives of the two great Anglo-Saxon countries, Mr. Balfour abandoned his decision not to speak and gave expression to a few poignant sentences, evidently straight from the heart. England had honored Washington as she never had before. Mr. Balfour said:

"'M. Viviani has expressed in most eloquent words the feelings which grip us all here to-day. He has not only paid a fitting tribute to a great statesman, but he has brought our thoughts most vividly down to the present.

"'The thousands who have given their lives—French, Russian, Italian, Belgian, Serbian, Montenegrin, Roumanian, Japanese, and British—were fighting for what they believed to be the cause of liberty.

"'There is no place in the world where a speech for the cause of liberty would be better placed than here at the tomb of Washington.

"'But as that work has been so adequately done by a master of oratory, perhaps you will permit me to read a few words prepared by the British mission for the wreath we are to leave here to-day—

"'"Dedicated by the British mission to the immortal memory of George Washington, soldier, statesman, patriot, who would have rejoiced to see the country of which he was by birth a citizen and the country which his genius called into existence, fighting side by side to save mankind from subjection to a military despotism."'

"Gov. Stuart, of Virginia, spoke as the host on Virginian soil: 'Washington,' he said, 'originally belonged to Virginia, but his priceless memory has now become a common heritage of the world. We consecrate here to-day a struggle bearing the supreme test of the issues for which he lived, fought, and died.'

"Marshal Joffre, victor of the Marne and idol of the French people, next came forward in field marshal's uniform.

"Simply, earnestly, he spoke in French two brief sentences:

"'In the French Army all venerate the name and memory of Washington. I respectfully salute here the great soldier and lay upon his tomb the palm we offer our soldiers who have died for their country.'

"Two French officers came forward with the bronze wreath from the French mission, the humblest and the highest mark of honor which the French nation can accord the dead.

"Bending over, the marshal passed through the narrow entrance and solemnly placed the wreath upon the stone coffin. He then stood silently at salute, the general who is accredited with saving France, to the general who won the liberty of the United States.

"As Marshal Joffre passed back among the spectators, Mr. Balfour came forward with the British wreath of lilies and oak leaves, tied with the colors of the three allied nations. He, too, entered the tomb, and placed the British token beside the French, while Lieut. Gen. Bridges stood outside at salute.

"There was neither music nor applause. Except from the brief words of the speakers, the eternal silence and peace of the place were not broken. The little gathering looked on with emotions too varied and profound for expression. And as Mr. Balfour withdrew, the spectators felt without being told that the ceremony was over. The party again broke into groups and filed up to the lawn of the Mount Vernon home.

"Never was Mount Vernon more beautiful than yesterday, as it stood out in all its stateliness amidst the new spring foliage. The visiting statesmen passed in and out about the rooms, examining all the heirlooms of Washington and resetting in their minds as far as possible the scenes amid which he lived. Mr. Balfour was the last to leave when the time came to start back to Washington.

"The party included the members of both the French and the British mission, their American military and naval aids, the Cabinet, Senator SWANSON and Representative PADGETT, chairmen of the House and Senate Naval Committees; Col. E. M. House; and a few Government officials. The trip was made on the presidential yacht Mayflower. Both on arrival and departure the whole company stood at salute as a bugler played taps and the band the Star-Spangled Banner."

HOMESTEAD RESIDENCE FOR MILITARY SERVICE.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 1811) providing for the counting of service in the Army or Navy of the United States as equivalent to residence and cultivation upon homestead entries, and in the event of the soldiers' death in such service providing for the issuance of patent for such land to his widow or minor children, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 32) thereon.

CHANGE OF DIE OF QUARTER DOLLARS.

Mr. OWEN. From the Committee on Banking and Currency, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 2099) providing for the modification of the designs of the current quarter dollar, and I submit a report (No. 31) thereon. It authorizes the Director of the Mint to change the recent die for the quarter dollar. The quarters do not stack up and it is necessary to make a small concavity in order to enable them to stack without toppling. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. What is the measure?

Mr. OWEN. It is to make a slight concavity in the present die of the United States quarter so as to stack up. The Director of the Mint is about to issue a large number and he wants to change the die so that in putting them in a stack they will not topple.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of increasing the artistic merit of the current quarter dollar, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to make slight modifications in the details of the designs in accordance with sketches submitted by the sculptor whose models were accepted under date of May 23, 1916, and now being used in the execution of the coins.

No changes shall be made in the emblems or devices used. The modifications shall consist of the changing of the position of the eagle, the rearrangement of the stars and lettering, and a slight concavity given to the surface. Such changes shall be made and completed on or before July 1, 1918.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WARREN. After the experience we had some years ago with the St. Gaudens coin, that would not stack, and we had to provide for a new die, I should like to ask the author of the bill how it happens that a model is accepted and adopted as the law of the land before it is known whether the coins will stack?

Mr. OWEN. It was found after they had actually made them that they did not stack well, and for that reason it became of some importance to change the die. I do not know how it occurred, in the first place, but they have to change the position of the eagle in order to prevent the coins from toppling when stacked.

Mr. WARREN. Could not that have been ascertained just as well before?

Mr. OWEN. It ought to have been ascertained before, but the Director of the Mint makes this request, and we think it is necessary to comply with it for the convenience of the public.

Mr. WARREN. In other words, we have to pass a law to correct the careless error of some subordinate.

Mr. OWEN. I am afraid I shall have to plead guilty to that charge against the Director of the Mint.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENLISTMENTS IN FOREIGN ARMIES.

Mr. OVERMAN. I report back favorably from the Committee on the Judiciary the bill (H. R. 2893) to amend section 10 of chapter 2 of the Criminal Code, and I ask for its present consideration. I wish to state that I asked unanimous consent for the consideration of this bill a few days ago, and there was some objection to the Senate committee amendment. The committee has withdrawn its amendment and has reported the House bill favorably. So I do not think anyone will object to its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator what are the specific changes made?

Mr. OVERMAN. The changes allow the allies' reservists in this country who are not naturalized to be enlisted in the armies of the allies.

Mr. GRONNA. What are the changes from the present law?

Mr. OVERMAN. The only change from the present law is that now no one is allowed to enlist in a foreign army at all. The bill allows French and English who have not taken out letters of naturalization to enlist in their own armies.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, until we can give some consideration to the protection of the ships in which they will have to be transported to the seat of war I shall object to any measures pertaining to the matter contained in the bill. Therefore I object to its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

HEARING BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. THOMPSON. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 48, submitted by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], I report it back favorably with an amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendment was, in line 2, after the word "authorized," to insert "during the Sixty-fifth Congress," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized during the Sixty-fifth Congress to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not to exceed $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee; that the committee may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate; and that expenses contracted hereunder shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. THOMPSON. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably with amendments Senate resolution 50, submitted by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], and I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendments were, in line 2, after the word "authorized," to insert "during the Sixty-fifth Congress," and in line 4, after the word "stenographer," to insert "at a cost not to exceed $1 per printed page," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized during the Sixty-fifth Congress to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not to exceed $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee, that the committee may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate, and that the expense thereof be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The amendments were agreed to.

YAKIMA INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. ASHURST. From the Committee on Indian Affairs, I report back favorably the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 43) making available the $200,000 appropriation for irrigation purposes on the Yakima Indian Reservation in the State of Washington, carried in the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I will say that the Indian Office have advised me that unless this is done the work which is now going on will either have to be entirely suspended about a month before the 1st of July or else it will have to be slowed down very greatly. For that reason I ask for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. McCUMBER. I object, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution goes to the calendar.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SMITH of Georgia:

AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

Mr. GORE. I introduce a joint resolution, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I wish to state that I introduce this joint resolution as by request. It has been prepared as one of the war-emergency measures—prepared by the Department of Agriculture. I introduce it now in order to serve as a basis for the deliberations of the committee and in order to dispatch such legislation as the committee may finally recommend and Congress may see fit to enact.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 44) to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

ENEMY VESSELS.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I send to the desk a joint resolution, which I should like to have read and lie on the table.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 47) requesting the President of the United States to requisition vessels of alien enemies was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Whereas the activities of the Imperial German Government, in its efforts to destroy the commercial vessels of the United States, its allies, and the vessels of neutral powers, creates an immediate emergency and an extreme necessity to at once replenish in a practical way the loss of ships thus sustained: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to at once requisition all vessels of alien enemies of the United States in the ports and waters of the United States or elsewhere found, and to use the same in the prosecution of the war against the Imperial German Government in such trade or manner as will, in his judgment, best subserve the interests of the United States and its allies.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I think it is fair to the Senate and to myself to say a word or two of explanation as to the motives which impel me to introduce this joint resolution. This is particularly true because of the fact that I understand that a bill or a joint resolution is now under consideration by the Committee on the Judiciary having in view the determination of some method by which the idle alien enemy vessels which are lying rotting at our wharves may be utilized to the advantage of the United States and its allies. Any result obtained by that committee and recommended to the Senate that accomplishes the purpose will meet with my heartiest approval and support. It is not my purpose to press this joint resolution as against anything else equally good and equally expeditious.

But, Mr. President, we are informed by this morning's newspapers that the imperial German chancellor has within the last few hours notified the Reichstag and the German people that the result of the unrestricted submarine warfare within the past 60 days has been the destruction of 1,600,000 tonnage, and that Germany, through that method, will win in spite of the United States.

It is high time, Mr. President, that almost an equal amount of tonnage belonging to Germans lying in our ports should be made the target for this attack; and if it is true, as Mr. Lloyd-George says, that the necessity in this war is ships, ships, and then more ships, we are not only guilty of a blunder, but of a crime in allowing these bottoms to lie unused.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I desire to say that the majority of the Committee on the Judiciary now has under consideration the bill to which the Senator from Pennsylvania refers and will report it very shortly—I think within a few hours.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, as I said in the opening of my remarks, I shall be content if the committee will report legislation covering the subject matter. This is not at all antagonistic to the committee; it is intended, and solely intended, to bring to the attention of the Senate the imperative necessity of speed. While I do not contend that this is the only method by which possession of these vessels can be attained—because there are other methods, possibly three—but this is a lawful method; and the exigencies of the situation justify our adopting it, if another and equally good one is not presently presented.

Let me read to you, Senators, not for the purpose of prolonging what I may have to say upon this subject—because I shall discuss it at length if the joint resolution is called from the table for consideration—but merely for the purpose of setting before you a guide by which your minds may be instructed, a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States as to the right of the Executive, by requisition, to bring to the use of the arms of the United States even the property of our own citizens. Reading from the case of United States against Russell, reported in Thirteenth Wallace, at page 625, and decided in 1871 in connection with a case where an assistant quartermaster had requisitioned a steamboat upon one of our western rivers by a mere order of a quartermaster acting under the authority of the President as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, the Supreme Court, in upholding the validity of that act, said:

Extraordinary and unforeseen occasions arise where, in time of war or of immediate and impending public danger, in which private property may be impressed into the public service or may be seized or appropriated to the public use or may even be destroyed without the consent of the owner. Unquestionably such extreme cases may arise, as where the property taken is necessary in time of war to construct defenses or the preservation of military posts at the moment of an imminent attack by the enemy or for food or for medicine for a sick and famishing army utterly destitute and without other means of supply.

Mr. President, can it be said that there is a doubt about that proposition? Can it be possible that general officers could march brigades of starving men past warehouses filled with food and fodder and be forced to go into a court to have an injunction as to the title of the goods contained in the warehouse? Such an officer would be properly hanged at the nearest tree if he would allow his army and beasts to starve in the shadow of a storehouse of plenty.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. KNOX. I do.

Mr. SHIELDS. I desire to ask the Senator a question in regard to the subject which he is discussing. I agree with his premise that as to movable property of the enemy wherever found by the Army it can be immediately confiscated, and no resort to any character of tribunal is necessary; but does that rule apply to ships? Is it not necessary, under the laws of nations and even under our statutes, that they first be condemned by a proper tribunal in order that our title may be recognized and they be protected from recapture and other incidents of warfare upon the high seas?

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I unhesitatingly state that not only can ships of an alien enemy, whether they be ships of government—and, of course, in respect to ships of government we seize them as a direct act of war—or ships of citizens of a power with which we are at war, may be requisitioned, but that our existing treaty with Germany and The Hague treaties dealing with this suggestion both clearly recognize that right.

I had not intended to discuss that phase of the subject, and I will say nothing further upon that point now; but if this resolution must be resorted to as a means to put these vessels into the active service of humanity, I am in favor of meeting those questions.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senate that the Department of Justice submitted a few days ago a joint resolution along the line of the joint resolution submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania, but subsequently called attention to the fact that there were claims to these vessels by citizens other than aliens, and asked that provision be made in connection with the bill covering these claims, although, of course, we do not contemplate suspending the immediate use of the vessels; and I am sure that the Judiciary Committee will report to-day a bill upon the subject, and ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if I may ask the Senator a question, is it not true that a decision of one of our prize courts would be no answer whatever to a foreign nation or a foreign claimant; and, so far as our own claims go or the claims of friendly neutrals, those can be dealt with after taking the ships as well as before?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Our own Supreme Court has recognized the decisions of prize courts in other countries; but a number of other nations have failed to do so. I consider that a mere academic question. These vessels will sail to our allies across the water, and if our Government takes over the vessels and sails them we know there will be no interference with them. I do not consider it worth while to stop to consider that.

The only thing the Judiciary Committee may do is to suggest a way in connection with taking these vessels that American citizens and neutrals may have a speedy opportunity to adjust any claims they may hold against the vessels. I think we should take them at once; we should start them upon the ocean just as quickly as they are ready to sail, and use them, and settle these other questions hereafter.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I desire, partly in answer to the question asked by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], to say a few words. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] made a statement that some nations recognize the judgments of prize courts and some others do not, but I think the Senator from Georgia will remember that a great majority of the nations of the world recognize decisions by prize courts. Such proceedings are proceedings in rem, the court having jurisdiction of the property. The necessity of the case requires such recognition, and generally by the laws of nations they are recognized. Now, referring to——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I am utterly opposed to carrying these vessels into a prize court. I think our title will be just as completely recognized in the countries to which they will sail as if adjudication had been had by a prize court; and I do not think we ought to delay one single day to use them.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. SHIELDS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KNOX. Prize courts are created not to adjudicate upon vessels that have been seized by requisition or other process, but are created for the purpose of passing upon captured vessels; and in the event of a seizure by such a method as proposed by this resolution, just as the Senator from Massachusetts suggested a moment ago, compensation awaits the event of the war and is determined by the treaty of peace.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Tennessee will yield to me, I have favored confiscating these ships, taking them over, and using them at once. If any citizen of the United States has a just claim, let us have a commission such as we had after the Civil War and let such parties, American citizens, as have interests have their claims heard before a commission appointed after the war closes.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, the joint resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania provides for the acquisition of these ships. The joint resolution now pending before the committees of the Senate and of the other House provides for the confiscation of these vessels as enemy property—not a mere matter of requisition.

As to prize courts, the Senator from Georgia was not using that term, I apprehend, in its strict technical sense. The Senator from Pennsylvania is right about that. A ship captured upon the sea is taken before a prize court, but there is a separate principle governing as to other vessels——

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. SHIELDS. In a moment. But that has no reference as to what is proposed to be done by the joint resolution. It is to confiscate these ships, not merely to requisition them. If they belong to Germany, they are enemy property and we have a right and ought, in view of the manner in which Germany has treated our ships and our people upon th high seas, absolutely to confiscate them and devote them to public purposes. That is the object of the joint resolution now pending in the Judiciary Committee. It is a question of having such vessels adjudged as enemy ships and confiscated that has been pending before the committee. I apprehend the Senator from Florida is going to say that there has been a favorable report upon the joint resolution before the committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. I was going to say that the resolution will be reported to the Senate in a very short time, and the discussion can take place on that joint resolution when it comes up for consideration.

Mr. SHIELDS. It has been stated that that joint resolution would be favorably reported during the day. I thought the Senator was going to say that it had been reported.

Mr. FLETCHER. It has been agreed on, and will be reported very shortly. If there is a pending resolution involving this question, of course it had better go to the committee or be postponed until the bill will be here, when it can be offered as a substitute and discussed.

Mr. SHIELDS. I did not understand that the Senator from Pennsylvania was asking for immediate action upon the joint resolution introduced by him.

Mr. KNOX. I was not, Mr. President, asking for immediate consideration; but if there is any suggestion of referring the resolution to the committee I will ask for it. I said I was willing to wait a reasonable time to see whether the Judiciary Committee would report a measure that was equally expeditious and effective. If they do, I shall be perfectly willing to withdraw the resolution I have offered and support the one reported by the committee; but I want the joint resolution I have introduced to lie on the table, so that, if action becomes necessary, if we get word to-morrow that 40 or 50 more ships have been sunk, we can get these enemy vessels ready for use; or at least get the Congress of the United States on record that that is the program that we intend to follow.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I desire to say that there has been no unnecessary delay in the consideration of this matter by the Judiciary Committee. It presents some very grave questions of international law, which have been fully considered. The committee met every day last week to consider them as much as possible, on account of the important matters that were then before the Senate, and I believe the resolution that will eventually be reported is much more efficacious than this one and will afford more prompt and effective relief.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I believe that the President has full authority now, without any action by Congress, under the war power to take possession of those ships, and I hope he will do so. Then we can pass resolutions and discuss the international aspects of them afterwards, and we can take the question into court afterwards, but we want those ships now. Every hour is of importance. I have not any question of the President's power. What we want is to have those ships taken. There is not any power on earth that will question our title, excepting Germany and Austria, and we are going to settle with them in other ways. I hope the President is having them worked on now; I hope he will put them to sea as quickly as he can; and then, at our leisure, we can discuss the international legal aspects of the matter and pass any resolutions we wish.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I think I can answer that suggestion by saying that the ships are all being put in perfect shape to sail, and they will begin sailing, I am confident, this week.

Mr. LODGE. I know that, and that is the reason I said what I did.

Mr. JAMES. They will probably sail before this debate is concluded.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; they will sail, I hope, a long time before this debate is over, for the debate will, I fear, be very long.

Mr. JAMES. That is right.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am afraid if this espionage bill were enacted now some of our Members would be getting into trouble for giving out information. I want to say, so that it may be plainly understood, that in a few minutes' time the bill, which has been gone over by the State Department and by the Department of Justice and by the Judiciary Committee, will be here ready for action; and I therefore hope that the Senator from Pennsylvania will withhold his resolution, in order that that bill may be taken up. I think it will be here within the hour.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is the introduction of bills and joint resolutions.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I wish to say a word or two about the joint resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX].

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] advises the Senate that the Judiciary Committee has pending before it a measure which covers substantially the ground covered by the joint resolution offered this morning by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to say that the matter is not really pending any longer before the committee? The committee has agreed upon it, and is ready to report it.

Mr. STONE. I have not seen the resolution or bill which has been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I have heard the joint resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania read this morning, and that is the extent of my information as to that.

Mr. President, I was one of those who very ardently supported the bill which was before the Senate some months ago authorizing the Shipping Board to purchase these interned foreign vessels. That measure was vigorously and successfully opposed by Senators who are now urging that they be commandeered. If they shall be commandeered for temporary use, I should like to know what disposition will be made of them ultimately.

Of course I can understand the proposal that they be employed for the time being in transporting provisions and other supplies to our allies in Europe. If they are not destroyed en route, going or coming, are they still to be the property of the United States after the war? If so, are they to become and be a part of the commercial fleet which the Shipping Board is to create and control?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. STONE. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The joint resolution which was spoken of a moment ago, and which probably will be reported in a few moments, expressly provides that the title to these ships may be taken over by the President of the United States, and that they may be operated under the direction of the Shipping Board or other proper agency of the United States. That is what the pending measure provides, and I think properly provides.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Missouri, as has been stated to the Senate, that the joint resolution which has been under consideration by the Judiciary Committee will be reported within an hour; and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] has stated to the Senate that he does not desire to take up his joint resolution now, but will await the report of the Judiciary Committee when it comes in. I will ask the Senator, therefore, if he will not defer his discussion of the question until that measure comes in?

Mr. STONE. Yes; I am willing to do that. I was addressing myself to the joint resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania on the theory that it was to be acted on now.

Mr. JAMES. That could be done only by unanimous consent.

Mr. STONE. Of course it could be done only by unanimous consent, but I did not suppose anybody was objecting to taking it up.

Mr. JAMES. There is nothing before the Senate now.

Mr. STONE. If there is nothing before the Senate, I have no wish to proceed. I will wait until we have the issue properly presented.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there further bills or joint resolutions?

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, out of order, from the Committee on the Judiciary, I report favorably with amendments the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 42) authorizing the President to take over for the United States the possession and title of vessels of any subject or citizen of any nation with which the United States may be at war, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I had stated that I would object to all of these outside measures. I consider this an appropriate measure at this time to carry out the general idea on the other side of the Chamber that by overfeeding the submarine you can destroy it. I therefore shall not object to the consideration of the joint resolution at this time.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I regret very much that the entire morning hour may be lost, because I wish to introduce a Senate resolution. I shall, however, take the chances of obtaining unanimous consent to introduce that resolution later on.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may we have the joint resolution read? It is not very long, and I should like to have it read.

Mr. KNOX. May I inquire whether this is the report from the Judiciary Committee?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The SECRETARY. The committee recommends striking out all after the resolving clause and inserting the following words:

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to take over to the United States the possession and title of any vessel within the jurisdiction thereof, including the Canal Zone and all territories and insular possessions of the United States, except the American Virgin Islands, which at the time of coming into such jurisdiction was owned in whole or in part by any corporation, citizen, or subject of any nation with which the United States may be at war when such vessel shall be taken, or was flying the flag of or was under register of any such nation or any political subdivision or municipality thereof; and, through the United States Shipping Board, or any department or agency of the Government, to operate, lease, charter, and equip such vessel in any service of the United States, or in any commerce, foreign or coastwise.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint, subject to the approval of the President, a board of survey, whose duty it shall be to ascertain the actual value of the vessel, its equipment, appurtenances, and all property contained therein, at the time of its taking, and to make a written report of their findings to the Secretary of the Navy, who shall preserve such report with the records of his department. These findings shall be considered as competent evidence in all proceedings hereinafter authorized on any claim for compensation.

SEC. 3. That any person or corporation may institute a suit against the United States of America in the Court of Claims thereof for the recovery of the damages which he may sustain through the exercise of the power herein conferred upon the President. Such damages shall be limited to just compensation for the interest or right of which claimant is deprived by reason of such taking. In ascertaining such compensation there shall be excluded any value added to the vessel by reason of work done or improvements placed thereon by the United States. In order to recover a judgment the claimant must prove that he was the owner at the time of taking of the interest or right for whose taking he seeks compensation; and that no nation with which the United States may be at war at the time of such taking, or at the time of rendition of judgment, nor any corporation, subject, or citizen of such nation, has any interest, direct or indirect, in such claim, or in the judgment which may be rendered thereon; and that claimant acquired in good faith and for substantial consideration the right or interest, for whose taking he seeks compensation, prior to the commencement of war with the nation whose citizen or subject owned, in whole or in part, the vessel taken, or under the register or flag of which such vessel was at the time of entry into the jurisdiction of the United States; if claimant be a corporation it must also prove that the majority of its stock is not owned by subjects or citizens of a nation with which the United States may be at war and was not so owned at the beginning of such war. If the required facts be established the court shall have power to render judgment for the amount due claimant subject to the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States; but if such facts be not established the court shall render no judgment and shall make a report to Congress stating its findings of fact.

SEC. 4. The Court of Claims is hereby authorized to make all needful rules and regulations not contravening the laws of the land or terms of this act for executing the provisions hereof.

SEC. 5. All claims upon which suit may not be instituted prior to the expiration of one year from the date of exchange of ratifications of a treaty of peace with the Imperial German Government shall be forever barred.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I desire to ask a question for information. I notice that the reported amendment provides for the seizing of vessels which may be owned by corporations, citizens, or subjects of a country with which the United States may be at war. Are any of these vessels in fact owned by the Imperial German Government? If so, it seems to me that the language should be made more comprehensive.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I think the language includes vessels owned by governments as well as by individuals or subjects or corporations of those governments with which the United States is at war. I think the language is broad enough to cover the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio. It covers all vessels owned by corporations, citizens, or subjects or flying the flag of a foreign nation.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask the Senator if it is not true that the power to seize the vessels of a belligerent government needs no legislation?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that is so. Strictly government vessels, of course, would not require any legislation of this sort.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator having this joint resolution in charge—it is not printed, and the amendment has merely come to the desk, and therefore we have not had an opportunity to study it carefully—as to whether the purpose of the joint resolution is to fix at this time the status of the right of persons claiming ownership in these foreign vessels to go into our courts at a future time and sue the United States?

Mr. FLETCHER. It provides that where there is any interest or any lien or any claim against any of these vessels by an American citizen, for instance, it may be hereafter adjusted in the Court of Claims.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, does it not go further than American citizens?

Mr. FLETCHER. It includes neutrals also; but as to those citizens or subjects or corporations of countries with which the United States is at war at the time of the seizure or at the time of the adjudication, it provides that those cases may be determined in the Court of Claims simply as to the facts, and the Court of Claims is to report those facts back to Congress. The joint resolution provides that no judgment shall be entered in those cases by the Court of Claims.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I am not going to try to delay the passage of this bill, because I agree with what has been said this morning, that if there is one thing our Government ought to do at this time it is to secure ships and put them in commission to carry the necessary supplies to our allies and bring this war to an early conclusion. As I understand it, the Government of the United States has the right to do that now without any legislation, and is proceeding to do it without any legislation.

On the question as to whether the owners of these vessels should be paid the value of the vessels, I think it is a question that ought to be determined in the future. The German Government sank our ships on the high seas when we were a neutral power, and I have heard nothing to indicate that they are prepared to pay American citizens for the sinking of those ships the value of those ships; and when we have German vessels in our hands, as far as I am concerned, I am not disposed to pay the citizens of Germany the value of that property until they are prepared to pay our citizens the value of the property they have destroyed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In just one minute. When you pay a lien of an American citizen on a German ship you may release a German citizen from his obligation under the lien. I fear you are clearing the way for our enemies hereafter to establish a precedent for the payment for their property.

I am not going to interfere with the passage of the joint resolution. Of course, I feel that it is of the utmost importance that these ships should go to sea, but I must say, as far as I am concerned, I think all the action that is needed to-day, if any action is needed at all, for the Congress of the United States is to pass a bill directing and authorizing the President of the United States to take over these ships, put them in commission and use them, and then leave the question as to whether we should pay for them or pay for the use of the ships to be determined when the war is over and the status of American citizens and the status of German citizens is fixed by a treaty of peace.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, after hearing the joint resolution read I still think that a safer course would be that the possession and the use of those vessels should be obtained through Executive action. I think it was a most considerate and excellent policy at this stage of the war and in the general condition of the lack of knowledge in the public mind of the questions clustering around a foreign war that the President should in some form have sought the aid of Congress, but I believe that we can give him the assistance to which he is justly entitled through the request or—and that is the language of my resolution—through the request or suggestion that the end will be better subserved through the war powers of the Government rather than through the legislative power.

My reasons in brief are these: You must distinguish upon the threshold of the consideration of a question of this character between the acquisition of the title of the vessel and the acquisition of the use of the vessel, and you must consider the difference between requisition and conscription. Our treaties with Germany and the sixth treaty of The Hague distinctly provide, and it has been the universal use and custom of civilized powers engaged in war, that merchant vessels lying in each other's ports should be given a certain number of days to load and depart, and that the Government from whose ports they sailed guaranteed immunity until they reached their home port. That provision is in the treaty of 1799 with Prussia, and is also distinctly recognized in the treaty of 1828 by which that treaty was extended and amplified.

Mr. President, the sixth treaty of The Hague, and when I say sixth I am merely indicating the numeral to it—it was one of a number of treaties so designated—the sixth treaty of The Hague contained a distinct provision that enemy ships should be granted this privilege and should be granted the immunity to reach their home ports. We, it is true, are not signatories to the sixth treaty. We did not sign it, and the reason why we did not ratify and proclaim that provision is because the representatives of the United States at The Hague, headed by that distinguished statesman from New York, Mr. Choate, contended that the provisions of that treaty, liberal though they were as to vessels in these ports, was not liberal enough, and for that reason he withheld his approval, and for that reason the United States never bound itself to it. That is to say, Mr. Choate and subsequently the Government of the United States declined in any way to concede that under any circumstances a vessel belonging to an alien enemy or citizens of a Government with which we are at war should be seized and conscripted and her title taken away from her.

But, Mr. President, The Hague convention dealt quite differently with the question of requisition. I read now a clause from the sixth treaty, speaking of the right of a belligerent to detain enemies' vessels in their ports:

> The belligerent may only detain it without payment of compensation but subject to the obligation of restoring it after the war or requisitioning it on payment of compensation.

In this connection I want to call your attention to what Great Britain has done in this situation, finding, as we found, a large number of German merchant vessels in her ports. In this connection it is to be noted that on the 10th of February, 1915, the British secretary of state for foreign affairs addressed the American ambassador, and after referring to the act of the German Government in destroying British shipping and the consequent need for vessels stated what I now read from the British secretary's language:

> To ease the situation His Majesty's Government are resorting to the power of requisitioning which is given by the convention (Hague convention No. VI), so that these ships may again be placed in active service.

So our great maritime ally, Great Britain, rather than take over the title to these vessels subject to paying compensation after the war, requisitioned the vessels, which leaves Great Britain and would leave us in this position, that at the conclusion of the war we would have the option to say we have taken the use of your vessels during the war, and all we are responsible for is the value of that use, less the wear and tear, depreciation, and damage that they have sustained. Necessarily, if the Senate should adopt this theory of acquiring the use of these vessels, it would not be necessary to make all these provisions about the ascertainment of liens, the ascertainment of the division of the title, or anything else, because, they being taken as the vessels of an alien enemy, there would be no method of charging, no machinery which was created, and no possible way of adjustment until the conclusion of the war.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I am impressed with a fact that both the Senators seem to have inadvertently overlooked—the fact of the provisions of the treaty of 1828, which did exist between this country and Germany, and as the eminent Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] did not say, but I am assuming that the Senator's utterances were equivalent to the expression of the view that those provisions of the treaty of 1828 are the same as the treaty of 1798.

But, Mr. President, when the treaty of 1828 was concluded—and I am not aware of any amendment to that particular feature; the eminent Senator from Pennsylvania, with his very long and characteristic and able experience, I am sure will correct me if I am in error—there having been no amendment since that time, we are confronted with the following situation: There is a provision which substantially provides what shall be the course between countries, if they shall become belligerents, as to the seizure of ships which have gone into the ports of belligerent countries previous to the declaration of war.

We entered into an understanding with four countries, one of which was Germany, and if I am not in error we specifically contracted that ships which had arrived at a port in peace before the war had been declared may be seized, may be taken, and that after the cessation of hostilities there could be adjustment made between the countries as to the form of compensation for those ships so appropriated or impressed.

I am inclined to the idea that so long as that treaty is existing, unless it shall be held that the declaration of war has disrupted every treaty and unless it shall be held that the treaty is at an end, the provisions of that obligation are binding upon us, particularly so if we expect that same obligation under the law of nations to be binding upon Germany as to our countrymen and property who are in Berlin and our citizens who are in Germany. I would regard it as a dangerous thing if we should offer an opportunity to Germany to charge us with violating the provisions of a treaty that specifically provided the course of treatment of her property or her people in America while war was on, and that for that she could suggest an excuse for likewise violating the obligations with us as to our property or our people who might be in Germany while the war is on. I therefore call the attention of the able Members of this body to the provision, that we contracted that upon the seizure of just such ships situated just as these are at the close of the hostilities, then and there there should be such adjustment between the countries, based on the provisions of international law and the now existing treaties.

I most respectfully urge upon this honorable body that if we shall pass a law here which shall provide the seizure of these ships through an act of Congress we first by that act practically renounce our privileges as a warring nation. If we are at war, we are at war, and under the privileges of war we have a right to seize ships, not from the act of legislation but by virtue of the authority of being at war. We seize the ships because we reserved the privilege of doing that which warring nations have ever done under similar conditions.

The declaration of the treaty, as the eminent Senator from Pennsylvania and others will no doubt assert, is a mere declaration of international law which has existed for more than 400 years.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I call the Senator's attention to a fact?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. There are no provisions in the treaty in conflict with the proposed legislation. The treaty of 1799 expired by limitation. The treaty of 1828 was entered into, and the only provision in the original treaty of 1799 carried into the treaty of 1828 was article 23, which reads as follows:

If war should arise between the two contracting parties, the merchants of either country then residing in the other shall be allowed to remain nine months to collect their debts and settle their affairs, and may depart freely, carrying off all their effects without molestation or hindrance.

That is the only provision in any treaty bearing at all on this question, and it can be plainly seen that it is not applicable to ships at all. It is only applicable to persons who reside in this country, and provides that they may have nine months to collect their debts and settle their affairs and get away.

Mr. LEWIS. While I esteem the interruption of the Senator from Florida in a matter like this, I must differ from the able Senator. The provisions have received construction at The Hague conference, at which it fell to my lot, if you will pardon a personal reference, to be present in 1907. I recall specifically how the matter was initiated. The representative from France opened the discussion with a charge against Great Britain of wrongful conduct concerning certain French vessels in the French possessions of South Africa, which had been the basis, as we recall, of hostilities previously between Great Britain and Africa.

I must say to the able Senator from Florida, knowing his industry in this matter, that he has inadvertently in his great pursuit overlooked the fact that it has been contended and accepted wherever vessels were vessels of companies as these vessels I am sure the able Senator will admit, were to be treated as vessels of merchants and to be treated as private ownership and to that extent can not be treated as Government vessels, but must be treated as private property of the companies of which they were.

Now, I will recall to the able Senator's attention, and this is the point of my observation, if I may take his judgment on this matter, and I will be pleased to have his judgment—I fear if we shall proceed by a legislative act in direct violation of what can be readily considered by the nations—the peaceful intelligent nations of the world—to be at variance with the treaty and its meaning we will authorize the belligerents as to property of ours and people of ours to feel themselves released from the obligation of any treaty and to propose and pass legislation contrary to the treaty—and prescribe that in their courts shall be decided the whole question—without representation of the United States or of her people involved. More than this, as to Germany, we will justify other countries of the world to feel the same way. I think we should be prudent, lest we should set the precedent.

Now, second, I regard it most unwise from my viewpoint that we should provide in a measure that the foreign country to be paid or its people to be paid that these shall go into the Court of Claims of the United States. We have a specific act creating the Court of Claims. We have authorized our citizens to go into that court; and they must go into the court, as the eminent Senator recognizes, to have their claims adjudicated; and then there has to be an act of Congress to satisfy the judgment. We ought not to do such a thing in the case of foreigners or foreign countries.

The method the able Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] suggests appeals much to me. If we are to adopt a method at all, sir, it should be through the diplomatic department or through the Executive department, in so far as compensation is to be provided. We ought not to provide here, sir, that it should be done by forcing these people to come into the Court of Claims, litigate in the United States in a form that is distinctively ours. After the war is over an international tribunal, or some kind of a tribunal that is not distinctively a forum of our own, ought to be created in which some of their people have a right to sit in the judgment—some diplomatic officer or some commissioner. We should not now say that they shall come into our court with our judges, our lawyers, and our advocates—our tribunal. That, sir, does not appeal to me to be in the spirit of the meaning of the treaty, and at the very outset will give, if not cause, atmosphere to the charge of direct unfairness; and, as I see it, in direct violation of all international precedent in matters of this kind.

Thirdly, may I submit to the able chairman——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LEWIS. Gladly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator yield to me to move an executive session to consider this matter?

Mr. LEWIS. I have only a few more observations to submit, if the Senator will permit me, and then will yield to him. I desire to present one conclusion which will not touch international relations. I realize, of course, what the Senator has in mind.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I think there is some wisdom in considering this matter in executive session.

Mr. LEWIS. I may say to the Senator that he may have observed—if I may be forgiven for making a personal allusion to myself—that I have been guilty of stammering, of halting, and of hesitancy this morning—naturally a little different from my usual custom—for, having suffered from a curse of flow of speech for which I have always had to pay the penalty, this hesitancy in phrasing on my part was to avoid words and expressions that would have entered into the field the Senator in his discretion is now seeking to avoid. I agree with him that it should be avoided. I can be depended upon to not lose sight of the situation.

I now wish to ask—and to this I invite the attention of Senators—third, is it wise that we should provide in a measure, if we pass any at all, remitting these people to our courts solely and wholly, refusing any audience——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LEWIS. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. I inquire of the Senator from Illinois whether he does not agree that the further discussion of this subject would be most appropriately had in executive session?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. If Senators feel that the subject matter should be discussed in executive session, Mr. President, it having been initiated here in the legislative session and necessarily brought up for dicussion, I would readily yield to the wisdom of the Senate on that subject, of course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Nebraska for the purpose of moving an executive session?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. He is compelled to yield, under the rules, at any time.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. One at a time.

Mr. LODGE. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is now asking whether the Senator from Illinois will yield to the Senator from Nebraska for the purpose of moving an executive session?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. LODGE. It is on that question that I rose to a point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is what I rose for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will be recognized in due course, but the Senate will do no business until Senators are properly recognized. The Chair has put an inquiry to the Senator from Illinois, which he has not answered. The Senator from Massachusetts has now addressed the Chair. For what purpose does the Senator address the Chair?

Mr. LODGE. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts will state his question of order.

Mr. LODGE. The question of order is that a Senator moving that this subject be discussed behind closed doors does not have to ask the Senator holding the floor to yield. That is the question of order. A Senator can make such a motion at any time, and if the motion is seconded the Senate must proceed behind closed doors and decide whether they will discuss the question secretly or in the open.

Mr. LEWIS. I had yielded to the Senator from Nebraska; so that there is no need of raising points of order or to make an issue upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is said by the Senator from Massachusetts is perfectly true, as is known to the Senate; but the motion is to proceed to the consideration of executive business, not to close the doors. Therefore the point of order is overruled. The Chair now reiterates its inquiry to the Senator from Illinois and asks him if the yields for that purpose?

Mr. LEWIS. I gladly yield to the Senator that he may submit the matter to the wisdom of the Senate as to whether we will go into executive session.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I move now that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. A motion is not required under the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia will kindly address the Chair before he proceeds.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I thought I said "Mr. President."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. But the Senator from Georgia was not recognized. The Senator from Georgia is now recognized.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, on motion by one Senator, seconded by another, the Senate goes into executive session as a matter of course. I second the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is overruled. The Senator from Nebraska moves that the Senate of the United States now proceed to the consideration of executive business. All in favor of that motion will say "aye."

Mr. LODGE. I second the motion. In those circumstances the Senate has to proceed behind closed doors. The motion does not have to be put.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is being put.

Mr. LODGE. If one Senator raises the point and another seconds it, the Senate goes behind closed doors, and no vote can prevent it under the rules of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The difficulty is that the motion is to proceed to the consideration of executive business, not to close the doors.

Mr. POMERENE. I think the question must be put in executive session, as I remember the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is very evident the Senate desires to go into executive session, and they will be there in a moment. All in favor of the motion of the Senator from Nebraska will say "aye." [A pause.] Contrary minded, "no." [A pause.] The "ayes" have it, and the Senate will proceed to the consideration of executive business. The Sergeant at Arms will clear the galleries and close the doors.

The Senate thereupon proceeded to deliberate with closed doors.

While the doors were closed,

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I ask that all amendments which have been offered to the joint resolution on which a roll call was ordered and taken be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SWANSON in the chair). Without objection, the request of the Senator from Connecticut will be complied with.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to amend the joint resolution by striking out, on page 3, at the beginning of line 3, the words "hereinafter authorized," and to strike out all of section 3, all of section 4, and all of section 5 of the joint resolution as reported from the committee.

Mr. STONE. I ask for a division on the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment suggested by the Senator from Georgia, namely, to strike out the words "hereinafter authorized" at the beginning of line 3, on page 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the second amendment suggested by the Senator from Georgia, to strike out all of section 3, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out section 3, in the following words:

SEC. 3. That any person or corporation may institute a suit against the United States of America in the Court of Claims thereof for the recovery of the damages which he may sustain through the exercise of the power herein conferred upon the President. Such damages shall be limited to just compensation for the interest or right of which claimant is deprived by reason of such taking. In ascertaining such compensation there shall be excluded any value added to the vessel by reason of work done or improvements placed thereon by the United States. In order to recover a judgment the claimant must prove that he was the owner at the time of taking of the interest or right for whose taking he seeks compensation; and that no nation with which the United States may be at war at the time of such taking, or at the time of rendition of judgment, nor any corporation, subject, or citizen of such nation, has any interest, direct or indirect, in such claim, or in the judgment which may be rendered thereon; and that claimant acquired in good faith and for substantial consideration the right or interest, for whose taking he seeks compensation, prior to the commencement of war with the nation whose citizen or subject owned, in whole or in part, the vessel taken, or under the register or flag of which such vessel was at the time of entry into the jurisdiction of the United States; if claimant be a corporation it must also prove that the majority of its stock is not owned by subjects or citizens of a nation with which the United States may be at war, and was not so owned at the beginning of such war. If the required facts be established, the court shall have power to render judgment for the amount due claimant subject to the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States; but if such facts be not established the court shall render no judgment and shall make a report to Congress stating its findings of fact

Mr. CULBERSON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

SEC. 5. All claims upon which suit may not be instituted prior to the expiration of one year from the date of exchange of ratifications of a treaty of peace with the Imperial German Government shall be forever barred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. I offer the following amendment to come in as a new section to be known as section 3.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add as a new section the following:

SEC. 3. That any vessel so seized shall be condemned in any district court of the United States for the district in which the same may be or in any court created by or under the authority of the United States having admiralty jurisdiction over the place at which such vessel may be seized, or into which it may be taken, pending which proceedings for condemnation it may be requisitioned by the United States under order of the court for such use or disposition as is provided for in section 1 of this act.

No bounty, prize money, bonus, or other gratuity or reward shall be due or be paid to any person on account of the taking or seizure of any of the ships mentioned in section 1 of this act.

Mr. WATSON with Mr. WOLCOTT.

Mr. VARDAMAN with Mr. GALLINGER.

So Mr. WALSH's amendment was rejected.

Mr. KNOX. I move as a substitute to insert the following:

The Secretary read as follows:

Whereas the activities of the Imperial German Government, in its efforts to destroy the commercial vessels of the United States, its allies, and the vessels of neutral powers, creates an immediate emergency and an extreme necessity to at once replenish in a practical way the loss of ships thus sustained: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to at once requisition all vessels of alien enemies of the United States in the ports and waters of the United States, or elsewhere found, and to use the same in the prosecution of the war against the Imperial German Government in such trade or manner as will, in his judgment, best subserve the interests of the United States and its allies.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and having been taken, resulted—yeas 28, nays 43, as follows:

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution authorizing the President to take over for the United States the possession and title of any vessel within its jurisdiction which at the time of coming therein was owned in whole or in part by any corporation, citizen, or subject of any nation with which the United States may be at war, or was under register of any such nation, and for other purposes."

After five hours spent in legislative business and executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

PROMOTION IN THE ARMY.

PORTO RICO REGIMENT OF INFANTRY.

First Lieut. Leopoldo Mercader, Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry, to be captain from January 17, 1917, vice Capt. William H. Armstrong, dismissed January 16, 1917.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 30, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, with great reluctance we have been forced into the great war, not only in defense of our cherished rights, but in defense of the rights of humanity. Grant that we may be firmly united as a people. Give us the courage of our convictions, the wisdom to guide them, the strength to uphold them, and the fortitude to meet every sacrifice with heroism and patriotic zeal; that out of the great struggle may come a victory which shall make the world a saner, purer, better place to live in; that the terrible scourge of war may pass from human existence; that right may be supreme, and love have its sway in every heart, and Thy will be done. In Thy Holy Name, amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter from the farmers' national committee on war finance.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENTS TO FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. 3673) making amendments to the Federal reserve act, with the understanding that if it is not finished today at 2.30 o'clock the committee will rise.

Mr. MANN. What is the request?

The SPEAKER. To take up the bill making amendments to the Federal reserve act, with the understanding that if not finished the committee will rise at half past 2. Is there anything in it that makes it necessary to consider it in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; it is on the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. 3673) making amendments to the Federal reserve act, with the understanding that if it is not finished at half past 2 the committee will rise and the bill be withdrawn temporarily. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I take it that the purpose of the request is to permit consideration of this bill, with the intention that after 2.30 the House will proceed with the call of committees, with the expectation of taking up the so-called espionage bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. That is the intention.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Texas, Mr. GARNER, will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. GARNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3673) to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, as amended by the acts of August 4, 1914, August 15, 1914, March 3, 1915, and September 7, 1916.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Chairman, this bill was reported from the Banking and Currency Committee of the House in the last Congress with only one dissenting vote, and it is now unanimously reported from the same committee of the Sixty-fifth Congress. It embraces several amendments to the Federal reserve act, some of minor importance, while two of them are of very great importance. The bill is of such importance that the Treasury Department has formally notified the committee that these amendments are essential as emergency measures to better solidify the banking community of the country and to facilitate rediscounts. I shall endeavor briefly to give you a clear explanation of the provisions of the bill.

The most important amendment relates to the reserve section of the existing act. Under existing law the Congress provided that the reserves of the member banks of the Federal Reserve System should be shifted in three years. The date appointed will expire on the 17th of next November. Until that time member banks of the system are permitted to count as reserve their balances with correspondent banks of reserve and central reserve cities. It is thought by the Federal Reserve Board and by the advisory council of bankers and by most of the expert bankers who were called into consultation that this requirement could more satisfactorily be effected at once rather than in November; that the banks are in better condition now, with a greater plethora of funds than they ever have had, to make the shift and comply with this provision of the law.

So that in this amendment we provide that the requirement indicated shall become immediately effective. The amendment further changes the reserve requirements. Under existing law country banks are required to carry a reserve of 12 per cent—5 per cent with the Federal reserve bank of their respective districts, 4 per cent in their own vaults, and 3 per cent optional, either in their own vaults or with Federal reserve banks. We provide that the fixed reserve of country banks shall be 7 per cent rather than 12 per cent, all to be carried with the Federal reserve banks.

That makes a reduction in the reserve requirements of the country banks which is very much more apparent than real, because the bank is compelled to carry what is called "till money," which varies in different localities and in different banks. Therefore, we leave it entirely to the discretion of the various member banks to carry such "till money" as their own experience and the requirements of their peculiar locality would seem to suggest. We make a slight alteration in the reserve requirements in the central reserve cities, which we reduced from 18 to 15 per cent, leaving to the discretion of these banks also the amount of their "till money" to meet their current daily business needs.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. If it is not inconvenient for the gentleman at this time, I wish he would explain the effect of the change in the reserve requirements; what advantages are to be gained by the change.

Mr. GLASS. The real purpose of that alteration in the reserves is to bring into Federal reserve banks an additional amount of gold, first estimated at about $350,000,000. I think, upon the basis of reserve balances at this time, the proposed change would give the Federal reserve banks an additional gold supply of about $400,000,000, without appreciably disturbing the reserve requirements of the member banks. In brief, that would mean that the Federal reserve banking system would be enabled to rediscount about $1,000,000,000 more of commercial paper than they could rediscount under the law as it exists to-day.

Mr. MADDEN. That would come about by compelling the country banks to carry all of their reserves with the Federal reserve banks.

Mr. GLASS. Yes; rather than a part of it in their own vaults and part of it optional, either in their own vaults or with the Federal reserve banks; but the real purpose is to give this additional loaning power to the Federal reserve banks, the assumption being that with the flotation of this enormous bond issue for war purposes the funds of the member banks—and, for that matter, of nonmember banks—may be severely drawn on and that necessarily there will be a vast deal more of rediscounting than has prevailed since the Federal reserve system first went into effect.

Mr. MADDEN. If the Federal reserve banks have $400,000,000 additional gold on account of this change in the reserve requirements, how much additional rediscounting power would that give to the Federal reserve banks?

Mr. GLASS. About $1,000,000,000—2½ to 1.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. That is in addition to what they have now?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Which is approximately how much?

Mr. GLASS. Which is approximately a billion and a half.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. That would make a total of about $3,000,000,000?

Mr. GLASS. Approximately, but not quite that much.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. FESS. What effect, if any, would it have upon the member banks to hold their reserves in the Federal reserve banks rather than in their own vaults?

Mr. GLASS. It does not affect the member banks in any degree whatsoever, in a broad general sense. Of course it may affect one bank in a rather different way than another bank. A bank, for example, in an active industrial community, which needs funds for pay rolls, may find it necessary to carry a little larger amount of "till money" than a bank in a community not so active industrially and which has not such great pay rolls to meet. But there is no difference in the world, so far as actual reserve is concerned, between carrying it in the Federal reserve bank and keeping it in the local banks.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. I think the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEPHENS] asked the same question, but I did not understand it. I understand the gentleman to say that this change will give a billion dollars of discounting capacity in addition to the present?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. What I want to know is what is the present discount capacity of the Federal reserve banks?

Mr. GLASS. When I last sought information upon that matter I was told that the present rediscounting capabilities of the Federal Reserve System amounted to a little less than a billion and a half dollars.

Mr. HARDY. So that the total will be, under this amendment, two and a half billion dollars?

Mr. GLASS. Practically that.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. HILL. How does this increase the discounting privilege of all the banks? Is it not simply a transfer of discounting privilege from local banks to Federal reserve banks, taking it away from the local institutions and centering it in the Federal reserve banks?

Mr. GLASS. I do not think it is taking it away from the local institutions.

Mr. HILL. It takes away 2 per cent of their reserves.

Mr. GLASS. Under existing law the local institutions may keep 8 per cent with the Federal reserve banks.

Mr. HILL. I understand that; but let me ask the gentleman this question: As a matter of fact, they are required now under the law to keep 5 per cent?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. HILL. Or will be next November?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. HILL. And this requires them to keep 7?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. HILL. Does not this proposition take from the local institutions 2 per cent of their reserves and compel them to put that in the hands of the Federal reserve banks for them to use?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. HILL. Then they lose just so much money, do they not? They have not increased the discounting privilege one penny. They have simply transferred it from the local banks to the Federal reserve banks.

Mr. GLASS. It is very desirable that that shall be done.

Mr. HILL. Very desirable for the Federal reserve banks, but very unfortunate for the banks throughout the country.

Mr. GLASS. Do not the banks throughout the country own the Federal reserve banks?

Mr. HILL. I admit that; but it adds an entirely unnecessary expense.

Mr. MADDEN. The advantage to be gained by the transfer of the reserves to the Federal reserve banks instead of carrying them in the member banks is that it mobilizes——

Mr. GLASS. Mobilizes the gold of the country.

Mr. MADDEN (continuing). Mobilizes it so as to enable it to be loaned in large quantities instead of being divided up into small items if left to the other banks.

Mr. GLASS. That is true.

Mr. HILL. How does it mobilize the gold of the country? The local banks must keep just as much money as they kept before.

Mr. GLASS. Not necessarily.

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. GLASS. It depends entirely upon how much "free money" the local bank requires for its current uses.

Mr. HILL. I do not know anything about the requirements in Texas or the West, but I know through the Atlantic States and manufacturing States the banks have got to keep just as much money in their vaults as they kept before the Federal Reserve System was enacted.

Mr. GLASS. The gentleman knows very well, because he is thoroughly familiar with this subject, that it is very desirable in this emergency to have as large an amount of the gold in this country controlled by the Federal reserve banks as it is possible to get.

Mr. HILL. I would like to ask the gentleman this: Does the gentleman assume for a moment that it is not necessary that the bank should keep legal tender in its vaults?

Mr. GLASS. No; I do not think so.

Mr. HILL. Where is it going to get it if it transfers it all to the Federal Reserve System?

Mr. GLASS. Not all, by any manner of means.

Mr. HILL. I understand the entire reserves of these banks are to be transferred to the Federal reserve banks.

Mr. GLASS. The gentleman does not observe that the reserves have been materially reduced to meet that very alteration.

Mr. HILL. I understand the entire amount that is left is transferred to the Federal Reserve System compulsorily.

Mr. GLASS. That is true.

Mr. HILL. So if this bill is carried out and a man complied strictly with the law he would not have a dollar in his vaults.

Mr. GLASS. Yes; he will.

Mr. HILL. Not if he complies strictly with the law. It is business sense and tact that compels him to keep money in his vaults under the terms of this law.

Mr. GLASS. Precisely.

Mr. HILL. The law requires every bank reserve to be hereafter deposited in the Federal reserve banks, every cent of it.

Mr. PLATT. It requires that legal reserves shall be kept in the Federal reserve banks only. That does not mean all the reserve money.

Mr. HILL. It says the reserves shall be kept——

Mr. PLATT. That does not mean all reserve money in circulation.

Mr. HILL. Of course not; I am no fool.

Mr. GLASS. It leaves to the discretion of the member banks what is absolutely and entirely left to the discretion of individual banks in European countries.

Mr. PLATT. Is it not a fact that the banks are not opposing this provision?

Mr. GLASS. Why, they are advocating it.

Mr. PLATT. As a rule?

Mr. GLASS. The bankers of Connecticut are advocating it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Is it not to the advantage of the rural banks, of which the gentleman from Connecticut speaks, to have this 5 per cent reduction in their reserves that now they are legally compelled to keep——

Mr. GLASS. It is not in reality a 5 per cent reduction, when they are obliged in their discretion to keep a certain amount of till money to meet temporary exigencies, but it is a material reduction.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. And will they not get increased loans as a result of it?

Mr. GLASS. Gentlemen, I would like to proceed with a general explanation of the bill and answer questions when I shall have concluded.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman answer one question for information? Will not this cripple the operations of the local banks, and if not, why not?

Mr. GLASS. I did not catch the gentleman's question.

Mr. LITTLE. Will not this cripple the operations of the local banks, and if not, why not?

Mr. GLASS. No; it will not.

Mr. LITTLE. That is no answer; why will it not do so?

Mr. GLASS. It will not simply because we leave to the discretion of the local banks to keep on hand just as much "till money" as their current business daily requires.

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman means——

Mr. GLASS. It will not cripple the operations of the member banks, but it affords to the Federal reserve banks a larger rediscount facility, and the larger the rediscount facilities of the Federal banks the better the member banks may be served.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. GLASS. I will, but I would like to make a statement of some continuity.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The gentleman stated it was favored by the local banks member banks. Can the gentleman very briefly state how it will benefit the member banks or the local banks to send part of their money, upon which they do not get interest or of which they do not have the till uses, as the gentleman suggests?

Mr. GLASS. As a matter of fact, on the 17th of November of this year they will not get any interest on any reserve. Should they continue to keep it in their own vaults they will not get any interest on it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is it not largely the complaint of the member banks that they are required by law, if they are members, to send a part of their reserve to the regional bank, on which they get no interest?

Mr. GLASS. There has been some very slight complaint from certain quarters, but the banks that make that complaint have a very narrow vision. They lose sight entirely of the tremendous advantage they derive from being able, by right and not by preference, and unhampered by prejudice, to resort to this Federal reserve banking system as a great reservoir for rediscount in time of distress.

Mr. ROSE. Will the gentleman yield for just one question?

Mr. GLASS. I will.

Mr. ROSE. I would like to know whether this proposition has the approval of national banks located in manufacturing communities. For instance, in the nineteenth district of Pennsylvania the cities of Johnstown and Altoona are manufacturing cities, and the national banks there are used for the purpose of furnishing the pay roll every day and throughout the month, and I would like to know whether it has the approval of banks of that description. And have they been consulted by any member of this committee?

Mr. GLASS. I can only answer the gentleman by saying that the Federal Reserve Board made diligent inquiry before drafting this amendment to the act and brought into consultation the advisory council of the Federal Reserve Board, which, as the gentleman must know, is composed entirely of the selected representatives of the national banks of the United States. This advisory council agreed, after investigation and consultation with the banks, that this was a proper and desirable thing to do. I will state further to the gentleman who makes the inquiry that this amendment was available to all of the member banks of the country; that it was before the Banking and Currency Committees of both Houses of Congress for, I would say, six weeks; and that I have had not a single protest against it, as I recall, from any bank.

Mr. ROSE. The gentleman will recall that at the time of the passage of this act the bankers of the country were permitted to appear before the committees of the Senate and the House, and that they were made familiar with the terms of the bill. Now, has anything of that nature been done with reference to the amendment of the law as it now exists? Have the bankers had the opportunity to appear before this committee at any time in relation to the amendments that are now offered? I want to say this is the first opportunity I have had to examine any provision of this bill, and it comes to us at this time without giving us an opportunity to consult at all with the people who are vitally interested throughout the various districts of the country.

Mr. GLASS. I have just said to the gentleman that the provisions of this bill were available to all the banks in the Federal Reserve System. They have been published in every financial journal of repute in the United States, have been discussed before the committees of Congress for at least six weeks, were thoroughly debated in the committee, and my experience as chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives for nearly six years enables me to say that there has never been an occasion in which any measure has been before that committee in which the bankers were vitally or even incidentally interested or affected that, if they wanted a hearing, they did not very promptly and very emphatically request one. In this case they did not request any hearing; hence there were no hearings upon the bill.

Mr. ROSE. Am I to understand, then, that the banks throughout the United States will be required now to deposit more funds in the Federal Reserve?

Mr. GLASS. Somewhat more.

Mr. ROSE. I would like to say this, that, take for example, the First National Bank of Johnstown, where the Midvale Steel Co. employs about 20,000 men. That bank furnishes money for the pay roll throughout the month, and is required to keep in its vaults now almost half a million dollars all the time, in order to meet enormous pay rolls.

Mr. GLASS. Does not the gentleman know that it has to hold its reserve? It can not be paid out except under penalty.

Mr. ROSE. Undoubtedly, like every other bank.

Mr. GLASS. We transform that reserve—the funds now required to be kept as reserve—into "till money"——

Mr. ROSE. It is there, when an emergency arises, to be paid out. I would like to know whether the proposition now submitted by the committee will have the effect of requiring that bank to lose the use of more of its money than it has under its control at the present time.

Mr. GLASS. I think it would take an inappreciable amount away.

Mr. SLOAN. Is not one of the purposes to encourage State banks to become member banks?

Mr. GLASS. If the gentleman will pardon me, I will get to that provision of the bill in a little while if I may proceed with any degree of continuity.

Mr. SLOAN. The gentleman need not argue it with me.

Mr. GLASS. I did not think I was arguing it. If an inquiry is applicable to the provision I am explaining, I shall be glad to be interrupted with a pertinent question and do the best I can to answer it. I may say in extenuation of any failure to answer fully all questions, that what I do not know about the banking business would make a larger volume than what I do know about it. If there are no other questions in regard to the reserve section of the bill——

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. The question may have been put and answered; but if so, I was not in the House. Why is that difference between paragraph (a) and paragraph (c) as to reserves? Why is only 7 per cent of reserve required in certain places and 13 per cent in the central reserve cities?

Mr. GLASS. Well, the gentleman must know that under existing law, and under the national-bank act for 50 years, the reserves of the country banks have been very much less than the reserves of the banks in the reserve and central reserve cities. We have just followed that average because the banks in the reserve cities and the central reserve cities have been holding the reserve funds and credits of the country banks. That is not a discrimination peculiar to this bill.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not it is the idea that the removal of the legal requirements in this act is done for the purpose of getting into the 12 Federal reserve banks the large amount of gold that is in the country? Is that the primary purpose?

Mr. GLASS. That is the primary purpose.

Mr. McFADDEN. And this gold would be replaced by circulating notes?

Mr. GLASS. Yes. The vault cash will not be required to be reserve money.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The vault cash will not be reduced?

Mr. GLASS. In some cases it will be reduced, and in other cases not.

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. EAGLE. Is not this true, that under the Federal reserve act as it was a law on December 1, 1913, and which therefore is at this hour the law, these very reserves that we are talking about must be mobilized in the 12 Federal reserve banks, and that the object of the specific provision which the gentleman is now discussing and concerning which my friend from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] and others have asked him questions—the object of the amendment now under discussion is to mobilize those same reserves immediately, in order to increase the rediscount opportunities and privileges of the 12 Federal reserve banks, instead of waiting for a period of another 18 months?

Mr. GLASS. That is one object.

Mr. HILL. If the same money was required to be transferred that is now required by law, of course it would make no change in the condition that would exist next November. But this increases the amount that will be taken away from the banks, and it is utter foolishness to talk about taking away the rediscount privileges, because they have never been exercised to the extent of more than $30,000,000, when the amount might have been a billion.

Mr. GLASS. The gentleman on that point knows why it has not been exercised and he knows why it should not have been exercised under prevailing conditions.

Mr. HILL. It never has been exercised.

Mr. GLASS. It was not exercised because the act itself released an enormous amount of reserves, and the banks since the passage of this law have had more money to loan than they could loan.

Mr. HILL. It was an arbitrary restriction on the character of the paper.

Mr. GLASS. It was not an arbitrary restriction on the character of the paper. It was because the member banks had more money than they knew what to do with, and had no need to ask for rediscounts.

Mr. HILL. Then why increase the privilege?

Mr. GLASS. Because hereafter they will have need to rediscount. If the gentleman had done me the compliment to listen to my opening statement he would not need to ask me that question.

Mr. SLAYDEN. May I ask the gentleman a question in that connection?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I have heard all of his statement, but I have failed to comprehend all of it.

Mr. GLASS. That may have been my fault.

Mr. SLAYDEN. No. What I know about banking is a good deal less than what the gentleman knows. Is it the gentleman's idea that the country banks scattered throughout the country not only will not be hurt by the operation of this provision, this amendment to the law, but that there will actually be offered to them an opportunity to increase their business and be benefited by it? Is that the idea?

Mr. GLASS. That is the idea of the committee and the idea of the Federal board and the Federal reserve council, else we would not have presented the bill here. We are trying to strengthen the banking system of the country for any emergency.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman knows there has been some complaint by the country banks about some of the acts of the Reserve Board. I have received complaints from banks in my district complaining about the necessity of paying checks at par. Have the banks protested that their profits have been reduced?

Mr. GLASS. There have been no protests, and banks usually do protest when their rights, either imaginary or real, are encroached upon.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am frank to say that I have heard nothing from the banks in my district in protest against this amendment, but I have heard some from them in regard to the payment of checks at par.

Mr. GLASS. We did not touch that problem.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. There is nothing in this bill that changes any of the fundamental features, either of principle or of administration, of the Federal reserve act?

Mr. GLASS. Not a thing.

Mr. WINGO. It does not touch on the fundamentals of that act?

Mr. GLASS. No.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. Is there anything in this bill to prevent a country bank from making a reasonable charge on a collection?

Mr. GLASS. This bill does not touch that.

Mr. ANTHONY. How is that controlled—by regulation of some kind?

Mr. GLASS. Partially by regulation and partially by law.

The next important section of the bill is section 9, with reference to the admission of State banks to the Federal Reserve System. There has been among State banks and trust companies a great deal of objection to going into the system because, among other things, they feared duplication of examinations and reports. Most of the State banks of the country are subjected to examination by State banking systems, and they object to the duplication of these examinations by the office of the Comptroller of the Currency. They also object to coming into the system because of the limitations of the Federal reserve act with respect to making loans and with respect to the nature of some loans.

The national-bank act, as the committee knows, prohibits a national bank from loaning more than 10 per cent of its capital and surplus to any one individual, firm, or corporation. The State bank laws, with rare exceptions, do not impose that restriction; and the State banks and the trust companies, not restricted or limited in that respect by State laws, object to the restriction of the national-bank act. This amendment to section 9 of the Federal reserve act is intended to liberalize the terms on which State banks and trust companies may enter the Federal Reserve System. In this connection I may state, for the information of the committee, that recently quite a number of the largest trust companies and State banks in the United States have joined the Federal Reserve System, and there are now pending quite a number of applications from large trust companies and State banks to become members of the system, and the committee has available information from many hundreds of State banks, both large and small, attesting their willingness to come into the system if these provisions for liberalizing the terms upon which they may enter are ingrafted on the statute.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. I do.

Mr. FESS. Has the chairman any hope that all the State banks and trust companies will ultimately come under this system, so that it will be entirely unified?

Mr. GLASS. The chairman entertains that hope, but he has not the expectation that they will immediately. Very many of them can not, under the terms of the law, come in, owing to their small capitalization.

Mr. FESS. About what is the proportion of the State banks and trust companies that will?

Mr. GLASS. It is the opinion of the Federal Reserve Board, which has been industriously endeavoring to cultivate the favor of the State banks and trust companies, that with this liberalization of the terms upon which they may enter a great majority of them will enter. In fact, only a few days ago the governor of the board showed me a communication from the president of the State Bankers' Association of one of the largest States in the Union—the State having, I think, the second largest number of State banks and trust companies—in which he expressed the very confident belief that the enactment of this amendment would result in bringing two-thirds of the State banks and trust companies of his State into the Federal Reserve System. I think these State banks and trust companies, particularly at this emergent moment, are thoroughly impressed with the importance of further augmenting the power and facilities of the Federal Reserve System in order that our banking system may be able to withstand any shock which it may encounter.

Mr. FESS. I wondered whether there was any territorial element in the popularity of the Federal Reserve System? Is it favored in some sections of the country more than it is in other sections?

Mr. GLASS. I can not say that it is. It has been availed of in some sections of the country with greater facility and in larger volume than in some other sections. That arises from the fact that there is more wealth in some sections of the country than in others and less occasion for rediscounting.

Mr. FESS. Where the wealth is dominant is the Federal Reserve System as popular as in other places?

Mr. GLASS. I might cite to the gentleman the fact that in New England the Boston regional reserve bank is regarded with the greatest favor, and, without wanting to be invidious, I may say it is regarded by the Federal Reserve Board as among the best managed, if not the best managed, of the Federal reserve banks in the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Can the gentleman tell us how many member banks have surrendered their charters because of the requirement that they must come under this legal-reserve act?

Mr. GLASS. Banks in surrendering their charters do not always indicate the reason for their action. My own belief is that very few of them have done that, and my information is that very many more have been organized and have come into the system than have gone out for all reasons.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Chairman explains that it was the object to liberalize the conditions under which the State banks and trust companies may join this system?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is it the intent and purpose of this amendment to the law to permit a State bank that becomes a member bank, having the same capital as a national or member bank, to make a larger loan to a single individul than the national member bank could make?

Mr. GLASS. This provision does not undertake to regulate that particular transaction further than this, that the Federal reserve bank will not rediscount a loan made by a State bank that exceeds the 10 per cent limit; but it does not undertake to say to the State bank that it shall not make a loan contrary to that provision of the national-bank act.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. In some cases the State banks or savings banks, by vote of their board, can make a loan up to 20 per cent of the capital stock.

Mr. GLASS. I understand that. That sort of paper will not be rediscounted under this provision of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But it will be an advantage to be a State bank if the bank thinks it is good policy to make larger loans to a single individual?

Mr. GLASS. If the bank so regards it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not think it is a good policy or good banking to make excessive loans to anyone.

Mr. GLASS. No, I do not either, but some banks do think so.

Mr. ROSE. I have noticed that the gentleman spoke of the Federal reserve bank in New England being considered as one of the best, if not the best, managed bank in the country to-day. Can the gentleman state to the committee how many of these banks now in existence are self-sustaining up to this time?

Mr. GLASS. All of them are.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. All of them now are?

Mr. GLASS. Yes; all of them are.

Mr. ROSE. Was that true about a year ago?

Mr. GLASS. No; it was not true, and it would have been rather wonderful had it been true. In fact, it would have been so wonderful that one of the ablest members of the Federal Reserve Board—regarded by many as the ablest international banker in the country—publicly stated in an address to a bankers' association that had all been self-sustaining up to that time he would have been ashamed of them.

Mr. SNOOK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. Certainly.

Mr. SNOOK. How do you propose to obviate the duplication of examinations?

Mr. GLASS. By authorizing the Federal Reserve Board, in its discretion, to accept the examination of the State bank examiners in lieu of the examinations by the Comptroller of the Currency.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. The fact is that there are a great many State banks and trust companies that show no desire to enter into the Federal system, and an effort has been made by the Federal Reserve Board to have more enter, is it not?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. Is it not a fact that that is due to a duplication of reports required by the Federal Reserve Board and the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency?

Mr. GLASS. Yes. That is what we are trying to cure.

Mr. NORTON. Is there anything in the bill that provides for the elimination of the comptroller's office?

Mr. GLASS. Oh, no.

Mr. NORTON. Does not the gentleman think that, as far as the comptroller's office has to do with national banks, that it might be done away with?

Mr. GLASS. An opinion on that by me would not affect any provision of the bill. It would be simply my individual opinion.

Mr. NORTON. Has your committee had that under consideration?

Mr. GLASS. No; we have not. There has been no proposition before our committee to eliminate the office of the Comptroller of the Currency. Some people, for reasons of their own, would like to eliminate the comptroller himself, but I do not know of anybody who soberly wants to eliminate the office of the Comptroller of the Currency.

Mr. NORTON. Is it not a fact that there are a great many who do think that it should be eliminated as far as examinations of national banks are now concerned?

Mr. GLASS. Perhaps some of the banks examined would like that to occur.

Mr. NORTON. What is there in the bill that tends to do away with the duplications?

Mr. GLASS. The amendment of the Federal reserve act providing that the Federal Reserve Board, in its discretion, may accept the examination of the State bank examiners.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. I will.

Mr. WINGO. Under the agreement we can not consider this bill after half past 2. Let me suggest that gentlemen wait until we get under the five-minute rule to ask their questions, so that we can consider and get through with the bill at 2.30, because, under the unanimous-consent agreement, we will have to withdraw the bill at that time.

Mr. GLASS. I am obliged to my colleague, and I would like to proceed as rapidly as possible. I will be through in a few minutes with the general explanation of the bill. And I hope, not only on account of the importance of the matter but for my own personal convenience, that we can finish the consideration of it within the prescribed time.

The Federal reserve act when passed contained a provision repealing the requirement of the national-bank act that all of the national banks upon organization should purchase a given amount of United States bonds as a basis of organization. That provision of the Federal reserve act was, of course, intended to, and I think it does, relieve the bonds held by banks organized before the passage of the Federal reserve act. But there has been some confusion of opinion as to that, and, therefore, this bill contains a section which makes it perfectly clear, as it is perfectly just, that the national banks organized before the passage of the Federal reserve act shall not be required to retain a minimum amount of United States bonds. National banks now organized are not required to purchase United States bonds, and banks organized prior to that time ought to be relieved.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If it releases the bonds, they will have to take up the circulation.

Mr. GLASS. No; a national bank, regardless of whether it took out any circulation under the old law, had to purchase a certain amount of bonds as a basis of organization. It was a bond-selling rather than a banking scheme.

Under existing law one of the directors of class C is authorized to perform the functions of the Federal reserve agent during the inability or absence of that agent. He is not required to give any bond. We propose to alter that requirement and authorize the Federal reserve agent to employ his own assistants and to exact the bond from them. So that when they act in his absence they may be duly bonded for the official performance of the duties of the office.

I think I have, in rather a desultory manner, explained in general the provisions of the bill and the scope of the amendments.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman recapitulate briefly, so that we can get it all together?

Mr. GLASS. I will. The main purpose of the bill in the alterations in the reserve section is to mobilize a larger amount of gold with the Federal reserve banks, thereby increasing their facilities for the accommodation of the banking community of the United States. I have indicated what those alterations were. The next most important provision of the bill relates to the entrance of State banks. It modifies the severity of the terms prescribed by the Federal reserve act for the admission of State banks and trust companies, chiefly in the elimination of the duplication of examinations by the comptroller's office and in those provisions relating to the character and volume of loans that may be made to any one person, firm, or corporation.

And the provision that I have last indicated relates to bonds held by national banks as a basis for organization. Then, the provision authorizing the Federal reserve agent to employ his own deputies and to exact bonds of them.

Then, there is a provision, which I omitted to refer to, with respect to acceptances on exportation and importation of goods. By an inadvertence, when the last amendment to the Federal reserve act was passed, I marked out of the printed conference report a provision of that act that should not have been stricken out relating to the permissible volume of these acceptances, and I have simply reinserted those lines in this bill, making no alteration of the intent of the original law.

Mr. SCOTT of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. SCOTT of Iowa. Some time ago, in answer to a question, I believe, the gentleman said that the present capacity in rediscount of the Federal Reserve System was about a billion and a half dollars?

Mr. GLASS. Perhaps slightly less than a billion and a half dollars.

Mr. SCOTT of Iowa. Is the gentleman prepared to say what is the aggregate of rediscounts of the system now?

Mr. GLASS. I do not recall; but nothing like the permissible amount; and I have undertaken to explain, in my judgment, the reason for that. The Federal reserve act itself released a vast amount of bank funds by reduction of reserve requirements. Owing to that fact, and owing to the abnormal balance of trade and the sale of goods abroad, the banks of the United States have had more money than they have known what to do with, and have had to do very little rediscounting at all.

Mr. SCOTT of Iowa. That is a past condition; but the point I am leading up to is this: What does the Government anticipate at this time that would require an expansion of rediscounting facilities, in view of the fact that in the past we have been called upon to draw upon it but very slightly?

Mr. GLASS. The Government anticipates that there will be more or less a depletion of the funds of the banks by this enormous bond issue and other business activities, and that therefore there will be a greater requirement for rediscounts in commercial transactions.

Mr. SCOTT of Iowa. In other words, the mobilization of the gold as distinct from the mobilization of the reserves at this time is to enable the Government to take care of the bond issue? Is not that the long and the short of the whole thing?

Mr. GLASS. Partially that.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman starts to explain those, for information I would like him to explain a little matter that I have in my mind. Are not the member banks by the provisions of this amendment and especially the one that requires them to pay the extra 2 per cent of their reserves to the regional bank, put at a disadvantage in comparison with local or State institutions, because a State institution does not carry any more reserve than the member bank is required to carry, and the State institution can send its reserves to its reserve agents and get interest upon it, whereas the member bank must, under the law, send its reserves to the regional bank and get no interest upon it?

Mr. GLASS. As a matter of fact, under existing law they can get no interest on their reserves anyway after the 17th of next November.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is true, but is not the member bank put at a disadvantage? Is not this an advantage that the State institution will have, for it can get interest upon its reserves while the National member bank gets no interest at all from the regional bank on its reserve?

Mr. GLASS. As a matter of fact, many States do not require any reserve at all. Would the gentleman have us enact a law in order to permit National banks to compete with State banks, abolishing all reserves?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am in favor of a good and sufficient reserve, but I would like you to explain this statement——

Mr. GLASS. I hope the gentleman will make it quickly, because time is passing.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I would like the gentleman to explain why the member bank is not at a disadvantage with the State bank. Both of them are required to keep reserves, and the State bank can send its reserves to its reserve agent and receive 2 per cent interest upon it, while a member bank under the law is compelled to send its reserve to one of the regional banks, and will get no interest.

Mr. GLASS. We think there is no net increase in the reserve that the national bank is required to carry.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But before this the national bank could send its money to an authorized reserve agent and get interest upon it.

Mr. GLASS. On the other hand, the gentleman loses sight of the fact, as do most bankers who complain about the Federal Reserve System, that the nonmember State bank, should it get into trouble, has no reservoir of supply to which it may readily resort in order to cure its difficulties, whereas the member bank has. There are, of course, some little inconveniences.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I would state to the gentleman that during one of our last panics a person could put mortgages, State and municipal bond securities into his grip and go to the money centers and bring money back when he could not even get money that was his own on deposit in some of the banks in the large cities and money centers.

Mr. GLASS. But we did not have the reserve system during the last panic.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman desire to proceed further at this time?

Mr. GLASS. In order to explain one or two other matters.

Mr. WINGO. I would suggest to the gentleman that we get a unanimous-consent agreement by which that can be done under the five-minute rule.

Mr. GLASS. Very well.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that general debate close on the bill at the present time, and then these questions can be asked and discussions had under the five-minute rule as we come to the different paragraphs.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have a few minutes, something more than five minutes.

Mr. WINGO. I think there would be no objection to that; but the gentleman understands that we have only an hour and a quarter left in which to consider and ultimately get the bill passed.

Mr. HILL. But the gentleman does not expect to pass the bill before 2.30 o'clock, does he?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. HILL. I do not think the gentleman will.

Mr. WINGO. It is a unanimous report from the committee. No one objects to it. It is a good measure in time of peace, and certainly very necessary in time of war.

Mr. HILL. I am very tired, Mr. Chairman, of having every measure coming in here put forward as a war measure.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman will pardon me, I did not say it was a war measure.

Mr. HILL. I want to explain my reason for the objection I have. I have no objection to the bill as a whole—I think it is a wise bill as a whole—but I think the reserve feature of it is a very serious mistake, for the purpose of aggrandizing and centralizing the control of the banking system in the Federal Reserve Board, and I think it is a serious mistake for the country banks of this country, and I would like to speak against that feature and in favor of the rest of the bill.

Mr. GLASS. I think I may say that nobody will object to the gentleman speaking against it.

Mr. HAYES. I think there will be no objection whatever.

Mr. WINGO. I will state that in the effort to get a unanimous-consent agreement, after consulting the gentleman from Illinois and the minority members of the committee, we all recognized that if there is any necessity for more general debate we would have to be liberal in the interpretation of the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that general debate shall be now closed.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I thought time was to be given to the gentleman from Virginia to explain two provisions which he overlooked.

Mr. GLASS. I can do that under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, it would be a miracle, in my opinion, to finish this bill by 2.30. I do not see any possibility of it. I have no objection to this request if the gentlemen will say that they will allow reasonable debate under the five-minute rule.

Mr. GLASS. I shall not object.

Mr. WINGO. There is no disposition on my part to object.

Mr. GLASS. I shall be very glad indeed to make the extension.

Mr. MANN. If the effort is made to try to finish the consideration of the bill by 2.30 in the committee, you could not have much debate at all.

Mr. WINGO. I understand. I think the gentleman from Connecticut intimated he wanted about 15 minutes.

Mr. HILL. Not more than that.

Mr. WINGO. I recognize we have to proceed practically by unanimous consent if we are to expedite the passage of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair's understanding was the gentleman from Arkansas asked unanimous consent that general debate be now closed. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk began the reading of the bill.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire how this is to be considered, whether by sections or paragraphs?

The CHAIRMAN. This kind of a bill, the Chair will state, is ordinarily considered by sections unless the committee decides to do otherwise.

Mr. McFADDEN. That is satisfactory.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 of the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, be amended in the paragraph relating to the appointment of class C directors and prescribing their duties so as to read as follows:

"Class C directors shall be appointed by the Federal Reserve Board. They shall have been for at least two years residents of the district for which they are appointed, one of whom shall be designated by said board as chairman of the board of directors of the Federal reserve bank and as 'Federal reserve agent.' He shall be a person of tested banking experience, and in addition to his duties as chairman of the board of directors of the Federal reserve bank he shall be required to maintain, under regulations to be established by the Federal Reserve Board, a local office of said board on the premises of the Federal reserve bank. He shall make regular reports to the Federal Reserve Board and shall act as its official representative for the performance of the functions conferred upon it by this act. He shall receive an annual compensation to be fixed by the Federal Reserve Board and paid monthly by the Federal reserve bank to which he is designated. One of the directors of class C, who shall be a person of tested banking experience, shall be appointed by the Federal Reserve Board as deputy chairman to exercise the powers of the chairman of the board when necessary.

"Subject to the approval of the Federal Reserve Board, the Federal reserve agent shall appoint one or more assistants. Such assistants, who shall be persons of tested banking experience, shall assist the Federal reserve agent in the performance of his duties and shall also have power to act in his name and stead during his absence or disability. The Federal reserve agent may require such bonds of his assistants as he may deem necessary for his own protection. Assistants to the Federal reserve agent shall receive an annual compensation, to be fixed and paid in the same manner as that of the Federal reserve agent."

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, strike out lines 1 and 2 and insert the following: "The Federal Reserve Board shall require such bonds of the assistant Federal reserve agents as they may deem necessary for their own protection."

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, in explaining the purpose of this amendment I desire to say that inasmuch as the portion of the bill just read provides for the abolishing of the office of deputy Federal reserve agent and provides that each of the 12 reserve agents shall appoint one or more assistants who are to be eligible to perform all his functions and duties, it is fair to assume that the office of deputy Federal reserve agent is to be an office in name only, and that his duties will be performed by these newly created assistants—one or more—as the Federal reserve agent may see fit, except he may be delegated to preside as chairman of board metings in the absence of the Federal reserve agent, who is also chairman of the board.

At the present time under existing law, a class C director is serving in this capacity; it is, however, shown that there is some difficulty in selecting class C directors as Federal reserve agents, owing to the fact that he must have had tested banking experience and that at the time of taking on his new duties or during a continuance of the same he must not be an officer, director or stockholder in any bank, and is only a salaried officer to the extent of receiving a director's fee while attending meetings of the board, but must hold himself in readiness to assume the duties of the Federal reserve agent and the responsibilities incident thereto, and it is not a satisfactory situation, and a position with these requirements it is hard to fill.

I am of the opinion that some change should be made. In some ways the Federal reserve agent is the most important officer of any one of these 12 banks. He is a trustee, and to delegate his responsibilities and duties to subordinate officers means the transferring to these subordinate officers or assistants vast responsibilities, in some instances amounting to the full charge and care of hundreds of millions of dollars in gold and other securities which are held in trust by the Federal reserve agent, being the security back of the Federal reserve notes issued by him.

I believe if this authority is to be changed and if the Federal reserve agent is to be given authority to choose one or more assistants, that the Federal Reserve Board should fix the amount of the bond required in each case. The bond should be issued to the Federal Reserve Board rather than to the Federal reserve agent. This involves the proper auditing of these trust funds, or at least should. Each time these responsibilities are changed to and from the Federal reserve agents, I think and thoroughly believe that if these assistants are to have those responsibilities—and which, in a sense, is making them all deputy Federal reserve agents—that they should be held responsible to the Federal Reserve Board or the United States and not to the Federal reserve agents. Employees of banks are not bonded to subordinate officers of the banks but to the banks themselves—the board of directors.

I believe that these assistants should properly be called deputy Federal reserve agents. That is what they really are, and I am yielding somewhat my own convictions on this subject because of the fact that Gov. Harding, when before our committee, in answer to my question in regard to these officers, said that it was the intention of the 12 banks in the filling of these positions that employees now being employed in each of the 12 banks with only a slight increase of pay be delegated to fill these positions as assistants to the Federal reserve agents, and this action would not entail any particular increase in operating expenses or the working forces, thus avoiding the creation of any new positions with big salaries attached. I hope my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. What bond does the Federal reserve agent give and to whom does it run?

Mr. McFADDEN. It runs to the Federal Reserve Board, and the amount is fixed at $100,000.

Mr. GLASS. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes; $250,000.

Mr. MANN. I may be mistaken, but my impression is now that where an employee of a postmaster gives a bond the bond runs to the Government of the United States and not to the postmaster. I think that formerly was the case. Somebody may know better than I do about it.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman does not contend that under the language of the bill these bonds will not be payable to the Federal reserve bank. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that under the language of the bill which the gentleman from Pennsylvania seeks to amend he does not contend there is any thing here that requires a bond to be taken in the name of the Federal reserve agent.

Mr. MANN. Certainly it does.

Mr. WINGO. I think not.

Mr. MANN. "Federal reserve agent may require such bonds"—he is not required to require at all—"such bonds of his assistants as he may deem necessary for his own protection."

Mr. WINGO. Certainly. It does not say bond to him personally.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, unless there is authority for it he could not give bond to anybody else. He could not give a bond to the Federal Reserve Board for his own protection. It should be for the protection not merely of the Federal reserve agent, but also the Federal Reserve Board.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WINGO. I ask that the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that the gentleman shall have five more minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman will permit me to say, I can understand how it can be contended that the present language of the bill would bear out the gentleman's interpretation; but, as I understand it, referring back to line 20, page 2, this act would be with the approval of the Federal Reserve Board.

Now, the Federal reserve agent has to give a bond of $250,000. This man is to be his assistant, that he has to appoint. This provision, which the gentleman seeks to amend, authorizes the Federal reserve agent to require his assistant to give a bond for the protection of that Federal reserve agent, because he is absolutely liable on his bond for the acts of his assistants.

Mr. McFADDEN. It says he may require a bond? If, in his judgment he sees fit to do so, it leaves it optional with him to say——

Mr. MANN. That is true. The postmaster is liable on his bond; but when the cashier of a post office gives a bond, as I understand, he does not give the bond to the postmaster but to the Government of the United States.

Mr. WINGO. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. And the same reason would require the bond here to be given to the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. WINGO. To the bank.

Mr. MANN. Whichever it is.

Mr. WINGO. I agree with the gentleman it ought to be done.

Mr. MANN. I do not see any objection to making the assistant give a bond to the same authority to which the Federal reserve agent gives a bond.

Mr. WINGO. I agree with the gentleman, but I do not agree with his interpretation of the language.

Mr. MANN. This only requires a bond for the protection of the Federal reserve agent.

Mr. WINGO. The bank is protected, rather.

Mr. MANN. The bank may or may not be protected.

Mr. WINGO. Because the bond of the Federal reserve agent is given to protect, and then he may require under this provision that his assistant give a bond so as to protect him on his bond for any defalcation of the assistant in his absence. He is responsible for him.

Mr. MANN. This is the theory of all these bonds in the various departments, but now the theory is that the head authority shall take the bond.

Mr. WINGO. I agree with the gentleman's contention, but I do not as to the interpretation of the language. I still think this bond given by the assistant would run to the bank.

Mr. MANN. It would not if it followed the language of the bill.

Mr. PHELAN. Before the gentleman's time expires I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in our bill we are holding the Federal reserve agent responsible for making the assistant responsible to him, but in the case of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] the Federal Reserve Board is not responsible for these securities in the same sense, so that ought to be left out if the amendment is adopted, and the bond ought to run to the United States if it is adopted.

Mr. GLASS. This proceeds on the theory that the agent is responsible to the Government for the conduct of his position. This is simply to require the Federal reserve agent, if he feels that it would safeguard his interests, to require a bond from his assistant.

Mr. McFADDEN. Under this amendment we are creating new officers, but we are compelling them to be answerable to an agent. It seems to me they ought to be responsible to the same source that the Federal reserve agent is, either to the United States or the Federal Reserve Board, or to the regional bank with which they are connected, and not to an agent, who in this case is the Federal reserve agent.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will.

Mr. STEVENSON. If the Federal reserve agent has given a bond that will cover all defalcation, and then you provide for an assistant and make him give a bond merely in the discretion of the Federal reserve agent, and that bond is made very much smaller, if there should be a defalcation, do you not to that extent release the Federal agent from the amount his bond is for, and incidentally do you not stand a chance of reducing the security of the Government rather than increase it?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman was correct, we would not take a bond from any employee in a post office under a postmaster. The postmaster gives a bond covering the whole thing. We do not consider that safe. We make the cashier, the assistant postmaster, all of the people who deal with money, give a bond to the Government of the United States for its protection, in addition to the bond given by the postmaster. Now, we have the right to require it. It certainly adds somewhat to the safety to require a bond to be given. What difference does it make to the Government if the gentleman's contention is correct—whether the assistant gives a bond at all or not? If the Government is relying wholly on the bond given by the Federal agent, the Government is not interested whether the assistant gives a bond or not. The whole theory of requiring the assistant to give a bond is not for the protection of the man who appointed him, but for the higher authorities.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment reported again?

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. McFADDEN. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 16.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the first paragraph of section 13 be further amended so as to read as follows:

"Any Federal reserve bank may receive from any of its member banks, and from the United States, deposits of current funds in lawful money, national-bank notes, Federal reserve notes, or checks and drafts, payable upon presentation, and also for collection, maturing notes and bills; or, solely for purposes of exchange or of collection, may receive from other Federal reserve banks deposits of current funds in lawful money, national-bank notes, or checks upon other Federal reserve banks, and checks and drafts, payable upon presentation within its district, and maturing notes and bills payable within its district; or, solely for the purposes of exchange or of collection, may receive from any nonmember bank or trust company deposits of current funds in lawful money, national-bank notes, Federal reserve notes, checks and drafts payable upon presentation, or maturing notes and bills: Provided, That such nonmember bank or trust company maintains with the Federal reserve bank of its district a balance in an amount to be determined by the Federal Reserve Board under such rules and regulations as it may prescribe."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, is an amendment offered?

The CHAIRMAN. No. The Clerk called attention to a letter being out of a word on line 19, page 3. Without objection, it will be corrected.

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. I would like to know what the Clerk is reading from.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk is on page 4, as the Chairman gets it now, on line 3.

Mr. MANN. Are there two prints of this bill?

Mr. WINGO. No, sir. This is House bill 3673.

Mr. GLASS. The letter "i" is left out of the word "collection." It is a typographical error.

Mr. McFADDEN. I was not following the reading carefully, Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment here to section 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McFADDEN: On page 4, line 2, after the word "prescribe," add the following:

"Provided further, That nothing in this or any other section of this act shall be construed as prohibiting a member or nonmember bank from making reasonable charges, in no case to exceed 10 cents per $100 or fraction thereof, based on the total of checks and drafts presented at any one time, for collection or payment of checks and drafts and remission therefor by exchange or otherwise."

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Chairman, on that I make a point of order.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I think this is quite germane.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. GLASS. The point of order is that the proposition is not germane; that it relates to a matter that is not treated in this bill at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to be heard?

Mr. McFADDEN. I simply want to make this statement, and that is I think the amendment is germane. It relates to the collection of items, and for that reason I think it is properly to be considered at this time.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Chairman, the amendment proposed relates to an entirely different section of the Federal reserve act, and is in no sense germane to any provision of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken. The Chair will say this, that the parliamentary clerk and the chairman investigated this matter. This bill was to come up at the last session of Congress and at this session. The opinion of the parliamentary clerk is that this is subject to a point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the fifth paragraph of section 13 be, and is hereby, amended further so as to read as follows:

"Any member bank may accept drafts or bills of exchange drawn upon it having not more than six months sight to run, exclusive of days of grace, which grow out of transactions involving the importation or exportation of goods; or which grow out of transactions involving the domestic shipment of goods provided shipping documents conveying or securing title are attached at the time of acceptance; or which are secured at the time of acceptance by a warehouse receipt or other such document conveying or securing title covering readily marketable staples. No member bank shall accept, whether in a foreign or domestic transaction, for any one person, company, firm, or corporation to an amount equal at any time in the aggregate to more than 10 per cent of its paid-up and unimpaired capital stock and surplus, unless the bank is secured either by attached documents or by some other actual security growing out of the same transaction as the acceptance; and no bank shall accept such bills to an amount equal to any time in the aggregate to more than one-half of its paid-up and unimpaired capital stock and surplus: Provided, however, That the Federal Reserve Board, under such general regulations as it may prescribe, which shall apply to all banks alike regardless of the amount of capital stock and surplus, may authorize any member bank to accept such bills to an amount not exceeding at any time in the aggregate 100 per cent of its paid-up and unimpaired capital stock and surplus: Provided, however, That the aggregate of acceptances growing out of domestic transactions shall in no event exceed 50 per cent of such capital stock and surplus."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire whether or not this would permit a member bank or a nonmember bank from loaning 100 per cent of its capital stock and circulation to one individual or firm, provided he would come in with exchange or bills of lading, in one transaction?

Mr. GLASS. No; it would not. It simply restores language that was inadvertently marked out by me in the last Congress.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I only want to say that if it did, it would be liberalization with a vengeance.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That section 19 be further amended and reenacted so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 19. Demand deposits within the meaning of this act shall comprise all deposits payable within 30 days, and time deposits shall comprise all deposits payable after 30 days, all saving accounts and certificates of deposit which are subject to not less than 30 days' notice before payment, and all postal savings deposits.

"Every bank, banking association, or trust company which is or which becomes a member of any Federal reserve bank shall establish and maintain reserve balances with its Federal reserve bank as follows:

"(a) If not in a reserve or central reserve city, as now or hereafter defined, it shall hold and maintain with the Federal reserve bank of its district an actual net balance equal to not less than 7 per cent of the aggregate amount of its demand deposits and 3 per cent of its time deposits.

"(b) If in a reserve city, as now or hereafter defined, it shall hold and maintain with the Federal reserve bank of its district an actual net balance equal to not less than 10 per cent of the aggregate amount of its demand deposits and 3 per cent of its time deposits.

"(c) If in a central reserve city, as now or hereafter defined, it shall hold and maintain with the Federal reserve bank of its district an actual net balance equal to not less than 13 per cent of the aggregate amount of its demand deposits and 3 per cent of its time deposits.

"No member bank shall keep on deposit with any nonmember bank a sum in excess of 10 per cent of its own paid-up capital and surplus. No member bank shall act as the medium or agent of a nonmember bank in applying for or receiving discounts from a Federal reserve bank under the provisions of this act, except by permission of the Federal Reserve Board.

"The required balance carried by a member bank with a Federal reserve bank may, under the regulations and subject to such penalties as may be prescribed by the Federal Reserve Board, be checked against and withdrawn by such member bank for the purpose of meeting existing liabilities: Provided, however, That no bank shall at any time make new loans or shall pay any dividends unless and until the total balance required by law is fully restored.

"In estimating the balances required by this act the net difference of amounts due to and from other banks shall be taken as the basis for ascertaining the deposits against which required balances with Federal reserve banks shall be determined.

"National banks, or banks organized under local laws, located in Alaska or in a dependency or insular possession or any part of the United States outside the continental United States may remain nonmember banks, and shall in that event maintain reserves and comply with all the conditions now provided by law regulating them; or said banks may, with the consent of the Reserve Board, become member banks of any one of the reserve districts, and shall in that event take stock, maintain reserves, and be subject to all the other provisions of this act."

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment to section 5.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HILL: Page 6, line 9, after the word "deposited," in line 8, strike out lines 9 to 25 and page 6 and the first three lines on page 7.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the bill is this: The original law governing so-called country national banks before the Federal reserve law was enacted required that such a bank should have a reserve of 15 per cent. I think this House is more interested in the country banks than in city banks, because there are more of them. They are like the "plain people," of whom Abraham Lincoln said there were a great many. There are more country banks than city banks, and more money invested in banking in country banks than in city banks. That reserve of 15 per cent was reduced by the Federal reserve law to 12 per cent. It is now proposed to cut that reserve of 12 per cent down to 7 per cent.

I do not believe that there is a man on the Federal Reserve Board, I do not believe there is a man on the Banking and Currency Committee, I do not believe that there is a man in the United States who knows anything about the subject that believes it would be safe for a country bank of discount located 150 to 250 miles away from its central agent, the Federal reserve bank, to do a banking business on a 7 per cent reserve on demand deposits and 3 per cent reserve on its time deposits. But this law compels you to take every single, solitary cent of your reserve money and deposit it in your Federal bank, not leaving one single, solitary penny to meet the obligations of a banking institution.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. HILL. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. McFADDEN. I think the gentleman is mistaken in his idea.

Mr. HILL. I will ask the chairman of the committee if I am not absolutely right in my statement?

Mr. GLASS. No; the gentleman is not right, by any manner of means.

Mr. HILL. This law says the entire reserve shall be deposited with the Federal reserve bank but 7 per cent.

Mr. GLASS. The entire reserve shall be, but the gentleman loses sight of the fact that the banker himself is given discretion to keep "till money" on hand, so that he is not to do business solely on 7 per cent reserve. A country banker could not use the reserve in his own vault, could he, except under penalty?

Mr. HILL. Yes; he could, as long as he did not discount any more paper.

Mr. GLASS. Under penalty.

Mr. HILL. Yes; under penalty.

Mr. GLASS. The gentleman knows very well that the "till money" which any prudent banker must keep for daily demands need not, under this bill, be lawful money. He can keep any sort of currency.

Mr. HILL. I simply repeat my statement and confirm it with the chairman's own statement, that not one dollar of required reserve money must be kept in the bank under this bill, and every dollar of it, every penny of it, is required to be kept in the Federal reserve bank.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. Right there, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HILL. I will yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. Is there a line in the law that prevents any banker from keeping 40 per cent against deposits?

Mr. HILL. Oh, I hope the time will never come when the law will prevent a man keeping his own money in his own pocket.

Mr. PHELAN. The gentleman certainly ought to make a full statement when he makes any statement.

Mr. HILL. I am making it.

Mr. PHELAN. When the gentleman says the bill if passed will require the member banks to keep all their reserves in the Federal reserve banks he ought at the same time to say that the provisions of the bill in the case of country banks reduce their reserve from 12 per cent to 7 per cent.

Mr. HILL. I understand that, but they are taking 2 per cent more money out of the vaults of the bank and compelling them to put it in the Federal reserve bank at the same time that they reduce the reserve.

Mr. GLASS. Why did not the gentleman from Connecticut confine himself to that statement of fact with respect to reserves, instead of trying to make it appear that we are depleting the banks of their money?

Mr. HILL. It is easy enough to befog this thing, but it is a plain, straight matter.

Mr. GLASS. That is exactly what I am suggesting to the gentleman.

Mr. HILL. The law heretofore required a 12 per cent reserve, of which 5 per cent should be kept in the Federal reserve bank. That is right, isn't it?

Mr. GLASS. That is right.

Mr. HILL. This law changes it and only requires a 7 per cent reserve, which I claim is not safe, and compels you to keep all of that, which is 2 per cent more than you had before, in the Federal reserve bank. Now, a bank with a million dollars deposit has got to keep $20,000 more absolutely earning nothing in the hands of the Federal reserve bank. Am I correct or not?

Mr. GLASS. That far you are, but you do not go far enough.

Mr. HILL. That is all I have said.

Mr. GLASS. You do not state that we have reduced the reserve of the country bank from 12 to 7 per cent——

Mr. HILL. That does not amount to anything. You can reduce the reserve all you please——

Mr. GLASS. It does not amount to anything if the gentleman is willing to contend, in the face of the action of the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Reserve Council, that American bankers have not prudence enough to keep "till money" sufficient to meet their current daily needs.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PLATT. It seems to me that the difficulty comes from a difference in definition. The gentleman says that this law requires the country bank to keep all of its reserve money in the Federal reserve bank?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. What does the gentleman mean by reserve money? Does he mean legal tender?

Mr. HILL. I mean legal tender.

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman does not mean to say that if a bank has got $100,000 deposits and $20,000 of gold certificates it is required to put all of them into the Federal reserve bank?

Mr. HILL. The gentleman knows as well as I do that when I spoke of the amount it was required to keep in the Federal reserve bank I meant the amount of reserve required under the law. It is very easy to befog this thing.

Mr. PLATT. It means the legal tender in the bank.

Mr. BORLAND. This law provides that the country bank shall keep only 7 per cent reserve, but keep it all in the Federal reserve bank.

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. The present law requires 12 per cent reserve, but only 5 per cent in the Federal reserve bank.

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. When they keep 5 per cent under the present law in the Federal reserve bank and 7 per cent under this new law in the Federal reserve bank, is not their reserve really strengthened by having the whole of it in the Federal Reserve Association—7 per cent instead of 5 per cent?

Mr. HILL. No; it will weaken it, because 5 per cent less is required all told. The banks in the city from which the gentleman comes can well afford to have any reserve required, because there is a Federal reserve bank in the gentleman's city; but you take a man who lives in a community 50 or 100 miles away from a Federal reserve bank, and that whole reserve of 7 per cent is kept in the Federal reserve bank vault, and that is not safe banking.

Mr. BORLAND. That is exactly what I am asking the gentleman. If they were to keep a reserve of 12 per cent under existing law, they could keep part of it, or 7 per cent, in some private bank in Kansas City, and the other 5 per cent in the Kansas City Federal Reserve Association bank, so they would be just as far from their money as they are under this law.

Mr. HILL. Across the street.

Mr. GLASS. The gentleman from Connecticut talks about the "interest on money" of which country banks are here deprived, and the additional 2 per cent upon which the local bank "can not draw interest." Can the local bank draw interest on any part of its prescribed 12 per cent reserve under existing law?

Mr. HILL. Yes; it can draw interest on its prescribed reserve under the existing law up to November 1.

Mr. GLASS. Up to November 1, yes; but the gentleman knows what I mean.

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. GLASS. The country bank can get 2 per cent on part of its reserve now, but not after November 1. In other words, under existing law the local bank, after November 1, will have 12 per cent upon which it can get no interest, and under this proposition it will have only 7 per cent.

Mr. HILL. After November 1.

Mr. GLASS. Is not that a fact?

Mr. HILL. A great deal of water is going to pass over the dam before November 1, I will tell my friends, in regard to banking matters. The criticism upon this system to-day is that the Federal Reserve System is being maintained at the expense of the national banks for the benefit of the State banks and trust companies. This simply aggravates that condition. It costs more. It costs now about 1 per cent on the stock of a country bank to maintain the existence of the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. GLASS. How does the gentleman account for the fact that the Federal reserve council, composed exclusively of representatives of the Federal reserve banks of the country, recommends that this should be passed?

Mr. HILL. I have no doubt of that. The whole purpose and object of this is to aggrandize the Federal Reserve Board, to take away the gold and the legal tender money of the country banks and center it here, and to substitute in lieu thereof the Federal reserve notes. How many of the Members of the House now present know that the nonlegal tender paper money aggregates more, I think, to-day than the greenbacks outstanding in this country? And the purpose of stripping the country banks of legal tender and putting it in the Federal Reserve Bank System is to further extend that system. And if that is done, within a year you will see a thousand million Federal reserve notes nonlegal tenders as practically the only money country banks can handle.

Mr. GLASS. And yet the gentleman from Connecticut was in favor of a central bank, which would have consolidated all of the reserves in one bank.

Mr. HILL. I would; I would rather have one central bank managed by business men than a Federal Reserve Board managed by Democratic politicians only. [Applause.] Now, I did not want to refer to that——

Mr. GLASS. The gentleman ought not to have referred to it. He knows he ought not to have made such a statement, and he knows that one of the ablest members of the Federal Reserve Board is not a Democrat, and he favored this provision more than any other. He originated the suggestion.

Mr. HILL. Who is he?

Mr. GLASS. The gentleman knows he ought not to have made the statement.

Mr. HILL. Who started it; I did not start it. Will the gentleman name one man on the board that is not a Democrat?

Mr. GLASS. I could name more than one who did not vote for Woodrow Wilson in the last election; but that has nothing to do with purely economic questions, which ought to be considered on their merits.

Mr. HILL. I agree to that, but I did not introduce the subject; the gentleman introduced it.

Mr. GLASS. I did not. I said nothing about politics.

Mr. HILL. The gentleman asked whether I preferred a central bank to a Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. GLASS. What has that to do with politics? Many Democrats advocate a central bank. I had reference only to the question of concentrating banking power, and not to the political aspect of the problem.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, in self-defense I will tell a story. I was a member of the Chicago convention of bankers, delegated by the State of Connecticut to represent their banks. I went to that convention and was a member of a committee appointed to consider the Federal reserve act and report amendments. I was a member of a committee appointed by that convention to come to Washington and ask for amendments.

In the discussion of that bill in Chicago for 24 hours, we discussed it in an absolutely nonpartisan way. I take no criticism of that sort from the gentleman from Virginia or anybody else. When we reached the clause of the Federal reserve bill providing that there should not be more than three members of any one particular party, I said, "Mr. Chairman, I move to strike from this bill every political allusion in it." The committee was composed of Democrats and Republicans——

Mr. GLASS. I regret that my friend did not exercise the same wisdom here that he displayed there. [Applause.]

Mr. HILL. I said nothing about politics until the gentleman interjected his question. As I said to this committee, "I move to strike out every political allusion in that bill." Some one said, "Would you give the President power to appoint all from one political party?" My answer was, "No President ever lived, no President is living now, and no President ever will live, that would prostitute a great business enterprise like this to a political machine." I was mistaken.

Mr. GLASS. No; the gentleman was not mistaken.

Mr. HILL. Yes; I was.

Mr. GLASS. No; the gentleman was not.

Mr. HILL. Every man was chosen from one political party.

Mr. GLASS. That is not the fact.

Mr. HILL. Well, let us drop the subject; the gentleman started it. I am willing to go further.

Mr. GLASS. The gentleman started it, and he ought to end it.

Mr. HILL. As I said, I was mistaken. Mr. Chairman, it is said that this will affect the country banks, because it gives greater rediscount privileges. There never has been a time since the law was enacted that there has been thirty millions of rediscounts, all told. There could be a billion or more. There never has been 30,000,000 in the aggregate in the United States. The effect of this, gentlemen, is to further penalize your country banks by compelling them to take their legal-tender funds and deposit them in the Federal reserve.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL. Now, gentlemen, I want to add one thing more, and I think the chairman of the committee will agree with me in this. I would like to see, as he would like to see, every bank in the United States in the Federal Reserve System. I would be glad to see it. I have stood steadily for two years trying to stop the exodus from the Federal Reserve System and keep banks in it.

Now, out of 21,000 banks and trust companies in the United States under State laws only about 35 have gone into the Federal Reserve System, and only those have gone in who have been forced to go in under the national banking law or else yield to liquidation. I refer to national banks.

Mr. SLOAN. How many have gone out?

Mr. HILL. I do not know. I want the system bettered rather than made weaker. I am not trying to hurt it; I am trying to help it. I want it to do well. I approve of the gentleman's bill and shall vote for it, except for the reserve provision. I want to say that the provision in this bill to induce country banks, State banks, and trust companies to come in are more than nullified by this provision which would increase the amount of the stockholders' and depositors' money which they are required to let lie idle, and that we will not get any banks to come in under that provision. They may come in in spite of it in peculiar cases, just as the Corn Exchange Bank in New York City has gone in as one of the 35, but there must be something radically wrong in a great system where only the banks that are in it are forced into it under the penalty of liquidation if they do not come in, and of those who came in voluntarily, State banks and trust companies, only 35 out of 21,000 have come in. Why make it more odious? Why make it more harmful to the 21,000 banks? You can not drive them in by making the conditions worse than they are now.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman state where he gets those figures of 21,000? I challenge them. I say there are not 21,000.

Mr. HILL. Very well. It is easy enough to make the challenge. I continue my statement—state banks, trust companies, and savings banks.

Mr. PHELAN. I ask the gentleman for his authority.

Mr. HILL. I give the authority of the comptroller's office, the annual reports of the comptroller's office. I think the exact number is 21,439, but I did not care to be too definite.

Mr. PHELAN. Does not that include savings banks?

Mr. HILL. I include all of the banks reported to the comptroller's office.

Mr. PHELAN. Savings banks can not come in.

Mr. HILL. The others that have a choice in the matter have not come in. I have been trying for a year to make it possible for savings banks to come in. I introduced a bill to that effect last year. This clause compelling your country banks to take their money and put it in the Federal reserve banks, forbidding them practically from carrying on their business with their correspondents as they have done in the past, except at their own expense, is going to make the system more odious still. I would strike it out, as a well-wisher of the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the amendments proposed by the gentleman are adopted, what will be the reserves in the respective banks?

Mr. HILL. Just exactly what they are now.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then the reserves of the city and country banks are not included in section 19?

Mr. HILL. It is just exactly as they are now. If this amendment I have offered is adopted the reserves will remain unchanged both in the city and in the country and in the Federal reserve cities.

Mr. GLASS. In other words, you will have 12 per cent on which country banks can not draw interest instead of 7?

Mr. HILL. There is not a nation in the world that permits a reserve as low as that, except France, and France does not carry any; and yet France, governed by the one central bank which the gentleman seems to criticize, carries a higher reserve voluntarily than any other nation in the world compelled by law.

Mr. GLASS. I regret that the gentleman does not seem to comprehend the import of my inquiry about a central bank. It had no political significance whatsoever. The gentleman was talking about consolidation of banking power and mobilization of money at one point, and I was simply suggesting that he was in favor of a greater concentration than is proposed here.

Mr. HILL. I am opposed to political concentration of any industrial or financial system, I do not care what it is; and I would not vote for it if every one was a Republican instead of a Democrat.

Mr. GLASS. And I am opposed to any political consideration of this grave economic question. Moreover, as I have already said, every member of the Federal Reserve Board is not a Democrat, as the gentleman states.

Mr. HILL. I ask the gentleman to name one who is not.

Mr. GLASS. I do not care to go into that question.

Mr. HILL. Very well; I will excuse the gentleman.

Mr. GLASS. I may state to the gentleman that two members of the board are not Democrats, and I know it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I want to ask the gentleman if, in his opinion, the 5 per cent reserve now held by the Federal reserve banks is adequate for the rediscounting purposes of the member banks?

Mr. HILL. The gentleman means for the rediscounting with the Federal reserve banks?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. HILL. I presume it may not be large enough for some portions of the South where the cotton crop comes in all at once and very heavy rediscount privilege may be asked. So far as our section of the country is concerned, and so far as the country as a whole is concerned, the privilege has not been used and probably never will be used to any very great extent.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Does the gentleman believe that if this 5 per cent is not adequate now in time of business prosperity it will be adequate at all in time of great stress—in a panic, for example?

Mr. HILL. It is adequate now, far more than adequate, with hundreds of millions of the privilege unused, and it always will be so.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. In time of panic 7 per cent would afford adequate protection, would it not?

Mr. HILL. Theoretically it would.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. And at the same time be a small charge on these people.

Mr. HILL. But any Federal reserve bank has got to violate the law in order to have that privilege very much extended. The restrictions upon the paper, upon the character of paper, the purpose for which it is given, and indorsements, and all that sort of thing, are so great that the law has already been modified in many respects. Let me cite a case. What is called accommodation paper is practically now accepted for rediscount. The law does not permit it. It is a forced construction by the Federal Reserve Board, and in time of panic the Federal Reserve Board has got to violate the law or your rediscount privilege is not worth the paper it is written on to the average country bank.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HILL. Yes; certainly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I would like to ask the gentleman if in his observation and study of this bill he finds anything in it that in any way might affect prejudicially the interests of these State banks and trust companies that are not members of the reserve system?

Mr. HILL. It takes 2 per cent of the deposits that they have now and turns it over to the Federal Reserve System and takes it out of the use of the locality.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The State banks and trust companies are not affected.

Mr. HILL. Certainly, if they go in; certainly. So far as State banks are concerned—no; oh, no; they are free; they can keep their money in their vaults if they want to; but at the same time I do not believe there is a State in the Union, the statement to the contrary notwithstanding, that permits a reserve as low as 7 per cent against the payment of deposits.

Mr. GLASS. I know of States in the Union that do not require any reserve.

Mr. HILL. Certainly, I will agree to that; but are they banks of discount?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman name one State?

Mr. GLASS. Yes; the State of Virginia.

Mr. HILL. Exactly.

Mr. GLASS. And others.

Mr. HILL. Well, I did not know there was one.

Mr. McFADDEN. As a rule, in the matter of reserve requirements of vault cash in England, France, Germany, and all continental countries of Europe, they do not require any reserve of vault cash.

Mr. HILL. I am aware of the fact that in some countries they do not. France does not require any, but I know this, gentleman, from actual experience, and I am looking right in the faces of bankers who know I am right by their own experience, you can not take any manufacturing section of the country and you can not take any cotton section of the country during picking time and get along with a 7 per cent reserve.

Mr. McFADDEN. As I said before, there is no reserve requirement by any banking corporations in England.

Mr. HILL. I know in the manufacturing sections of the country it requires from 20 to 30 per cent constantly and requires it all the time, and then to cut it down to 7 and 6 and require that that shall be taken away from the bank seems to me is a fatal mistake. Now, I am in favor of this bill except that section, and will be very glad to vote for it with that section stricken out. I think we ought to have more time to consider that section. I think we ought to have time to hear from the banks of the country as to whether they want this legislation or not before we act on it. My judgment would be that it would be wise to strike out this section and go home and talk with our constituents and come back here next December and take up that section as a separate bill and act on it with a full knowledge of the effect that it is going to have upon our people.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as a substitute to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send it up.

Mr. McFADDEN. It is at the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 6, line 16, strike out the word "seven" and insert the word "five."

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment proposes to reduce the legal requirements of the reserves of country banks from 7 to 5 per cent, as proposed in this Federal reserve amendment, but it is a well-known fact that while under the old law the legal reserve of 12 per cent applied to country banks, those banks, notwithstanding this fact, are keeping an average reserve of about 27 per cent. The country banks have never confined themselves to the legal requirements. Under these Federal reserve amendments as now proposed they will be compelled not only to keep all the reserves they now keep in the Federal reserve banks, but to increase them 2 per cent, or from 5 per cent to 7 per cent—and this must be a net balance of 7 per cent—whereas present requirements are a gross requirement. That is to say, the banks must carry the float—amounting on the average to 1¾ per cent, being the checks in process of collection—so, therefore, the banks must carry 8¾ instead of 7 per cent.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes; I will.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman say that the country banks voluntarily keep 27 per cent reserve with the regional banks under the Federal reserve act?

Mr. McFADDEN. Oh, not at all.

Mr. CANNON. With their correspondents?

Mr. McFADDEN. With the city correspondents of the bank and the regional banks combined.

Mr. CANNON. Upon which they get 2 per cent interest?

Mr. McFADDEN. That is one point I was coming to. The city correspondent banks pay them interest usually at the rate of 2 per cent, but the regional banks pay no interest. That is one of the reasons for my amendment reducing this requirement to 5 per cent.

Mr. CANNON. And they get no interest from the Federal reserve banks?

Mr. McFADDEN. No; as a matter of fact, their combined reserves to-day are about 27 per cent. They are permitted under the present law to keep a small portion of that with other banks in reserve cities, and under this law, if adopted, there will be a complete mobilization of all reserves into the 12 regional reserve banks immediately. Now, the purpose of this amendment is to permit these country banks to keep a portion of their reserve with other than Federal reserve banks and thus receive more compensation in the way of interest and other emoluments, such as services which are known only to the country banks. These city banks perform many forms of services for the country banks and are repaid by a compensating balance from the country banks. I might add here that in the Senate a bill has been reported from the Senate Banking and Currency Committee in which they have provided that the reserves of the country be fixed at 6 per cent.

So that this amendment of mine would be 1 per cent lower than the Senate amendment. When you consider that this is a net reserve, and that the banks must carry the float or the checks in transit, and that amounts to on the average 1¾ per cent the country over, if you fix the required reserve at 7 per cent it means the banks must carry actually 8¾ per cent reserve to meet the legal requirements; whereas if you make the legal requirement 5 per cent and then add the float or checks in process of collection, amounting to 1¾ per cent, you then have the correct statement of what will then be required of the country banks—namely, 6¾ per cent under my amendment or 8¾ per cent under the proposed amendment of the Federal Reserve Board.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN].

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Chairman, it is unfortunate in the discussion of this all-important question that men should talk about nothing but the banks. All through the Federal reserve act, when we were considering the question of putting on the statute books some kind of a law that would help the commerce and the industry and the agriculture of the country, and incidentally the banks of the country, we were met at every turn with the question, "How does it affect this little bank or that bank? Is this profit interfered with or that profit interfered with?"

Gentlemen, this is a tremendously big question. Just think what we are doing. We have provided for issuing $5,000,000,000 of bonds and $2,000,000,000 worth of United States notes. We shall have provided in a day or two for an expenditure of almost $3,000,000,000 for the Army. In view of these big financial provisions, as well as for other purposes, what is one of the most important things for us to do in addition? It is to make secure during this war our financial structure. There ought not to be anybody in the country, much less in the House, who will allow for one minute any of these petty objections to stand in the way of giving our country just as strong a financial structure as it can have. [Applause.] Heaven knows that before we get through with this war our finances are going to be strained as they have been strained in every European country. We have a system that in spite of the objections that were made to it in its formation is recognized as the best banking system in the world, and if we can make it still stronger we should do it.

This section in this bill involves the placing of something like $350,000,000 additional reserves into the Federal reserve banks and making the banks that much stronger, that much better able to meet any test that comes. Here is the big question that is coming up. We are going to have our credit extended; we are going to have requests for credit from all over the United States. We have got to put our member banks and our Federal reserve banks in the right position to meet that demand when it is made.

During the war we have had a great influx of gold into this country—hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars. Every dollar of that gold can be used as reserve for banks. As we accumulate gold for them, their loaning power is extended. What we are trying to do by this provision is not necessarily to keep that gold in this country—it may help to do that—but to use the gold we have in this country to the best advantage. I want to repeat that statement, because I think the statement, as often made, is that the purpose of some of these amendments is to keep gold in the country. Now, we can absolutely depend on the economic law that if economic conditions are going to call for a flow of gold from the country the gold is going. We can do things to help keep it here, but one of the main purposes, if not the main purpose, of this amendment is to use the gold that we have in this country now and in the future to the best advantage of our credit system. That is the purpose. What does it mean? It means that if agriculture wants to be taken care of at our banks it will be taken care of. It means that if industry wants to be taken care of at our banks it will be taken care of, and it means that if manufacture wants to be taken care of at our banks, it will be taken care of. And the stronger you make our Federal reserve banks the better position you place the banking system of the country in to meet the conditions placed upon it.

The idea that we are taking something out of country banks would not apply as a stop, even if there was anything to justify it. Let me point out the misconceptions of the gentlemen who are arguing that way. Under the old national-banking law the country banks had to keep 15 per cent reserve—6 per cent in their own vaults and 9 per cent with other banks. But remember it was 6 per cent in their own vaults, and that 6 per cent virtually had to be locked up in vaults and not used.

Mr. HILL. The gentleman knows that they could keep 15 per cent in their own vaults if they wanted to do so.

Mr. PHELAN. That makes my argument much stronger. They had to keep it idle, so far as using it was concerned. The purpose of keeping it was to make it the basis of credit, but so far as using that cash is concerned, it could not be done under the national-banking law, without putting back what was taken out of this 6 per cent. It was 6 per cent on which they did not get a dollar of interest, and useless to them for use except as a basis of credit. What are we asking? All we are asking is 7 per cent to be kept in the Federal reserve bank, which is only 1 per cent over what they had to keep in their own vaults, without requiring the country banks to keep any of the 9 per cent additional formerly required. Where country banks had to keep 15 per cent under the national-bank act, they have to keep 7 per cent under this bill. Under the Federal Reserve System country banks must keep a reserve of 12 per cent, upon which they can not obtain any interest. Under this bill the requirement is only 7 per cent.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. What protection are you giving to the depositors, which is the basis principle of reserves? The old law says 15 per cent. That was supposed to be for the benefit of the depositors. True, some of it was locked up. Now you are reducing it to 7 per cent and transferring it to the Federal reserve banks. What provision have you made for the depositors of any additional fund in the local bank in case of need?

Mr. PHELAN. We are giving the banks the security of the Federal reserve banks. The question of 7 per cent gives the depositors of the country fully as good security as they ever had—perhaps better than they ever had before.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN] may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LITTLE. How will that avoid a run on the bank in these troublous times that you tell us are coming?

Mr. PHELAN. Now, here is the whole situation: Just as long as a bank is a member of this system it can go up with its paper and get it rediscounted with the Federal reserve bank and get all the cash it needs if a situation like that should arise.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] asked me how they got security against loss to depositors. It is because of the strength of the system. They have 7 per cent in the Federal reserve banks as a reserve. In addition, as the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] says, they never will deplete their own vaults. They will always have something there.

Mr. STAFFORD. When they provide a certain percentage for reserve, it is with the purpose that they will not deplete their cash deposits.

Mr. PHELAN. As long as the bank has either cash or what it can turn into cash to meet demands, it is in a perfectly safe condition, and in this Federal Reserve System, even if they have not the cash, they can get it from the Federal reserve bank. That is all the more reason why you want to make the Federal reserve banks all the stronger, to meet the demands of the member banks when the member banks draw upon them when they in turn are drawn upon by their depositors.

Mr. HILL. I have received new light since the gentleman said that if they have not got the cash they can go to the Federal reserve bank and present security and get it. What kind of security?

Mr. PHELAN. They can present commercial paper.

Mr. HILL. Oh, if it is the right kind.

Mr. PHELAN. If they have not the right kind, they are probably not doing business in the right way.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. Suppose a bank should pay out every cent of its till money? Would the depositors lose anything?

Mr. PHELAN. Probably not.

Mr. STAFFORD. The banks would be insolvent if they did not have the money to pay their depositors.

Mr. PHELAN. No. I want to say that I have not any prejudice against the small banks. I come from a section where we have country banks. In this country we have to take care of the business of the country and the agriculture of the country, and not take any chances of having our financial structure even threatened.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. I will in a couple of minutes, when I have made my statement.

Now, see how inconsistent these gentlemen are. They make the statement that even under these reserve requirements, where 7 per cent is drawn into the Federal reserve bank, they are still obliged to keep some money in their vaults. Of course, they are. They can not run down to nothing. Under the present system, where they are obliged to keep 4 per cent reserve in their vaults, they are required now to keep some additional money besides that 4 per cent in their vaults to meet demands on them. Where the law requires a reserve of 4 per cent, the banks may keep 10 per cent. They keep above the 4 per cent, so that the bank is always safe. If the reserves now required to be kept in their own vaults are dispensed with, they will reduce the amount of till money. They will not have to keep watching to see if they have that 4 per cent, the legal requirement under the law. In other words, while they keep till money, they will not be obliged to keep it—far and wide in the country—as they do now. Is not that a fair statement?

Mr. HILL. Yes; and forcing them to put this in the Federal reserve system makes it all the more of a hardship on the banks of the United States.

Mr. GLASS. They are suffering a hardship now from the banks not being able to withdraw their reserves.

Now, about the question of securities. As a matter of fact, under the existing law, up to the 17th of next November the local banks will have 12 per cent of their reserves locked up, on which they can not get one dime of interest, and under this bill they will have only 7 per cent.

Mr. PHELAN. Yes. I want to continue my statement. Again, to show how inconsistent these gentlemen are, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] talks about making the Federal reserve notes the basis of reserves. Now, I contend there is no basis for that. There is not a single word in the bill which will permit the Federal reserve notes to be used as a basis for reserves.

Mr. HILL. The gentleman knows that the Federal Reserve Board recommended that it should be put in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have two minutes more.

Mr. LITTLE. I object to two minutes more being given to the gentleman unless he will answer my question.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the committee will now rise and report to the House.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3673) to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, as amended by the acts of August 4, 1914, August 15, 1914, March 3, 1915, and September 7, 1916, and had come to no resolution thereon.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL—WAR EXPENSES (H. REPT. NO. 36).

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations I report a bill making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3971) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the Military and Naval Establishments on account of war expenses for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserves all points of order on the bill. The bill is ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. FOSTER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. FOSTER. I wanted to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if it is his purpose to call up this bill to-morrow for consideration?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I hope to take it up to-morrow, Mr. Speaker.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WEBB rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from North Carolina rise?

Mr. WEBB. To ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 291.

Mr. MANN. Let us reach it on the call of committees.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 291. The Clerk will report it.

Mr. MANN. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. WEBB. I have no objection at all, Mr. Speaker. I thought this was the quickest way to get it up. That was the reason I made the request.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the committees.

ESPIONAGE.

The Clerk proceeded with the call of committees.

Mr. WEBB (when the Committee on the Judiciary was called). Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up from the Judiciary Committee the bill (H. R. 291) to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. MANN. Will not the gentleman ask unanimous consent to consider the committee amendment in lieu of the original bill, as though the committee amendment were the original bill?

Mr. WEBB. I would like to make that request, of course, under the circumstances.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEBB. Now I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendment, which is a substitute for the original bill, may be considered as the original bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the committee amendment be considered as the original bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Reserving the right to object, I want to know, if that consent is given, will the substitute be subject to amendment?

Mr. MANN. That is the purpose of it—to make it subject to amendment as though it were the original bill.

Mr. MADDEN. I thought the purpose of it was to cut off amendment. If it was, I would object; but if not, I will not object.

Mr. WEBB. The purpose is to allow amendments, as to an original bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk began the reading of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the first reading of the bill has been dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk is reading the bill for amendment.

Mr. MANN. We have not discussed the bill yet.

Mr. MADDEN. I should like to ask if there is going to be any general debate.

The SPEAKER. If no gentleman desires to debate the bill, the Chair will put it to a vote.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask if there is going to be any arrangement for general debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not tell.

Mr. WEBB. There is none so far.

Mr. MADDEN. There ought to be considerable discussion of this bill. It is one of the most important bills that has ever come before the Congress of the United States. It affects the liberties of the people of the United States to an extent that they have never been affected before in all our history, and there ought to be wide discussion on it, and everybody in the House ought to have an opportunity to express his opinion about it, and there ought not to be any attempt made to push this bill to a vote at the end of any hour that any Member may be recognized on this floor.

Mr. WEBB. I can assure my friend that no such attempt will be made. I have never attempted to rush any bill through the House.

Mr. MADDEN. I did not know what the disposition would be. The Speaker said he was trying to get a vote on it.

Mr. WEBB. I was trying to get recognition when the Chair made that remark.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes to say that he has no disposition to rush the bill through, but nobody was asking the floor, and if there is no debate on a bill the thing to do is to put it to a vote.

Mr. MADDEN. I was not criticizing the Speaker. I was simply calling attention to the importance of the bill and to the importance of general discussion upon it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] has said is in large part true, in that this is a very important measure. I think it has been magnified somewhat by a lot of misinformation that has been printed about it in the newspapers, and they have created the impression that the committee or somebody was undertaking to unduly abridge the freedom of the press and the freedom of speech. There might have been some little warrant for that suggestion if some provisions for the various bills introduced during the last six months had been recommended to this House; but I desire to say to the House that the bill as originally introduced has been practically rewritten by your committee. We sat around the committee table for practically three weeks in an effort to clarify every ambiguous and uncertain term used in the original bill. We wanted to make each offense definite, so that the public would know when it was committing a crime; and, section by section, patiently, all day long often, the committee have gone over every line of the bill and have rewritten it, and therefore we offer you a substitute for the bill as originally introduced; and, at the risk of being a little tiresome possibly, I will explain in a running way each section of the bill. However, I can say to the House that it is my opinion and the opinion of the committee that title 1, which you will find on page 34, consisting of 10 sections, is the title to which most objection has been raised. That is the part we call the espionage or spy section. All the remaining titles or sections of the bill more or less explain themselves and punish violations of our neutrality. But I take it that the first title is the one that most Members will be interested in, because that is the title you have heard the most about in the newspapers. The newspapers do not want to be disturbed in their "liberty" of the press and "freedom of speech," and some of them may protest a little about section 4 of this title 1. But I hope they will remember that in time of war, while men are giving up their sons and while people are giving up their money, they should at least be willing to give up their right, if they call it a right, to publish broadcast those things which the President of the United States thinks would be hurtful to the United States and helpful to the enemy. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Is this bill as now presented, and with the changes which the committee have made in recent weeks, the bill that was objected to by the publishers' press and the convention of daily newspaper publishers in New York last week?

Mr. WEBB. I think it was the original bill. I do not know whether the publishers had before them the bill that we have reported or not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Would it have been possible for the publishers in New York last week to have had before them the bill as it is now printed?

Mr. WEBB. I do not think so. I am not prepared to say that they had before them the bill which the committee has presented to the House. I know that after this bill was reported and presented to the House one of the big papers commended it and congratulated the committee upon it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. One of the other big papers criticized it most severely.

Mr. WEBB. I have not seen that criticism of this bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have it here.

Mr. WEBB. In what paper is it published?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The New York American of Friday, April 27.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. FESS. In time of war we are very apt to do things that we would not think of doing in time of peace. The question I want to ask is if the committee wrote the bill on the theory that the Constitution of the United States is operative in time of war?

Mr. WEBB. Yes. We recognized the Constitution at that time to be just as binding in time of war as in time of peace. That is my view of it.

Mr. FESS. That is one danger when we are in a spirit of war.

Mr. WEBB. We might pass constitutional acts in time of war which we would not pass in time of peace, but all must be in keeping with the Constitution.

Now, gentlemen, title 1 deals entirely with what we call the espionage laws. Section 1 of this title provides that—

> Whoever, with intent or knowledge, or reason to believe that the information to be obtained is to be used to the injury of the United States, copies, takes, makes, or obtains, or attempts to copy, take, make, or obtain, any sketch, photograph, photographic negative, blue print, plan, model, instrument, appliance, document, writing, code book, or signal book, connected with the national defense, or any copy thereof, or with like intent or knowledge, or reason to believe, directly or indirectly, gets or attempts to get information concerning the national defense, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the injury to the United States is not confined to military injury. This bill would be applicable to any injury.

Mr. WEBB. Why not?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. That is what I wanted to ask. Was it not intended to relate to military offenses?

Mr. WEBB. That is the way the courts would probably construe it. The first section is not for a time of war alone, but it would apply equally in war as well as in a time of peace. The original section provided that whoever obtained information to which he was not lawfully entitled, and so forth. Our difficulty was to ascertain to what a man was lawfully entitled, because there was no law to define what he was entitled to. We provide that any man who takes photographs, blue prints of a fort or a fortification having a purpose to injure the United States. We have made it a definite offense and provided that any such person should be punished.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, this is an important matter and we are all interested in it. I think if the chairman is allowed to proceed without interruption it would be a great deal better than to have his remarks split up in this desultory way. I hope he will be allowed to proceed without interruption.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. I will.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman be kind enough to tell us what, if any, legislation we now have regarding the provisions in section 1.

Mr. WEBB. If the gentleman will take this pamphlet which I have here, he will see what it is. I would not have time to read it all.

Mr. TOWNER. But in a general way could not the gentleman state what changes have been made?

Mr. WEBB. I would not want to do that at this time.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman state what pamphlet it is he holds in his hand.

Mr. WEBB. It is a pamphlet prepared in the Department of Justice, "Recommendations by the Attorney General for legislation amending the criminal and other laws of the United States with reference to neutrality in foreign relations."

The Attorney General says:

> An act making it a crime to obtain without lawful authority or to communicate to a foreign government or any officer or agent thereof, or to any other person, any act or information relative to the national defense obtained by virtue of employment in the service of the United States, or obtained from unlawful access to Government papers or other property, or by fraud upon or connivance with a Government official or employee, or otherwise unlawfully obtained or retained.

The act of March 3, 1911. It is practically the language of our section, but in that old statute the words are employed "to which he is not lawfully entitled"; but nobody knows what information the ordinary man is entitled to receive, and consequently we were building on a foundation of sand. Before you subject a man to a highly penal law, put him in prison for 20 years or take his life, you ought to make everything you require of him or forbid him absolutely specific.

Mr. TOWNER. I did not ask the question in any spirit of criticism. I think the committee is right in the change. The change is made instead of the language quoted to be used to the injury of the United States.

Mr. WEBB. It is; we make the person guilty of an evil intent before we punish him. Otherwise he might go upon a fort with a patriotic intention to see how strong the fort was, how strong his country was, and glory in it, and be guilty of no evil intent. So we have made it necessary that he must have an evil intent before you incarcerate him for 20 years in a penitentiary.

Mr. TOWNER. So as a matter of fact this is a restriction of the existing law.

Mr. WEBB. In a way it is; yes. But it is a very clear and definite restriction.

Mr. CHURCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. CHURCH. The gentleman speaks about the original bill and states that it has been practically rewritten. Will the gentleman be kind enough to state who is the author of the original bill?

Mr. WEBB. It was prepared in the Department of Justice under the direction of the Assistant Attorney General, Mr. Warren, and he and the Attorney General both told us that they did not want us to take the bill as written unless we thought we ought to; that it was the basis of a bill upon which we could work out something definite and something the House would adopt and stand for. I talked with the Attorney General, and Mr. Warren was before the committee for half a day. The trouble about some of the provisions was that they were in the form of general orders or rules and regulations, and very often the department issues them in rather vague and indefinite terms. Of course, it was the duty of our committee to make very highly penal statutes definite and certain, and that is what we undertook to do.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. I will.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. When you put in the language "with intent to injure" and reason to believe it is to be used to injure the United States, in section 2, why should it not include a communication to any person as well as to a foreign government?

Mr. WEBB. That is provided for in the next section.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. That is only where he is interested. I speak of where a person transmits any communication for the injury of the United States—why should it be limited to a communication to a foreign government?

Mr. WEBB. I do not see how you could well prove an intent to injure the United States in such case.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. If he makes a communication under section 2, you say it must be with an intent to injure the United States, but not if he communicates it to another person.

Mr. WEBB. Then you would make it an almost impossible thing to convict a man. If you transmit a book or a blue print or a photograph of one of our fortifications to some foreigner or to some foreign government, it is easy to prove intent, instead of simply making it a crime to transmit it to some patriotic American citizen. You would hardly ever convict a man under the charge that he had transmitted it for the purpose of injuring his own government.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like the gentleman to answer a question. Section 2, title 1, in the closing paragraph, provides that whoever violates that section in time of war shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 30 years or by death. Where is the provision that lodges the discretion in anyone to vary that; in other words, to reduce the punishment from death to imprisonment?

Mr. WEBB. That is in the breast of the court who tries the case.

Mr. STEVENSON. Is it to be in the judge or on some recommendation of the jury?

Mr. WEBB. It is in the judge's breast. I do not think I shall have time to complete a running narrative of what the bill contains, but I shall insert it in the RECORD.

Section 4 of the bill has been most talked of in the newspapers. It authorizes the President by proclamation to declare the existence of a national emergency, arising either out of war or a threat of war, and by proclamation to prohibit the publishing or communicating of information relating to the national defense which, in his judgment, is of such character that it is or might be useful to the enemy.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The section provides for the President making a proclamation practically forbidding the publication or communication of information relating to the national defense which "in his judgment" is of a character that might be useful to the enemy. The language does not seem to be very explicit. Is it the purpose of the committee in drafting this language that the President shall specify the information that is not to be published? That can not be done, of course.

Mr. WEBB. I will say to my friend that the President can do it very much better than we can by legislation.

Mr. MANN. The President would not specify the information which can not be published, because that of itself would be a publication of it.

Mr. WEBB. He can specify the character of the information, such as the movement of troops, the movement of vessels, and things of that character, I imagine.

Mr. MANN. The language "in his judgment" is unnecessary, if that is to be the case, and might render it very difficult to obtain a conviction. If you authorize the President to prohibit the publication or communication of information which might be useful to the enemy and require him to specify, very well, but——

Mr. WEBB. The very fact that he issues a proclamation and specifies the character of information not to be published is tantamount to a declaration that in his judgment it would be useful to the enemy, so that the information is forbidden, and then the man who violates the proclamation would be guilty.

Mr. MANN. One step further. Of course, information as to the number of troops to be raised by law would be useful to the enemy?

Mr. WEBB. Yes; possibly.

Mr. MANN. And information as to the number of troops actually raised would be useful to the enemy. Is it the proposition that while you might, I suppose, discuss these matters on the floor of the House, though I do not know whether you could or not——

Mr. WEBB. Oh, yes; the Constitution says that you may.

Mr. MANN. I do not know. Members of the House under the Constitution are not required to answer anywhere else for what they say here. That is true. But that would not apply probably to a committee, and it would not apply to information obtained by a committee. How far do they want to go? How are you going to provide that no information concerning the number of troops which may be raised or the number of troops which are raised may in any way be made public?

Mr. WEBB. I do not think the President would ever issue any such proclamation, first, because the law itself, widely published, shows how many troops we are going to raise.

Mr. MANN. I have seen Presidents do some very foolish things.

Mr. WEBB. That is very true. But if the President were to abuse his authority, then every newspaper and citizen in the United States would criticize him to the extremest extent. We have inserted a clause reserving to the public the right to criticize. It was not necessary; but in order to reassure the public we have done so. We are in just one of those situations where we have to trust somebody. The President is the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and he has in his hands the military control of the boys of the mothers of the country, and I take it that is as sacred a trust as it is for him to prescribe what in his opinion is information which would be useful to the enemy.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says we have to trust somebody. We all trust each other to a certain extent. This section is of no effect until the proclamation is made by the President.

Mr. WEBB. That is right. We did not intend it to be.

Mr. MANN. If the War Department or the Department of Justice is prepared to present to the President for his signature a proclamation, why can they not tell us what it is intended to cover, so that we can put it in the law?

Mr. WEBB. In the very nature of things that would be difficult to do, because something is arising every day in the progress of a great war like this which it might be vital to keep from the public, because it might be useful to the enemy if published.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman says it is only to fix the character of the information.

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Not the specific information?

Mr. WEBB. I said the President could describe the character of the information. Of course, he would not publish it.

Mr. MANN. He will publish his proclamation, or it would not be any good.

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. MANN. If it is to be the character of information, why is it not just as simple to write it into this law as it is for a clerk in the Department of Justice to prepare it for the signature of the President? It can not relate to specific information, because the President can not proclaim. There is no making certain specific information, because that of itself would be a publication of the information.

Mr. WEBB. Yes; if my friend can write a specific section which will satisfy himself and the House, I am perfectly willing to accept it.

Mr. MANN. I could write it if I could write the proclamation. If there is anyone here bright enough to write a proclamation which will not forbid the giving of information which ought to be given to the people which may be of value to the enemy; if he can write that kind of information, why can not he write that kind of a section in the bill?

Mr. WEBB. I think my friend could write almost anything to cover the present facts, because I think he is one of the ablest men I ever knew, but facts and circumstances are going to develop later which my friend now would not have knowledge of and it might be important to cover later on, and a new proclamation might be necessary to cover that very information.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. I do.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. WEBB. I do.

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman will remember, as we all remember, the extreme criticisms which were made, for instance, with regard to the submarines of the Navy, that they were utterly useless and of no value. The gentleman will remember how it was said that we had not a single machine gun on the border, and so forth. Supposing that in the period of our preparation for this war the newspapers of the country should continue to make such criticisms as that, perhaps sometimes unjust and unfounded, does not the gentleman think that it might be an inducement to the President to issue a proclamation saying that no criticisms of that character should be made by the newspapers of the country with reference to existing conditions, and does not the gentleman think that would be dangerous as we understand it here in America?

Mr. WEBB. I think under the law, if we passed it, the President would have the power to issue proclamations defining the publication of most anything that he solemnly states would be useful to the enemy. We have got to trust the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States; but if he makes such an order as the gentleman suggests, he would be open to all the criticism which the newspapers and the public might direct against him.

Mr. TOWNER. Very well, I understand the difficulty—of course the gentleman does—but it seems to me before venturing upon such a dangerous experiment as that regarding the curtailing of the liberty of the press that we ought to be exceedingly careful, because if there ever was a time when the people ought to know what is actually being done with regard to preparations for this war it certainly is now.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. I do.

Mr. MADDEN. The European situation developed this fact. In the early stages of the war they kept all the information from the people who were fighting the war. They finally began to realize that they had to take the people into their confidence and let the people know what they were doing in reference to the conduct of the war, and since they began doing that they have begun to succeed in fighting the war as it ought to be fought. If we pass this section of this bill, we will place it in the power of the President of the United States to say that nobody can criticize the conduct of the war, nobody can tell how many troops we have——

Mr. WEBB. I do not think the gentleman means that, because we absolutely preserve in the bill the right to criticize.

Mr. MADDEN. The right to criticize the President or any other official, but not what is being done in the conduct of the war.

Mr. WEBB. He is an official of the United States, and you can criticize him, too, and the policies of the Government.

Mr. MADDEN. We have every right to know what is being done, whether they are starving the men or whether the men are given enough to eat, whether they are going without any tents in the field or whether they have tents there, whether they have shoes, whether they are being fed right or not.

Mr. WEBB. Let me read the gentleman what we do provide:

That nothing in this section shall be construed to limit or restrict any discussion, comment, or criticism of the acts or policies of the Government or its representatives or the publication of the same.

Does not that cover it?

Mr. MADDEN. I have read that; and another thing I want to call to the attention of the gentleman from North Carolina: Some of the States may not have furnished their quota to the Army—that they have never been raised—and criticism might be made of the President because of something of favoritism along that line; and it may be that will be considered as a crime against the Government; and I believe that there ought not to be anything done or permitted to be done by any law which can be made by the Congress of the United States that will not give ample scope for criticism of everybody connected with the conduct of this war, whether it is the President or whether it is the generals of the Army or the General Staff, or what it may be. [Applause.] We ought to have free scope. The American people are going to furnish the men to fight the war, and they are going to furnish the money to fight the war, and we ought to have information in connection with the conduct of the war.

Mr. WEBB. The gentleman is taking the part of the newspapers here, when the newspapers themselves seem to be already satisfied.

Mr. MADDEN. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I am taking the part of the American people. I believe I have a right to criticize, and expect to have an opportunity to do it.

The SPEAKER. No Member has a right to interrupt another who has the floor without his consent.

Mr. WEBB. The gentleman has a right to criticize whatever he pleases. We have written it in this bill, although it was not necessary, in order to reassure such timid friends as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. I take exception to the statement of the gentleman when he used the expression "timid." I am not timid.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has no right to interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. WEBB. I withdraw the word "timid" and will insert the word "brave" in lieu thereof.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois feels like the Speaker feels, but it is against the rules of the House.

Mr. WEBB. I insert in place of the word "timid" the word "brave."

Mr. MADDEN. I do not want the gentleman to give any expression of his opinion about it.

Mr. WEBB. Now, the New York World—which, they say, is somewhat of a guardian of the right of free speech—on the 27th of April, which was last Friday, congratulating the committee on the thoroughness of the work done, said:

As it now stands, the measure contains clear definitions of the crimes aimed at, and even as to them fixes guilt only where intent to aid the enemy can be shown.

The censorship section empowering the President by proclamation to forbid publications relating to national defense in such cases as he may designate, and naming severe penalties for violations thereof, is likewise unobjectionable, especially as it concludes with a distinct proviso in harmony with the Constitution, that no limitation upon public discussion or criticism of governmental policies is intended. The necessity for a strict censorship as to military and naval plans and movements is everywhere recognized, and the authority is properly lodged in the Commander in Chief.

We are confident that in the enforcement of these reasonable regulations the authorities will have no more zealous supporters than the newspapers themselves.

Now, the truth of it is, Mr. Speaker, that the committee had a letter from the Department of Justice about the bill as originally sent down, which is broader and much stricter than the provision we submit to you, and in that letter it was stated that a conference had been held between the Attorney General and a number of leading newspaper organizations and that this provision was satisfactory.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. What is the date of that letter?

Mr. WEBB. It is dated April 7, 1917.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WEBB. Just for a question.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In all fairness to the article just quoted by the gentleman from North Carolina, will he insert——

Mr. WEBB. I will insert nothing from a newspaper that the gentleman has in my speech. You can insert it in your own time. I will be glad to have you ask any question, and I will try to answer it. I believe I am as liberal as any gentleman in this House as to the matter of being interrogated.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. I will.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I understood the gentleman from North Carolina to say, Mr. Speaker, that section 4 related entirely to publishers. Did I understand you correctly in that respect?

Mr. WEBB. Oh, no. It does not. It relates to anybody who publishes or transmits the information.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Or communicates it?

Mr. WEBB. Or communicates it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I understood you to say something that gave me that impression.

Mr. WEBB. No. I meant to say that the newspapers were satisfied with it so far as we know now. We had hearings on the bill for two or three days and invited everybody to present their views. The city is full of newspaper reporters, and the only newspaper reporter that came before us was a gentleman by the name of Reed, who has just returned from Russia, and who made a few interesting remarks about the bill.

Mr. SLAYDEN. May I conclude my question to the gentleman?

Mr. WEBB. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman said something that gave me the impression that this section 4 related entirely to publishers.

Mr. WEBB. I presume my friend got that impression because the newspapers were talking about the abridgment-of-speech section.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The newspapers are talking from their standpoint, but are not so much interested in free speech.

Mr. CHURCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. CHURCH. If the newspapers are interested in this bill, in my judgment that guarantees its swift passage.

Mr. WEBB. I think a great many of them would like to have the throttle off. I think the fraternity generally, a great many of them, are willing and will cooperate and do their best to carry out this section in good faith. But I suspect that many of them would like to have no abridgment whatever.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Let me call the attention of the gentleman to the word "representatives," in line 14, and ask whether that is thought to cover Army officers?

Mr. WEBB. I think so, undoubtedly. If he is not a representative of the Government I do not know what he is. It means any agent or representative, I should say.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. He is an agent; he ought to be a servant; but I doubt if he is a representative.

Mr. MEEKER. I was called out for a moment when the gentleman from Illinois was discussing that line 7. Is it not apparent that if the words "in his judgment" are left in the bill as they are there, that men would be convicted on what would be practically the judgment of the President?

Mr. WEBB. He expresses in his proclamation what is useful to the enemy. Back in the Harrison administration, or somewhere—McKinley's or, possibly, Cleveland's—we made a large portion of a tariff law depend on the opinion or judgment of the President as to putting in operation certain tariff laws or suspending them. We have always lodged the largest authority and discretion in our President.

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield for another question? He need not commit himself if he does not want to. But in case the department could submit the kind of information which they did not care to have sent broadcast, and that could be specified in the bill, does he think that would be a safer proposition than this, which seems so loose?

Mr. WEBB. I do not think there is any possible way by which you can, in detail, describe the information that you want to forbid the publication of. That was tried; but the further we went into it the deeper we got.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. IGOE. For instance, if we should write in here the movement of troops, there might be a movement of troops that would be perfectly permissible to publish; and if we include in here a prohibition against publishing anything regarding movements of troops, it might be in effect all the time.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. WEBB. Yes; I yield to my colleague.

Mr. MEEKER. What sort of a box will you put the newspapers in if they come here to receive instructions?

Mr. IGOE. How do they do it now? They say they are willing to submit to the present regulations that are made every day.

Mr. WEBB. I hope the House will realize that this committee has had just as much difficulty and just as much worry about this bill as you have had; and we have done, as one might say, our level best to get a section that would be fairly satisfactory. We thought that if anybody had the requisite information to know what was proper for publication, it would be the President.

Mr. SCOTT of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. WEBB. Yes; I yield to my friend.

Mr. SCOTT of Iowa. It occurred to me that there is some ambiguity as to whether the prohibition intended refers to the character of the information on a particular subject of national defense. It would be very difficult, it seems to me, to prescribe in advance the character of information, either in the bill or in the proclamation. But attention should be directed to the subject of national defense and incorporated in the proclamation in such a way as to make it susceptible of embodiment in an indictment.

Mr. WEBB. Will not my friend draw such a section and present it to us? We have tried to do it on many occasions.

Mr. SCOTT of Iowa. I will read a couple of lines here, if you please: "Or attempting to publish or communicate any information relative to any particular subject of the national defense, the publicity of which, in his judgment, might be useful to the enemy."

Mr. WEBB. The gentleman can offer that as an amendment when we come to it. We have prescribed what the national defense is, and its meaning is pretty well understood in the minds of the public.

Now, gentlemen, as to section 5, if there are no further questions to be asked as to section 4——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. I do.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee whether section 4 as finally adopted by the committee would not permit the making public of information relative to the national defense being confined to any particular official or board or commission which the President might see fit to designate? In other words, could he not by proclamation say that no information relating to the national defense could be published except that which is permitted by the censorship board?

Mr. WEBB. No; I think not. I do not think so at all.

Mr. WALSH. I understand it is the gentleman's opinion that this language is not susceptible to that interpretation?

Mr. WEBB. I do not think so; no, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. If the gentleman will pardon me, might not that idea, after all, be invalid? It occurs to me from a cursory consideration of this section that the principal difficulty lies in the fact that the President might issue a proclamation under the stimulus of unfounded and unjust criticism that no statements regarding the condition of preparedness of the Army or of the Navy might be published. Now, if the section were so modified as that it would prohibit the giving out of any information except that which has been received from official circles, would not that be a better and safer proposition?

Mr. WEBB. No, sir; it would be broader, and there would be more criticism of that proposition. We have endeavored to avoid Scylla and escape Charybdis. We have done the best we could. We have acted as the servants of the House, and we have done our best to frame a provision that we can all stand by.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN. Is it not a fact that in time of peace as well as in time of war under the law all the departments in a way exercise a censorship over information and even refuse to give to Congress information which the departments think incompatible with the public good?

Mr. WEBB. Yes. I know I have had considerable difficulty in times past to get information down there. I think the law requires them to give it to you, but it is difficult sometimes to get it. However, this section covers only war times.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. This is not, strictly speaking, a censorship proposition, is it?

Mr. WEBB. It is not.

Mr. BORLAND. This is to be criminal statute under which a man must be tried and convicted?

Mr. WEBB. Yes. No court-martial can try a man under this section.

Mr. BORLAND. Would this prevent the censorship of plans, as to what a command was about to do?

Mr. WEBB. I do not think so.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Taking and comparing the proviso at the end of section 4, on page 36, in connection with section 1202, on page 61, is not the condition of national defense such as renders absolutely nugatory the proviso in section 4? Will the gentleman kindly reconcile the apparent contradiction?

Mr. WEBB. No. If the President considers the information useful to the enemy, he has the right to proclaim that it should not be published. I do not care if it is a great responsibility that is put upon him. The very existence of this Government requires that there should be vested the power somewhere to prohibit the broadcasting of information that would be useful to the enemy.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But it does not refer to criticisms.

Mr. WEBB. I call the gentleman's attention to section 4. It gives you the right to criticize all you please.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It renders it absolutely useless.

Mr. WEBB. You must trust somebody. I am willing to trust the President.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It would appear to me to establish a vicious precedent.

Mr. WEBB. Oh, war establishes a good many vicious things. War itself is vicious, you know.

Mr. EAGLE. Yes; and the enemy is vicious.

Mr. WEBB. Yes. The people we are fighting against are sometimes vicious.

Now, gentlemen, that is the most difficult question we have had to deal with and the most difficult one you will have to deal with in this bill. If there is any gentleman in the House who thinks he can improve the bill, we shall be glad to receive suggestions. We have no pride of opinion in the matter. We want you to improve it if you can.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WEBB. I yield to my friend for a question; yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Reading lines 7 and 8—

Which, in his judgment, is of such character that it is or might be useful to the enemy—

Does that mean that it is now or may become or might become useful to the enemy?

Mr. WEBB. I think so; yes.

Now, gentlemen, section 5 prescribes the punishment for anyone who in time of war willfully makes or conveys false reports or statements with the intent to interfere with the operation of our armed forces, or to promote the success of the enemy, or who willfully causes or attempts to cause insubordination, disloyalty, or refusal of duty in the armed forces of the United States.

As originally drawn that section prohibited the attempt to cause disaffection in the armed forces. The committee did not like the word "disaffection." It was too broad and too elastic and too indefinite. Therefore in order to make it more clearly understood we struck the word "disaffection" from the bill and inserted in lieu thereof the words "insubordination, disloyalty, or refusal of duty," and we think the House will agree with us that the amendment was a good one. We felt that to make it a crime to create disaffection in a soldier's breast might ofttimes subject a perfectly innocent person to punishment. A mother might write to a boy and tell him the sad conditions back home. That would create disaffection and discontent in the boy's breast. It would not create or attempt to create disloyalty to his flag, insubordinaion to authority, or refusal to perform duty, and so we have made that section so that it will protect an honest man, and we feel that it will get the dishonest fellow who deliberately undertakes to spread disloyalty, insubordination, or refusal to perform duty in our armed forces.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WEBB. I do.

Mr. KNUTSON. Suppose that conditions arose in a camp similar to those which existed at Chickamauga during the Spanish War and those facts were communicated?

Mr. WEBB. I imagine it would cause some disaffection if conditions like those arose among the forces.

Mr. KNUTSON. Would that lay the writer open to a criminal prosecution?

Mr. WEBB. I have no idea that it would; certainly not. That is, conditions, policies of the Government, and acts of its officers would always be open to criticism.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I understand this is limited to false statements?

Mr. WEBB. Yes; willfully false statements.

Mr. FESS. It does not apply to statements that are absolutely true.

Mr. WEBB. Oh, no. We have guarded that. The statements must be false and willfully made.

Now, gentlemen, I have taken up much more time than I intended to on this particular question, but I feel that it is time well spent, because I know the membership of the House feel toward that section just as the committee felt about it—that it is the most difficult part of the bill—and I really am glad that the Members of the House have been free to ask me questions about it, and I hope I have explained it to their satisfaction.

Now, I call the attention of the House to page 60, section 1100, which will probably cause some objection on the part of Members of Congress. Of course, there may be some objections here and there to the sections intervening which I am skipping over, but, feeling that we understand the temper of the House fairly well, I believe the section we have just finished and this section are the two which will probably cause or have caused the most difficulty.

The first part of section 1100 provides—

SEC. 1100. Every letter, writing, circular, postal card, picture, print, engraving, photograph, newspaper, pamphlet, book, or other publication, matter, or thing of any kind in violation of any of the provisions of this act—

Now, there is no objection, as I understand it, down to that point—or of a treasonable or anarchistic character, is hereby declared to be nonmailable matter and shall not be conveyed in the mails or delivered from any post office or by any letter carrier.

Then the following section, 1101, makes it a crime to violate the provisions of that section which I have just read. The bill as originally presented to the committee, or, rather, the amendment originally presented, made matter nonmailable if it was anarchistic, treasonable, disloyal, or seditious.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. FESS. "Treasonable" is defined, but what is "anarchistic"?

Mr. WEBB. I will get to that in a moment. I want to tell you what was originally in the bill and what we did. We first struck out all of the proposed amendment except the word "treasonable," and we first intended to report it to the House with that adjective alone in it, but I received from the Post Office Department some mail matter that was so horrible—not treasonable, but so anarchistic—that it absolutely compelled the committee with one accord to insert the word "anarchistic" in the bill. I do not know that I ought to read this matter and put it in the RECORD, and yet it has been going through the United States mails and is going through them now, and unless this word "anarchistic" is put in the bill you can not suppress this matter.

Mr. FARR. It seems to me the gentleman ought to read it for the information of the House.

Mr. WEBB. I can read it, but I do not like to put such matter in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to go over the country.

Mr. HEFLIN. Would it not be possible to have it read and then not print it in the RECORD?

Mr. WEBB. This is just simply a sample of the matter that is sent to us from the Post Office Department, and upon that we acted promptly.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to read it and that it be kept out of the RECORD.

Mr. WEBB. I believe I will let the Clerk read it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] asks unanimous consent that the matter which the gentleman from North Carolina has be read, but kept out of the RECORD.

Mr. FARR. A parliamentary inquiry. Can not the question of inserting it in the RECORD be determined upon afterwards?

Mr. WEBB. The House may be willing to have it printed.

Mr. FARR. Let it be determined after it is read.

The SPEAKER. If it is read without there being some agreement about it, under the rule it will go into the RECORD.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask unanimous consent that it be read, but not inserted in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent before it is read to keep it out of the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. HEFLIN. It will be read simply for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection. The Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read the communication.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. GARD. I ask that the time of the gentleman be extended 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from North Carolina be extended 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. That was not published in any newspaper in the United States, was it?

Mr. WEBB. It was published in a newspaper.

Mr. BUTLER. Is there anything in this section 4 that would prohibit such a publication as that from the mails?

Mr. WEBB. Parts of that article are extreme but not necessarily anarchistic, but parts of it are and ought not to be allowed to go through the mails and would be prohibited if this section is adopted.

Mr. LANGLEY. There is a penalty under existing law to prevent it, is there not?

Mr. BUTLER. No.

Mr. WEBB. I will read a letter which I received from the Solicitor of the Post Office Department:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR.
Washington, April 20, 1917.

Hon. EDWIN Y. WEBB,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. WEBB: Referring to my testimony before your committee this morning with reference to certain classes of mail matter termed "anarchistic," complaints about which are constantly being filed with this office, I beg to inclose herewith, for your information, copy from an anarchist paper of a portion of an article headed "Three flags," which appears in the April 13, 1917, issue of the Golos Truda—the Voice of Labor—official organ of the Federation of Unions of Russian Workers of United States and Canada, 586 East One hundred and fortieth Street, New York City.

This matter has just been received at this office from the postmaster at New York and is typical of other matter which is from time to time the subject of complaint to the department.

Very truly, yours,

W. W. LAMAR, Solicitor.

Now, that is what impelled us to insert the word "anarchistic" in the language. It is a little broad in terms, but pretty well defined. Anarchism is not much different from nihilism. The dictionary tells us that anarchism is a political and social theory that all government is wrong, and the question is whether we should permit a man to use the instrumentalities of the United States to preach the doctrine that this Government should be destroyed.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I am in sympathy with what the chairman of the committee wants to reach. Treason is defined by law.

Mr. WEBB. Yes; but this does not punish treason.

Mr. FESS. No; it forbids matter going through the mails; but the trouble is to determine what is anarchistic. Is not there a good deal of latitude there?

Mr. WEBB. Indeed there is. We did not put it in the first draft of the bill, but we were impelled to put something in the bill that would stop the use of the mails to facilitate the dissemination of a doctrine of a purpose to destroy our own Government. [Applause.]

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. LANGLEY. I ask the gentleman whether existing law would prohibit sending such material through the mail? Can a man under existing law send through the mails a statement calling the American flag a dirty rag?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. LANGLEY. I have received two or three communications along that line and have submitted them to post-office inspectors, who are making an investigation.

Mr. WEBB. It is no crime to call the flag a dirty rag and send it through the mail; but we ought to have a law that would keep from the mail efforts to destroy the very Government that gives the use of the mail.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Certainly.

Mr. SISSON. If the word "anarchistic" is construed by the court in its narrow and exact sense—one who does not believe in a government at all—does the gentleman believe that that document read at the Clerk's desk would fall within its provision?

Mr. WEBB. I rather think a part of it would.

Mr. SISSON. A portion of it borders close to it; but, strictly speaking, the anarchist is a man who does not believe in any law at all.

Mr. WEBB. And no government at all.

Mr. SISSON. He does not believe in a government. He may be a splendid man, a moral man; he may be a good man and observe the law; but, on the other hand, there is a class of people who are generally called anarchists, who are bomb throwers but who technically are not within that class of thinkers, who believe that law is the cause of the differences among men and that it is the existence of law that causes wrong. I have no sympathy with that, of course; but the question is, Will this provision reach a document like that?

Mr. WEBB. I rather think it would.

Mr. SISSON. Of course, this would be administered by the Postmaster General, but if you go into the courts it would have to be construed as to what kind of a document you intended to exclude.

Mr. WEBB. The word "anarchy" comes from two Greek words —"an," no, and "arche," government. An anarchist is a person who believes that no government should exist at all. The anarchist is different from a nihilist, because the nihilist believes in terrorism and the destruction of the government, but the anarchist does not believe in any government and sometimes advocates violence.

Mr. SISSON. The nihilist is a man who believes in the destruction of all government, but the anarchist simply means a man who does not believe in a government at all. He would not go to the extent of destroying it but would appeal to the reason of people to do away with the government. I realize the difficulty that there is in drafting a statute that would reach this matter.

Mr. WEBB. The gentleman is right.

Mr. HEFLIN. The gentleman from North Carolina is trying to reach the people who are appealing not to reason but to prejudice and ignorance, seeking the destruction of the government.

Mr. WEBB. Yes; this man was preaching to destroy the Government. He says "down with all government."

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. I will.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. As I understand anarchy, those who believe in that doctrine assert that in a state on the highest plane there would be no necessity for organized government, because in its place would be the brotherhood of man. And, as I understand from my reading, there are many men, and women, too, believers in that theory, peace-loving, law-abiding persons, who do not believe in violence and who denounce terrorism in all its forms.

I am not an anarchist, but I have understood that Ralph Waldo Emerson called himself a philosophic anarchist, and thought that quiet, deliberate, calm, dispassionate argument, with the general diffusion of knowledge throughout the masses, would ultimately bring about the high ideal, the brotherhood of man. Tolstoi also believed in that doctrine; but this bill, if enacted into a law containing the broad word "anarchistic," would have prevented discussion and argument by so profound a philosopher as Tolstoi or Ralph Waldo Emerson or by very many other good people. I am not an anarchist and do not believe in the abolition of organized government, but if there ever was a time in the history of the human race when men ought to possess common sense and the power to discriminate and reason, it is now in the Republic of the United States.

Mr. WEBB. I want to say to my friend that I think the committee and the House have preserved that sort of condition, and that we are going to.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do not think that word "anarchistic," without some qualifying adjective, ought to be enacted into the law. It would be absolutely opposed to all our theory of free discussion.

Mr. WEBB. If the gentleman will help us qualify it we will qualify it for him. We are anxious to protect the innocent man, but we are also anxious to punish the man who advocates the destruction of our Government while he shares its benefits.

Mr. MADDEN. Does this give the Post Office Department authority to open all letters that may be sent through it?

Mr. WEBB. Oh, no; it does not. The Post Office Department has no authority to open any letter now, although they may be dead certain that there is treasonable matter contained in a letter. The only way the postmaster could open it would be to have a search warrant issued.

Mr. MADDEN. I wanted to find out whether this gave him any such power.

Mr. WEBB. Oh, no.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Would not the retention of the word "treasonable," with other language like "by violent methods," or something of that kind, be advisable?

Mr. WEBB. The word "anarchistic" is the word the Senate used, and although the Senate inserted it we left it out until we found out what was going on in this country through the mails.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to ask the gentleman if in his judgment it would be possible under this bill for the Government of the United States to persecute in any way one of the good anarchists described by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER]? Would it be possible under this bill?

Mr. WEBB. I do not think it would ever hurt my friend from Wisconsin.

Mr. McKENZIE. But I refer to the ones whom he describes.

Mr. WEBB. No; I think not. I think the kindly, sweet-tempered anarchist he speaks of would never use the mail for the purpose of teaching the destruction of the Government.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. In reply to the gentleman from Wisconsin, is it not a fact that the immigration law now provides for the exclusion of certain aliens who believe in anarchistic doctrines?

Mr. WEBB. Of course it does, and it ought to.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Referring to the word "treasonable," it means, as I recall, something of a treasonable nature or tending to incite treason. Would the gentleman think that communications tending to excite discontent and dissatisfaction with the Government or its methods of operating would come within that scope?

Mr. WEBB. Oh, no; not at all. That would not be treasonable. To be treasonable it must give aid and comfort to the enemy.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I would like to have the gentleman express an idea of what this will include.

Mr. WEBB. Well, expressing a desire to see the enemy win. That is not treason, but that is of a treasonable character.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. If we strike out this word "anarchistic," then there is no punishment really, as I understand it, which could be meted out to a distributor of such an article as that which was read from the desk?

Mr. WEBB. Not at all.

Mr. BUTLER. And if we leave it in he can be punished?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I am in favor of keeping it in.

Mr. WEBB. That is, if he insists on using the mail to do it, or if it is a newspaper, it can be excluded from the mail.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. OSBORNE. Is not the objection to the matter read rather that it is treasonable than that it is anarchistic? Is not that the essence of the objection to it?

Mr. WEBB. It is both.

Mr. OSBORNE. Is it not possible that there might be things stated in that that are anarchistic, but that in themselves are not treasonable?

Mr. WEBB. That is true.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. CROSSER. I understand the gentleman to say that he does not intend that this word "anarchistic" shall apply to the kind of philosophers to which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] referred.

Mr. WEBB. I do not think it would.

Mr. CROSSER. Would it not, after all? Must we not be governed by the language of the act rather than by what the intention of the committee may have been?

Mr. WEBB. The truth of the matter is that I never heard of the character of anarchist that he described.

Mr. CROSSER. I know one, and he is one of the most highly educated men in the city of Cleveland, and one of the most inoffensive.

Mr. WEBB. Does he want to destroy the city government of Cleveland?

Mr. CROSSER. No; but he boldly pronounces himself a philosophic anarchist.

Mr. WEBB. Oh, if it is philosophy, we do not prohibit the publication of philosophy.

Mr. CANNON. Ought he not to have a conservator appointed and be committed? [Laughter.]

Mr. CROSSER. I have not finished my question. I am just advised by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD] that our minister to Belgium, who used to be the mayor of the city of Toledo, is a philosophic anarchist.

Mr. WEBB. I do not know that brand of them. [Laughter.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. LANGLEY. By a philosophic anarchist, does the gentleman mean a harmless one?

Mr. WEBB. No.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Just for a question, as I am about through.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman understands, of course, that socialists believe that practically everything ought to be done by the Government, whereas anarchists believe exactly the opposite—that nothing ought to be done by government?

Mr. WEBB. That there ought not to be any government at all.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Exactly. Now, there is a difference between the man who believes in what the gentleman just called the destruction of all government, which imputes to him a desire to destroy it by violence, and men like Tolstoi, who was tolerated even in Russia, where they hang those who would change government through terrorism.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. They did not dare to execute Tolstoi.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin had the floor for the purpose of interrogating the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Is the gentleman from Michigan out of order?

The SPEAKER. Of course he is.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I thought I asked the gentleman to yield; if I did not, I apologize most profoundly, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Let us conduct this debate in decency and order.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman from North Carolina allow me to make just one more suggestion?

Mr. WEBB. If my friend will make it very brief.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I am as bitterly opposed as the gentleman can possibly be to the terrorism sometimes practiced in the United States—bomb throwing or anything of that sort—and would as severely punish it. But I believe with Jefferson and the gentleman from North Carolina, as a Democrat ought to believe it, that in this Republic mere "error of opinion is never dangerous when reason is free to combat it."

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have such time as he may desire to complete his remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois be allowed to conclude his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the gentleman's attention to the immigration act, which endeavors to set forth the meaning of "anarchist," without desiring to take up the time of the House. A great deal of attention has been given to the word, with the result that we provide in a section of the act that the following classes shall be excluded:

Anarchists or persons who believe in or advocate the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States or of all forms of law, or who disbelieve in or oppose all organized government, or who advocate the assassination of public officials, or who advocate or teach the unlawful destruction of property.

Now, I think the courts have all passed on this definition or description, and I do not believe there is any question as to the meaning of the word "anarchist."

Mr. WEBB. I think the courts will construe the word "anarchistic" to mean just about what the gentleman has described there—that is, a man opposed to all forms of government or those who advocate the overthrow by violence of all forms of government.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. We get the word "nihilist" from Russia, where they believe in carrying out reforms by violence. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. The differentiation that is placed in the immigration law shows clearly that there are people who are anarchists "who are not advocating." It says "anarchists who," and if we can get it in here that will be perfectly safe, that excludes others. I appreciate fully what the gentleman wants to get in, and we may reach it some way; but the truth about the matter is that philosophic anarchy is a state of society where government is unnecessary, and it would seem to me that we ought to differentiate the term so as to mean what we generally think when we speak of "anarchy." Now, this differentiation does not, and I think we ought to have a qualifying adjective.

Mr. WEBB. I have no doubt about the philosophic anarchists—I never knew much about such a one—would never be disturbed under this section.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The discussion, Mr. Speaker, seems to be on this point, that the anarchist is one who does not believe in any government and one who tries to bring about such a state. The former is harmless and the latter is harmful. You exclude the former by using the term "anarchistic character," although there is no reason for it. I simply wish to suggest the consideration of this language as a substitute for "anarchistic character," "or other character tending to incite disaffection with the orderly processes of government." To incite disaffection is an act or anarchy.

Mr. WEBB. The gentleman has a very broad term, "tending," and then "to incite" and "disaffection." You have a very board expression, and I do not know if you could ever determine it.

Now, gentlemen, if there is nobody else who wants to ask a question, I wish to express——

Mr. SCHALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. I yield.

Mr. SCHALL. I wanted to put this information in this morning: A lady in this city of German descent received a letter from her sister in Germany, who is the mother of three sons, all of whom she has lost in the present war. After telling of her sorrows, she wound up her letter by saying that her only wish was that she had a bullet for herself and one for the Kaiser. A postscript to that letter, signed by the censor, says, "Your sister's wish has been granted at sunrise this morning."

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. I will.

Mr. GARDNER. In the naval bill where we gave the President authority to commandeer shipyards we provide that all authority granted the President in this paragraph to be exercised in time of national emergency shall cease on March 1, 1918. Now, has the gentleman considered putting a termination on the length of time when such a phrase shall be operative?

Mr. WEBB. It will be operative until the national emergency is passed.

Mr. GARDNER. But it reads that it will be operative from this time on as part of the law of the land.

Mr. WEBB. It is never operative unless the President by proclamation makes it so.

Mr. GARDNER. It occurred to me that it is such an exceedingly drastic provision that Lord Northcliff would have been put in jail if this had been a part of the law of Great Britain.

Mr. WEBB. He suffered more of a censorship than this would give.

Mr. GARDNER. This is not a censorship. It provides for a fine of not more than $10,000 for revealing anything that would be of use to the enemy.

Mr. WEBB. They had a tighter censorship over there, but Lord Northcliff seems to have broken it down.

Mr. GARDNER. He certainly performs a very useful service for the British people, and it seems to me that while it may be that it will prove successful and prove a desirable section—and I am not at all prepared to say it will not—I for one should feel a great deal safer if the authority granted the President in this paragraph should terminate at the end of this present war.

Mr. WEBB. Do you not think it will?

Mr. GARDNER. It is all sufficient to allow an espionage law to be passed for each war.

Mr. WEBB. During each emergency in a war to which the United States is a party.

Mr. GARDNER. My opinion is that it ought to apply only to this war.

Mr. WEBB. If it does not work well, we will be apt to repeal it before the next war comes.

Mr. GARDNER. I have in mind a letter in a paper the other day signed by Grenville L. Fortesque. It seems to me he reveals certain facts in regard to our air service, but it seems to me it was most necessary in order to awaken the people to the true facts as to that service, and yet Capt. Fortesque, who is an expert military writer, would certainly come under the provision of section 4. I am not prepared to say that he ought not to.

Mr. WEBB. That depends entirely on whether the President forbids that such information be published on the ground that it would be of benefit to the enemy.

Mr. GARDNER. Has the gentleman considered making that a part of the permanent law as against making it as the commandeering sections are?

Mr. WEBB. I have no objection to making it apply to this war alone. If it works badly during this war, we will repeal it. If it works well, we will probably want it to stay on the statute books.

Mr. GARDNER. I simply wanted the opinion of the gentleman on it. I am not disposed to set up my judgment against his.

Mr. WEBB. The object of this legislation now is that it shall apply during the present war.

Mr. GARDNER. I understand. I wish to say that I have an amendment that I would like to submit to the gentleman later.

Mr. HOWARD. In the next to the last word in line 17, on page 38, where it says "any harbor or waters of the United States," did the gentleman intend that the word "navigable" should go in before the word "waters"?

Mr. WEBB. Well, no.

Mr. HOWARD. It looked to me as if the intention of the section was to protect the harbors and ships in the harbors and navigable waters of the harbors and keep them from being sunk, or the navigable streams from being obstructed.

Mr. WEBB. That is what we meant.

Mr. HOWARD. And I think the gentleman in drawing the draft of the bill overlooked putting the word "navigable" in the act.

Mr. WEBB. I think wherever the water is navigable it would probably apply.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes, sir.

Mr. SABATH. I notice that section 600 provides against an attempt to export or ship from the United States any arms or munitions of war in violation of the law and prohibits any vessel from carrying any such munitions or arms. There is no provision yet, as I can see, about the seizure of any vessels themselves.

Mr. WEBB. Yes; there is a provision for the seizure of vessels, vehicles, and automobiles, and so forth.

Mr. SABATH. And they carry such arms and munitions? I have one particular case in mind where a ship or vessel is being built that is liable to go to the enemy. I have inquired of the department, and they say they have no jurisdiction now to seize any vessel that may go out of the country if it does not go directly or is not assigned to the enemy. They may suspect strongly that eventually it may reach the enemy's port, but in the absence of any evidence or authority they can do nothing.

Mr. WEBB. They can not seize it and retain it now. If this bill passes, they can.

Mr. SABATH. Can the gentleman point out any proviso in this bill that would give the Department of the Navy or the United States jurisdiction to seize the vessel?

Mr. WEBB. Section 602 refers to seizing of the property.

Mr. SABATH. I think there is no such provision. I have gone over two or three sections.

Mr. WEBB. If he will turn to section 500, on page 41, he will see it.

Mr. GARD. Section 500, on page 41, covers the matter of seizure.

Mr. SABATH. If the gentleman is satisfied that will cover it we need not look further for it.

Mr. WEBB. I think it covers every idea that the Department of Justice or the Department of State had in mind.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman please explain one feature on page 34, the first section of the bill, on line 15, "or with like intent or knowledge, or reason or believe, directly or indirectly"?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not exactly understand that. I can not catch it. It is ambiguous to me. I can not comprehend it.

Mr. WEBB. That is where he gets the information for the purpose of aiding the enemies of the United States. He must have the information, or he must have reasonable ground to believe that if he does get it it will be used to the injury of the United States.

Mr. HOWARD. Yes; but you qualify "reason to believe" by saying "directly or indirectly."

Mr. WEBB. You will notice, by reading line 8, the necessity of repeating it down there.

Mr. HOWARD. The use of those three words, "directly or indirectly," in view of the words used on lines 8 and 9, makes the act appear to me ambiguous.

Mr. WEBB. We want to punish him if he undertakes to get it to foreign countries, directly or indirectly, if he undertakes to injure the United States.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not think those three words up there have any reference to the first two lines.

Mr. WEBB. Yes; the intent to injure is required.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. WEBB. Yes; I do for a question.

Mr. TOWNER. I would like to ask the gentleman about a sentence in section 4 on page 36. The gentleman will observe the language, "Any national emergency resulting from a war to which the United States is a party." Of course, I think that would mean in reality the existence of war. The chairman has already stated that that was his understanding. Certainly an emergency resulting from a condition of war is a thing you can hardly contemplate, because an emergency is a temporary passing thing, and it is not intended that this bill should operate only in such phase, but it should certainly operate during the existence of this war.

Let me suggest to the gentleman's consideration and to the consideration of the committee that they should use the language "during the existence of the war between the United States and Germany." Then it will not be necessary to issue a proclamation of such emergency. Would it not be considered entirely unnecessary that during this war every time the President desired to issue a proclamation he should say that an emergency exists, when the very emergency provided for is the war itself? It would make unnecessary the first proclamation entirely.

Mr. WEBB. It may not be necessary to have this proclamation during the entire existence of the war, only in an emergency. You might have a cessation of hostilities and let down the bars. You might have a truce. That was the idea in leaving it to the President to make a proclamation that an emergency exists.

Mr. TOWNER. I grant you that, but the condition of war would not exist between the United States and Germany then.

Mr. WEBB. Yes; it would. A war will exist between the United States and Germany until there is a treaty of peace, strictly and technically speaking.

Mr. TOWNER. That must be done by operation of law, and therefore no condition of law will exist.

Mr. WEBB. We want to give the President the power to say that an emergency exists or does not exist.

Mr. TOWNER. I do not offer that as an amendment. I just present that for the consideration of the committee.

Mr. COMSTOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. COMSTOCK. Section 4 has been referred to—I do not know whether there is any difference as to the construction, but if the gentleman from North Carolina cares to express himself on that subject I would be glad. This is in the form of an interrogatory: That a national emergency may exist; that is, the facts may exist, but so far as making this section effectual, national emergencies do not exist until the President recognizes them and issues a proclamation?

Mr. WEBB. That is correct.

Mr. COMSTOCK. Then the existence of an emergency depends entirely upon the President, and whether any action shall be taken on that condition which he recognizes depends upon his judgment. Then the true conditions and the true facts, apart from the proviso, are, first, that the President recognizes by proclamation an emergency, and, second, recognizes the right given him by his judgment to issue the proclamation prohibiting certain acts. I did not suppose there was any difference.

Mr. WEBB. I think my friend has the right interpretation. It might be that he would not issue a proclamation unless he thought the emergency of war required it.

Now, gentlemen, I am greatly obliged to you for your patience and the time given me. We present you a bill which we think each Member can afford to support—one which protects the innocent and catches the guilty and tends to preserve and protect our Government. [Applause.]

Title I, on the subject of espionage, attempts to safeguard and protect our national defense secrets.

Section 1 would punish any person who, with intent or knowledge, or reason to believe that the information to be obtained is to be used to the injury of the United States, copies, takes, makes, or obtains, or attempts to copy, take, make, or obtain, any sketch, photograph, photographic negative, blue print, plan, model, instrument, and so forth, connected with the national defense or any copy thereof.

Section 2 prescribes a punishment for anyone who, with like intent, knowledge, or reason to believe, communicates, delivers, transmits, or attempts to communicate, deliver, or transmit to any foreign Government, or faction, or agency thereof, or to any party or military force within such foreign Government any information, document, writing, code book, signal book, sketch, photograph, photographic negative, blue print, etc., relating to the national defense. In time of peace the punishment prescribed is a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 20 years, or both. In time of war the punishment is imprisonment for not more than 30 years, or by death.

Section 3 prescribes a punishment for any person having possession of, access to, control over, or being instructed with, any of the things enumerated in section 2, belonging to, intended for, or under the control of the United States, relating to the national defense who willfully and without proper authority communicates or transmits, or attempts to communicate or transmit the same to any person, or willfully retains the same and fails to deliver it on demand to the person lawfully entitled to receive it, or through gross negligence permits the same to be removed from its proper place of custody, or delivered to anyone not lawfully entitled to receive it, or to be lost, stolen, abstracted, or destroyed.

Section 4 authorizes the President, by proclamation, to declare the existence of a national emergency, arising either out of a war in which the United States is engaged or out of the threat of such a war, and by proclamation to prohibit the publishing or communicating of, or the attempt to publish or communicate, any information relating to the national defense which, in his judgment, is of such character that it is or might be useful to the enemy. By express proviso, it is declared that nothing in this section shall be construed to limit or restrict any discussion, comment, or criticism of the acts or policies of the Government or the publication of the same.

Section 5 prescribes a punishment for anyone who, in time of war, willfully makes or conveys reports or statements with the intent to interfere with the operation of our armed forces, or to promote the success of the enemy, or who willfully causes or attempts to cause insubordination, disloyalty, or refusal of duty in the armed forces of the United States.

Section 6 provides for the punishment of a conspiracy on the part of two or more persons to commit the offense designated in sections 2, 4, or 5.

Section 7 provides a punishment for any person who harbors or conceals a person whom he knows, or has reasonable grounds to believe or suspect, has committed or is about to commit any of the offenses enumerated in this title.

Section 8 preserves the jurisdiction of the general courts-martial, military commissions, and naval courts-martial under existing law.

Section 9 extends the jurisdiction of offenses under this title to the high seas or elsewhere within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States.

Section 10 simply repeals the act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to prevent the disclosure of national-defense secrets."

Title II deals with foreign and domestic vessels in the ports of the United States.

Section 200 provides that when the President declares a national emergency to exist the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, may make rules and regulations governing the anchorage and movement of any vessel, foreign or domestic, in the territorial waters of the United States; that he may inspect the vessel at any time; place guards thereon, and if necessary to secure such vessel from damage or injury or to prevent damage or injury to any harbor or waters of the United States or to secure the observance of the rights and obligations of the United States, may take full possession and control of the vessel and remove from the vessel its officers and crew and all other persons not specially authorized to remain aboard. Within the territorial waters of the Canal Zone the Governor of the Panama Canal is authorized to act instead of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Section 201 provides for the forfeiture of the vessel and the punishment of those in charge of the vessel for failure to comply with the regulations authorized to be made in the preceding section, or for obstructing or interfering with the exercise of any power conferred by this title.

Section 202 prohibits the owner, master, or person in charge of any private vessel in the territorial waters of the United States from willfully causing or permitting the destruction or injury of the vessel or from knowingly permitting it to be used as a place of resort for those conspiring or preparing to commit any offense against the United States or in violation of the treaties of the United States or the obligations of the United States under the law of nations, and so forth. As a penalty it provides for the forfeiture of the vessel and the punishment of those guilty of the acts condemned.

Section 203 authorizes the President to employ such part of the land or naval forces of the United States as he may deem necessary to execute the provisions of this title.

Title III prescribes a punishment for any person who sets fire to a vessel within the jurisdiction of the United States, or a vessel of American registry on the high seas, or to its cargo, or who tampers with its motive power or instrumentalities of navigation, or places bombs or explosives upon it, or does any other act to or upon it with the intent to injure or endanger its safety or the safety of its cargo or persons on board.

Title IV makes it a criminal offense while the United States is at war to unlawfully injure or destroy by fire or explosives, or to attempt to so injure or destroy any article or the place wherein it is produced or stored with the intent to prevent, interfere with, or obstruct, the exportation of such article from the United States.

Title V, under the subject of enforcement of neutrality, is designed to enable this Government to better maintain its position as a neutral nation in time of war to which the United States is not a party.

Under section 500 the President or person authorized by him is given power to withhold clearance from or forbid the departure of any vessel during a war when the United States is a neutral nation, whenever there is reasonable cause to believe that the vessel is about to carry fuel, arms, ammunition, etc., to any warship, tender, or supply ship of a foreign belligerent nation in violation of the laws or treaties of the United States or of the obligations of the United States under the law of nations.

Section 501 gives the President power, under the same conditions, to detain any vessel (other than one which has entered our ports as a public vessel) which is armed or is manifestly built for warlike purposes, or has been converted into a vessel suitable for warlike purposes, until the owner or person in charge furnishes satisfactory proof that the vessel will not be employed to cruise against or attempt to commit hostilities upon the subjects or property of a foreign country with which the United States is at peace, and that the vessel will not be sold or delivered to any belligerent nation or any agent or citizen thereof.

Section 502 prescribes a penalty for doing or attempting to do the things prohibited in the two preceding sections.

Section 503 makes it unlawful for the master, owner, or person having charge of a vessel built, equipped, or armed, or converted into a vessel of war to send the vessel out of the jurisdiction of the United States during the existence of a war in which the United States is a neutral nation for the purpose of delivering it to a belligerent nation or an agent or citizen thereof, or with reasonable cause to believe that it will be employed in the service of such belligerent nation after it leaves the jurisdiction of the United States.

In addition to the facts now required by law to be set out in the masters' and shippers' manifests before clearance will be issued, section 504 requires, during such time, that the person in charge of the vessel and also the consignor of the cargo shall each file a statement, duly verified, that the cargo or any part thereof is or is not to be delivered to other vessels in port or to be transshipped on the high seas; and if it is to be so delivered or transshipped, stating the kind of article, the name of the person, corporation, etc., to whom delivery or transshipment is to be made, and the value and total quantity thereof.

Section 505 authorizes the collector of customs of the district, subject to review by the Secretary of the Treasury, to refuse clearance to a vessel when it appears not entitled thereto, or when there is reasonable cause to believe that the additional statement required in the preceding section is false, and to forbid by formal notice the departure of any vessel not requiring clearance papers; and thereupon it is made unlawful for such vessel to depart from the port or from the jurisdiction of the United States.

Section 506 prescribes a penalty not exceeding a fine of $10,000 or imprisonment of not more than five years, or both, and also a forfeiture of the vessel, etc., for the violation of any of the provisions of this title not otherwise provided for.

By the provisions of section 507, where two or more parties conspire to violate the provisions of sections 501, 502, and 503, and one or more of the parties does any act to effect the object of the conspiracy, each of the parties to the conspiracy becomes subject to the penalties prescribed in these sections.

Under the provisions of section 508, if a person belonging to the armed land or naval forces of a belligerent nation or faction of such nation is interned in the United States in accordance with the law of nations, and leaves the limits of internment without permission or willfully overstays a leave of absence granted, authority is given to rearrest him and return him to the place of internment and there confine him for such period as the official of the United States in charge directs. A penalty of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both, is prescribed for any person subject to and within the jurisdiction of the United States who aids or entices any such interned person to escape or attempt to escape from the jurisdiction of the United States.

Section 509 reenacts section 13 of the Penal Code, with amendments thereto, so as to prohibit the furnishing of money for or taking part in any military or naval expedition from the United States against any foreign country, or the knowingly exporting or shipping or attempting to export or ship arms or munitions of war from the United States in connection with such expedition or enterprise.

Section 510 gives the President power to use such part of the land or naval forces of the United States as he may deem necessary to carry out the purposes of this title.

Section 511 so amends section 15 of the Penal Code as to include in the provisions of the section the possessions of the United States as well as the United States, and to grant to the President the additional power to detail or prevent any foreign vessel from departing from the United States or any of its possessions in all cases in which by the law of nations or the treaties of the United States it is not entitled to depart.

Section 512 simply repeals the joint resolution enacted March 4, 1915, entitled "Joint resolution to empower the President to better enforce and maintain the neutrality of the United States."

Title VI deals with the seizure of arms. Section 600 gives authority to the officials designated to seize and detain arms or munitions of war, and the vessel or vehicle containing them, whenever an attempt is made to export or ship or take such arms or munitions of war out of the United States in violation of law, or whenever there is known or probable cause to believe that they are to be so exported, shipped, or taken. If upon due inquiry it is found that the property seized was about to be so unlawfully exported, shipped, or taken, then it shall be forfeited to the United States.

Sections 601 to 605, inclusive, prescribe the procedure in the courts to determine the legality of the seizure and the disposition of the property.

Section 606 authorizes the President to employ such part of the land and naval forces of the United States as he may deem necessary to carry out the purposes of this title.

Title VII deals with the disturbance of our foreign relations.

Section 700 makes it a crime for anyone to willfully and knowingly make any untrue statement under oath which he knows or has reason to believe will or may be used to influence the measures or conduct of the United States or of any foreign Government or of any officer or agent of the United States or of any foreign Government in relation to any dispute or controversy between such foreign Government and the United States.

Section 701 prescribes a penalty for anyone within the jurisdiction of the United States who falsely assumes or pretends to be a diplomatic or consular or other official of a foreign Government duly accredited as such to the Government of the United States, with the intent to defraud such foreign Government or any person, and takes upon himself to act as such, or who in such pretended character demands, obtains, or attempts to obtain from such foreign Government or from any person any money, paper, document, or other valuable thing.

Section 702 prescribes a penalty for any person other than a diplomatic or consular officer or attaché who acts in the United States as an agent of a foreign Government without first notifying the Secretary of State.

Section 703 defines the meaning of the words "foreign Government" as applied to certain existing laws.

Section 704 prescribes a punishment for those who would conspire in this country to injure or destroy specific property situate within a foreign country and belonging to a foreign Government, or a political subdivision thereof, with which the United States is at peace when one or more of the conspirators commits an act in this country to further such conspiracy, if such injury or destruction would constitute an offense punishable by imprisonment in the country where the property is situate. This section requires that the indictment must describe the specific property to be injured or destroyed.

Title VIII deals with passports. Section 800 prescribes the fee that shall be charged for issuing passports, and further provides that the applicant for a passport must first submit an application therefor in writing, subscribed and duly verified, containing a true recital of every matter of fact which may be required by law or by any rule authorized by law to be stated as a prerequisite to the issuance of the passport.

Section 801 prescribes a punishment for any person who willfully and knowingly makes a false statement in the application for a passport with the intent to induce or secure the issuance of the passport either for himself or for the use of another, contrary to the laws or rules regulating its issuance, or who willfully and knowingly uses or attempts to use or furnishes to another for use any passport secured by means of such false statement.

Section 802 prescribes a punishment for those who willfully and knowingly use or attempt to use a passport issued for the use of another, or uses or attempts to use a passport in violation of the conditions or restrictions therein contained, or of the rules prescribed and printed on the passport in pursuance to the laws regulating its issuance, or furnishes such passport to another for use by another than the person for whom it was issued.

Section 803 prescribes the punishment to be administered to anyone upon conviction of having made, forged, counterfeited, mutilated, or altered any passport, with intent to use it or that it may be used by another; or to anyone who willfully and knowingly uses or attempts to use, or furnishes to another for use, any such passport, or any passport validly issued, but which has become void thereafter by reason of some condition.

Title IX prohibits the counterfeiting of the Government seal.

Section 900 would punish anyone who fraudulently affixes the seal of any executive department or bureau, and so forth, upon any certificate, document, and so forth, and would also punish the person who, with knowledge of its fraudulent character and with wrongful and fraudulent intent, uses such certificate, document, and so forth, or transfers it to another for use.

Section 901 punishes in like manner the making or using of a false seal of any executive department, and so forth, or a person who with wrongful intent has possession of such falsely made seal.

Section 902 also makes it a crime and prescribes a punishment for anyone who falsely makes, forges, or counterfeits any naval, military, or official pass or permit.

Title X deals with the subject of search warrants.

Section 1000 sets out the necessary procedure to have a search warrant issued.

Section 1001 prescribes the procedure to be followed by the judge upon a proper application for a search warrant having been made, and directs how it shall be served when issued.

Section 1002 lays down the procedure to be followed after the seizure has been made.

Section 1003 directs that the search warrant shall not issue to any other than an officer of the United States duly authorized to enforce, or assist in the enforcement of, any law thereof or to a person duly authorized therefor by the President.

Section 1004 prescribes the punishment to be administered to anyone who knowingly and willfully obstructs or resists or assaults any officer while serving or attempting to serve a search warrant.

Title XI deals with the use of the mails.

Mails of such character as would be in violation of any of the provisions of this act, or which are of a treasonable or anarchistic character, are declared to be nonmailable matter and are barred from the mails by section 1100.

Section 1101 makes it a crime and prescribes a punishment for any person who uses or attempts to use the mails for transmitting matter declared by this title to be nonmailable. Jurisdiction to try the offender is vested either in the courts where the nonmailable matter was mailed or in any district to which it was carried for delivery.

Title XII defines various terms in the bill.

Mr. WALSH rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Massachusetts rise?

Mr. WALSH. To be recognized in my own right.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to this bill?

Mr. WALSH. I am a member of the committee, and I am in favor of the bill except one section.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, as the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB], has well said, the committee has given serious consideration to the problems presented in this measure.

The question may arise as to why such drastic provisions should be adopted to be part of the law of the land during peace times. It is perfectly apparent that a spy or a hireling of a foreign government who seeks to get information with reference to our national defense finds his best opportunity in large measure at a time when possibly the officials of this Nation or the citizens of the Republic have no suspicion that he is engaged in any such work. This measure is so framed as to prohibit the securing of such information. And when I say "this measure" I mean Title I, the first 10 sections of this bill. It is so framed as to prohibit the getting of information relating to the national defense in peace times with any intent to make use of that information in a manner which will be to the injury of the United States. Clearly this ought to be prohibited.

That section is followed by another one, which makes it an offense to communicate information relating to the national defense procured with that intent. These two sections are equally applicable in peace and war times, with the exception that in the second section if it is violated during war the penalty is more severe.

Now, my colleagues on the committee are aware of my attitude with relation to section 4 of this bill, and I am unalterably opposed to the provisions of section 4 of this measure, because, I submit, it is placing a wide authority in the hands of the President. It will place in his hands such power that, no matter how well-intentioned he may be in the enforcement of this regulation or the conditions of the proclamation, in its enforcement innocent publishers—and there are such—may suffer unjustly, and it will work great hardship.

The newspapers of the country will probably continue to be published whether this section is retained in the bill or not. But we have to-day a censorship of the press which has been in vogue for several weeks, and it has been followed by the publishers of the newspapers simply at the request of the departments. I submit that the President, as Commander in Chief of the armed forces of the Nation, is now vested with authority to exercise the right of censorship over the newspapers of this Nation with relation to information useful to the enemy, so that we need not write into the law such a stringent provision as this. The Secretary of the Navy, as is known, has asked the newspapers of the country not to publish news with reference to the arrival or departure of vessels in and from the ports of the United States, and I have watched with some care the various newspapers which come to my office and others which from time to time I see, and I have yet to see any news published with reference to the arrival or departure or ships to or from our shores. So I say that this provision in section 4 can be covered in a similar manner.

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. IGOE. Suppose some newspaper, desiring to be very enterprising, publishes some information which this voluntary censorship prohibits. What punishment is there for it?

Mr. WALSH. What information does the gentleman mean?

Mr. IGOE. Information that this voluntary censorship would prohibit the publication of, or which the papers are requested not to publish.

Mr. WALSH. What is the punishment now?

Mr. IGOE. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I do not know that there is any.

Mr. IGOE. Does not the gentleman think some of the newspapers might violate that voluntary censorship in time of stress?

Mr. WALSH. But they have not.

Mr. IGOE. Suppose they should. This law is intended to exist for some time.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; but this section as it is incorporated in the bill gives the President legislative power to say what information is or might be useful to the enemy, and nobody knows and nobody can find out what it might be under the proclamation, and he can refer this to a censorship bureau, which I understand has already been created, and which will pass upon this news.

Mr. IGOE. Under this censorship, which you say is sufficient, who passes on it now?

Mr. WALSH. The heads of the departments, with reference to the movement, arrival, and departure of vessels.

Mr. IGOE. If they are willing to abide by that, what harm is there in punishing those who violate these restrictions?

Mr. WALSH. If they are willing to abide by that, why write it into the law?

Mr. IGOE. Because they might violate it.

Mr. WALSH. Have they violated it? Does the gentleman know of an instance where the present censorship has been violated?

Mr. IGOE. I saw the statement in the newspapers that after the Secretary of the Navy had requested the newspapers not to publish information about ships leaving these shores the Secretary of the Navy had rebuked two newspapers of this country for disregarding his request.

Mr. WALSH. Have they repeated the offense?

Mr. IGOE. I do not know. I do not read the papers enough to know. The gentleman probably does.

Mr. WALSH. Is not the gentleman satisfied that a rebuke from a high Government official would be ample punishment?

Mr. IGOE. No. I will tell you what I think about it. I think that as long as we are going to have rules to prohibit the publication of information useful to the enemy any newspaper that violates it in the face of knowing the possible effect of that publication ought to receive some punishment under the law.

Mr. WALSH. What kind of information has the gentleman in mind?

Mr. IGOE. Well, I do not know.

Mr. WALSH. No; and that is just the trouble. Nobody knows.

Mr. IGOE. I am willing to leave it to the department.

Mr. WALSH. We have not had a gentleman before our committee who could tell us the kind of information that this section was framed to cover.

Mr. IGOE. No; but the newspapers are very willing to accept these regulations that are being made now; and under this section I take it that the President will make rules that will be no more stringent than the ones that are made now. I suppose they may be changed from day to day.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman refer to the regulations or censorship that are in effect now?

Mr. IGOE. Those that the gentleman is talking about.

Mr. WALSH. That who is talking about?

Mr. IGOE. By the Secretary of the Navy and by the Secretary of War, which are being so well adhered to by the newspapers.

Mr. WALSH. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. IGOE. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman knows well that section 4 as reported by his committee is not the language to which assent was given by the newspaper men at their conference.

Mr. IGOE. The gentleman knows that the Attorney General said the newspapers were satisfied with the section, which we afterwards found they were not satisfied with. At least they changed their minds, perhaps, as a good many people do. As far as I am concerned, I do not suppose you can draw a section that will be satisfactory to all the newspapers. They would rather have no restrictions at all.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, this section applies to others besides the newspapers. The newspapers as a whole are as patriotic as the average citizen. There may be exceptions, but we ought to be reasonable.

Mr. IGOE. The gentleman knows I have been rather inclined to be very lenient with these restrictions. I do not want to see people deprived of the right to criticize and comment upon the actions of the Government, and I do not want the newspapers to be deprived of that right, because we must have discussions of these matters and criticism of them, but I do not want the right given to the newspapers or to the citizens to publish or communicate information useful to the enemy, and I am willing to leave it to somebody to say what information that is.

Mr. WALSH. Yes. If I recollect the gentleman's attitude aright, he was willing to strike out the "information" in section 2, which might be communicated, but he prefers that the word "information" be retained in section 4 with relation to the communicating or publishing. The publishing will be done by the newspapers, but all the communications will not be carried by the newspapers. A man may send a telegram, perfectly innocently, and it may be in violation of this proclamation, or it might be useful to the enemy although it may never reach the enemy; and as was pointed out by the inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois, you can not specify in the proclamation just what information is going to be useful to the enemy.

Mr. IGOE. I will say to the gentleman that we are not going to deprive the people of this country of a law because we cannot satisfy everybody. The safety of the country comes first and we must do the best we can.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman think that with the elimination of section 4 we are powerless to punish the publication of information that might be useful to the enemy?

Mr. IGOE. Not powerless, no; but I think under section 4 we can prohibit the publication of some things that there might be some question about under the other section.

Mr. WALSH. Not unless in the judgment of the President he proclaims to the world that it might be useful to the enemy. You can not choke all avenues of news. The papers will get news and they will publish it. An item that we have in Congress appropriated $3,000,000,000 might or might not be useful to the enemy, and this item of news could be deleted by a censorship board.

Mr. IGOE. He does not have to specify any particular information.

Mr. WALSH. Is the gentleman speaking by authority?

Mr. IGOE. I do not speak for the President any more than the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. The effect of the section was indicated by my question to the chairman of the committee. It will be the establishment of a censorship bureau, and, as was pointed out by my colleague from Massachusetts, the publisher of the London Times could not have voiced his criticism of the Government if they had had any such law in England at the beginning of this war.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. The section says:

That nothing in this section shall be construed to limit or restrict, any discussion, comment, or criticism of the acts or policies of the Government or its representatives or the publication of the same.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; criticism of the acts or policies of the Government or its representatives.

Mr. PLATT. That may not be as broad as it ought to be. This is not the language that we first criticized. The bill has been changed.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; it is a new section in entirely different language and applies to different conditions.

Mr. PLATT. I will say that in piping times of peace, when I get there, I am engaged in newspaper business. I do not exactly like this, but——

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman think a section such as this would be necessary in order for him to conduct a perfectly fair and loyal publication?

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman knows that information gets into the newspapers not necessarily by intent, that news agencies gather the news, and therefore I think a censorship is a good thing to prevent information being sent out by these agencies and thus getting it into the newspapers.

Mr. WALSH. Then it is the opinion of the gentleman that this would authorize the establishment of a censorship bureau?

Mr. PLATT. I suppose it would, and I suppose that is the purpose.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. Suppose a newspaper is about to publish the fact that there were only a certain number of troops sent to a certain transport when there ought to have been a greater number. Is it supposed that we shall submit that statement to the censor and only be subject to punishment if it is forbidden to publish it, or is it intended that if he publishes that statement in disobedience of the censor he shall be punished? Is that what the bill tries to cover? Suppose a censor gives a man permission to publish a statement; can he plead that as a bar?

Mr. WALSH. I understand so.

Mr. GARDNER. It does not say so.

Mr. WALSH. No, it does not say so; but it is intended, in my opinion, to be administered in exactly that way.

Mr. GARDNER. Is it not a protection to the newspaper man if it does establish a censorship?

Mr. WALSH. In that case it would be; but suppose instead of that the newspaper man said that it is rumored that on such and such a date so many troops are to be sent to such a place, and if that be true the War Department ought to be sandbagged, or some similar expression. He could give that information in the manner of criticism under this section. He could plead within the proviso that he was criticizing the acts and policies of the Government.

Mr. PLATT. I think that is hardly a fair assumption from the language. This applies to information given out and already public.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think so; it is criticism of the acts and policies of the Government. The policy might be formulated long before any affirmative act was done in pursuance of the policy.

Mr. PLATT. He must know first what the policy is.

Mr. WALSH. The policy of the Government may or may not have been announced. It may relate to statements made before a committee of Congress or on the floor of the House or Senate.

Mr. GARDNER. Would it not be a protection to the newspaper man to have a censorship?

Mr. WALSH. I do not think so. I do not think the press of the country ought to be compelled to submit to such an arbitrary censorship, more drastic than ever in Russia under the Czar.

Mr. GARDNER. If you do not have a censor to whom to submit the matters, a man may incidentally find himself liable to a fine of $10,000 and imprisonment.

Mr. WALSH. I think you will find plenty of people liable to punishment under the provisions of the bill who do not dream of it to-day. But to think the entire press must submit practically every news item to the censors, because the President can, in his judgment, say such item "might be" useful to the enemy is clearly an invasion of the freedom of the press.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman contend that there should be no sort of censorship of newspapers in a time of war?

Mr. WALSH. I have made no such contention.

Mr. TILSON. I understood the gentleman to say that in answer to his colleague

Mr. WALSH. I said that newspapers should not be required to submit to this broad censorship. I stated at the outset of my remarks that I believed the President as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy now has ample authority to say what information shall be given to the newspapers or what shall be published.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman realizes that some information absolutely true, and because it is true, would be all the more harmful.

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And that would be true of the movement of troops.

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The illustration is not a happy one in the establishment of a censorship.

Mr. WALSH. I do not know how happy it is, but I know that the censorship is established, and I doubt if the gentleman or any other Member of this body can to-day find out where the cruiser Montana is; and if Members of the House can not do so, I doubt if members of the press can.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have a son on a battleship, and I do not know where that battleship is.

Mr. WALSH. And that censorship was established without any such law as this.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; that was established without any authority of law; and now, with respect to the other illustration, as to whether there should be publication of a criticism of the feeding of the troops, I do not think that that is a matter that should be censored. I think the public should have a right to criticize the administration with respect to matters that do not reveal to the enemy the troops or the whereabouts or movements; but as to whether or not they are properly fed, that is a matter that should be left open to the widest criticism.

Mr. WALSH. I will say to the gentleman from Kansas that the particular phase to which he refers is covered in the proviso and also in the following section. Now, with reference to this chapter on espionage——

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield for a question.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. On that point of the proviso, is it not true that the criticism must be so worded and necessarily limited to a general criticism of policy, and it could not disclose any facts in bringing out the criticism? Let us assume that a division or a camp were improperly fed, and that owing to that the whole division was disabled and for that reason could not be mobilized. The newspapers and everyone else would be estopped from bringing out those facts because it would reveal the actual condition of that camp or regiment.

Mr. WALSH. I will say to the gentleman in reply to his question that in another legislative body there was an additional proviso added to this section which would prohibit any criticism which would convey any information prohibited by the foregoing part of the section, but that was stricken out by the House Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. In view of what the gentleman has just said, would not the proclamation of the President be limited to such publication as would be useful to the enemy?

Mr. WALSH. Not such publication as would be useful but such publication as might be, and he could make that in the broadest possible way. He could say by proclamation that he prohibited the publication of any information relating to the national defense, "because in my judgment it might be useful to the enemy."

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman will admit, if it be true that it would be or might be useful to the enemy, that he ought to have the power in time of war to prevent its publication.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, I contend he has it now.

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman contends that there is no penalty at present; that the President can prohibit something, but that he can not punish for violation of his proclamation.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, I think if the prior sections are examined it will be seen that a penalty is provided. He can prohibit, but with relation to information of that character, of course, any information might be useful to the enemy. Information of that character is in the custody of some one, and the President can absolutely prohibit its being imparted to anyone else.

Mr. PLATT. But suppose some one gets it and publishes it. He can not punish him.

Mr. WALSH. He can punish the person who imparted the information, and under another section the person making it public can be also heavily punished.

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman knows the character of some of the newspapers in some of our large cities. Does he not think it might be a wise thing to have a chance to impose a penalty upon some of them? I do.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, yes. I think you can punish them, but I do not think you ought to throttle them in this way.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. May I ask my colleague from New York a question?

Mr. WALSH. I prefer to have the gentleman do that in his own time. As I stated, the portion of this bill with relation to espionage was the one which gave cause to most of the criticism which has arisen with reference to this proposed measure; but there are other sections of the bill which are equally important, and as to which, we are advised, the department was powerless to act in order to safeguard property and the rights of the Nation, as well as to make secure its harbors and other waters.

As to the title relating to vessels in the ports of the United States, I am willing to admit possibly there is no present need for such legislation, because practically all of the vessels to which this would apply are owned wholly or in part by the Government or the citizens of the Government with which we are now at war, but I believe it is wise to have this legislation on our statute books. There is also a prohibition and penalty for violation thereof relating to injuring vessels by setting them afire or placing explosives thereon. We have also incorporated a section to punish the destruction of any article or the place in which it is produced or stored intended for exportation.

The title with relation to the enforcement of neutrality is presented to the committee after most careful consideration by the Treasury Department and the Attorney General. We have incorporated a section entitled "nine," which I understand is similar to laws abroad with relation to counterfeiting or tampering with military passes, and I assume the author of this section, who is a member of the committee, expects to explain his provision and the necessity therefor. Now, with relation to Title XI, the use of the mails, I would say that it is much milder in character——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield on Title VI before he proceeds to the other?

Mr. WALSH. I will.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. In subdivision 604, under Title VI, there is a provision that after certain legal proceedings have been had in respect to rights of property that the property may be returned to the owner upon the payment by the owner of costs, which, I take it, includes attorney's fees. On what theory did the committee report a provision that would require the rightful owner of property to pay the costs before he would be entitled to possession of the property?

Mr. GARD. I beg your pardon, is the gentleman addressing me?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I was addressing the gentleman who has the floor.

Mr. WALSH. This relates to the seizure of arms intended to be exported from the United States in violation of law and authorizes the authorities to seize those arms and if, after trial, it is found by the jury, if a jury is demanded, that they were not so intended the owner——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. To that property paying all the costs?

Mr. WALSH. Paying the costs and legal expenses.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Now, why is not the owner of the property, when it is decided by a trial or a series of trials that his property was not intended for a wrongful use, entitled to possession of it without the payment of all these legal expenses, which perhaps would amount to a confiscation of his property?

Mr. WALSH. Oh, no; he can give bond.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; but why should he be required to give a bond?

Mr. WALSH. Because a month after he gets the property back he may attempt to violate it in the same way.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; but the court has decided——

Mr. WALSH. In that particular instance it is not intended, although personally I think very likely the costs might be assessed on the Government.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I think if he is entitled to his property it ought to be returned free to him of all payment of costs.

Mr. WALSH. I have no authority to accept an amendment, but I suppose the committee will be glad to consider it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Before the gentleman goes into a discussion concerning the regulation matter in the mails I would like to ask him if this entire measure is intended to be a war measure—that is to say, an emergency measure?

Mr. WALSH. No; I think that a majority of the provisions are intended to apply in time of peace, but the punishment in time of war for some violations is more severe.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Would that apply to the publication of anarchistic statements?

Mr. WALSH. Of course, neutrality applies in time of peace. The provisions relating to the enforcement of neutrality, search warrants, passports, counterfeiting, and the like, apply in time of peace.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. How about the publication of anarchistic articles in newspapers; is that a war measure?

Mr. WALSH. That is intended to be enforced in time of peace. They can be refused the use of the mails in peace or war times. Anything of a treasonable or anarchistic nature is declared to be nonmailable.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit an interruption? Is this to be permanent law?

Mr. WALSH. I understand it is until repealed or modified.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What should go through the mails is usually left to the judgment of the Postmaster General.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, well, I would say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that, as I understand, the present law gives the postmasters of the various offices the right to exclude certain matter from the mails, such as obscene matter and lottery tickets, and the like, under existing law, and in this section we simply add to the class of matter that is nonmailable and which will be excluded by the postmasters.

It will not necessarily have to be sent down here to the department. The postmaster where it is sought to mail it is empowered to and probably will refuse to receive it, as he does under existing law with reference to lottery tickets, and so forth.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Let us look into this a little. I come from a district that is very peaceable and law abiding; but in that district and in western Washington we have had I. W. W. riots off and on for years, and nearly all of them started over wages and developed into free-speech riots; we have had numerous socialistic "community" towns, and we had an anarchist and free-love settlement that gloated over the assassination of McKinley, and which was punished by having its post office taken away; and we have some socialists there, graduates of Harvard and Yale, who have gone the free-press limit. They have never been punished for treasonable words, but one of them was punished after trial in court for a so-called immoral article entitled "Nudes and Prudes." That was done by act of law rather than by proclamation of the Postmaster General. The defense was the rights of a free press, but it was proved that the articles went too far against morality.

Now, then, this bill, if enacted, means that in the future articles that actually are treasonable, or near-treasonable, or seditious, or suspicous in any way would be subject to the ruling of whomever happens to be high in the Post Office Department.

Mr. WALSH. We have a solicitor in the Post Office Department.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And his opinion would prevail without a court trial. As a matter of fact, whether we like these article or not, and we know we do not like them, this is legislation against a free press in the United States, is it not?

Mr. WALSH. I do not think so. Does not the gentleman think that the mails should be prohibited from carrying certain matter?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Of course, I want to see treason suppressed, war times or peace times, but we must remember the Constitution guarantees free speech and a free press. Personally, I do not believe that a man like Bill Hayward should be permitted to stand up in Carnegie Music Hall in New York City alongside of Lincoln Steffens and preach treason and near-treason, as I heard them when it looked like war with Mexico. Neither do I think the book of this Indiana socialist, Kirkpatrick, or whatever is his name, entitled "War? What For?" should be permitted to circulate at all.

Mr. WALSH. It will not be circulated through the mails if this becomes a law.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That book has run into several editions, over 100,000 copies. There is a way to get at such matters without giving the Postmaster General so much direct power.

Mr. WALSH. If it is treasonable or anarchistic in its character, if this bill becomes a law, this book will not go through the mails, because of this first section in this title. And if they published that speech or the article that was read from the desk, which did not go into the RECORD, in a daily paper, and this bill becomes a law, that paper can not be carried through the mail.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. But the book or the newspaper can still be printed and circulated by express or by newsboy or otherwise, and peddled out at Socialist lectures. The truth of this thing is, that we are going to make an effort to abridge free press and free speech under the guise that it is a war necessity, when we have not got the nerve to come out and take care of it in a legal and proper way within the Constitution. We are treading on dangerous ground, I believe. I hope to discuss this matter later, and I apologize to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] for infringing on his time.

Mr. WALSH. Now, Mr. Speaker, as the chairman pointed out, the act also contains a new title condensing certain general provisions and definitions. As I understand it, it was the intention of the committee that those general provisions should apply to the terms wherever found in the bill. To conclude, with the exception of the section that I have criticized, I submit there is a real need for this legislation, and that without it the various departments of the Government will be powerless to cope with certain situations that have been and are confronting us. For instance, we were told that some of the ships which were tied up in our harbors were used as places wherein plots were being hatched against Governments with which this Nation was at peace; that some of those ships were crippled because of their machinery being tampered with and destroyed; and that officials of the Coast Guard of the Treasury Department boarded some of the ships and attempted to go below and see what was going on, but were resisted. They found the hatchways and the doors were under lock and key. And the department officials then were without authority to forcibly go below and take steps to prevent further destruction of those engines and other motive power upon those ships.

Now, in the passage of this bill we would have authority, should the occasion again arise, to prevent, by seizing the ships and placing guards thereon, the destruction or tampering with the motive power. I trust that the provisions of the bill, with the exception of the section I have pointed out, may be enacted into law.

I wish to state that this measure is under consideration in another body at the present time, and some amendments have been made in the sections which have already been considered by that other body which do not appear in the draft as reported to the House. We have had public hearings, and outside of possibly three or four exceptions the only people who objected to section 5 of the bill were representatives of hoboes and representatives of people who, to my mind, are worse than anarchists, because they profess to be American citizens and seem to boast of the fact that they do not care to be loyal to their Government. You may be told about the censors abroad. Well, if you are, there must be some point at which we can cease being imitators. The censorship is based on the assumption that the press is disloyal. I do not believe it; certain papers may be. They can be dealt with. I think that if we have such people as that in our midst we should have some law to punish them for any affirmative acts which might injure our Government, or weaken it in time of peace, or cripple it in time of war.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman explain the purport, the meaning, and intent of section 13, under section 509, on page 46?

Mr. WALSH. I understand that is to prevent filibustering expeditions being set on foot within our borders and to punish anybody who begins, sets on foot, provides or prepares the means for, or furnishes the money for, or takes part in, any military or naval enterprise to be carried on from here against any foreign nation with which the United States is at peace.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. For instance, the United States is not at war with the Empire of Austria-Hungary at this time. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. WALSH. Well, I do not know that we have declared war with Austria-Hungary, but I should venture a guess that we are at war with that country.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Assuming that we are not, this would prevent, then, Americans of Hungarian or Austrian descent from in any way helping a Hungarian Republic being realized?

Mr. WALSH. This would prevent whom?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Any American citizen or any person in this country giving aid and assistance to bring about a Republic in Hungary.

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It would also prevent anybody sending any money to Ireland, would it not?

Mr. WALSH. I do not think so.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. For the purpose of carrying on the Irish cause—would it not?

Mr. WALSH. I do not think so, unless that money was to help arm troops to fight against England, with whom we are now allied in the greatest war in all history. That ought now not to be permitted, in my judgment, as it would be similar to fighting against us, or aiding Germany who is our enemy.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman's interpretation is different from mine.

Mr. WALSH. I am giving you my interpretation. I do not think so.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Would the gentleman be in favor of making the section so clear that there shall be no mistake about it?

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman thinks there is any doubt about it, or anything that is not clear, he can offer an amendment embodying such language as he thinks proper to improve it. I can not speak for the committee.

Mr. VOLSTEAD rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I do not expect to speak at any great length upon this bill. The chairman [Mr. WEBB] explained it quite fully. I desire only to call attention to some criticisms made upon it. This bill came to us from the Attorney General. It deals with a number of matters related to neutrality, or the national defense, which the Government thinks it is necessary to pass at this time. In a measure it is an emergency bill. This war and the situation prior to it with the difficulties that grew out of factional activities in this country made it necessary that we should pass such a statute for the purpose of better preserving our neutrality, protecting this Government against interference on the part of foreign nations in our affairs, and to punish various acts that may be detrimental to this country.

Attention has been called to the general character of the bill, and I do not care to go minutely into the details of it. I desire to call attention to section 4, the espionage provision, and perhaps one or two other sections against which a good deal of criticism has been directed by the press and to which attention has been called by Members on this floor. In my judgment section 4 ought to remain in the bill. The committee took a good deal of time in considering it. We practically rewrote it. The original proposition was very much more drastic than the one that is now in the bill.

I want to call your attention to the plan of this espionage chapter. The first section prohibits anyone from securing information with the intent or knowledge or reason to believe that the information is to be used to the injury of the United States. The second section prohibits communicating any information to an enemy with intent or knowledge or reason to believe that it is to be used to the injury of the United States. The third section prohibits officers, employees, and other people intrusted with information from divulging that information. It is perhaps a little broader than that, but that is the general purpose of the section.

Section 4 is intended to cover in a more general fashion publications that may be injurious to the Government. No one can tell at this time just what information may be injurious. Information harmless to-day may be injurious six months from now. It is exceedingly difficult to frame a general statute that would be so all-embracing as to cover all matters that ought to be prohibited, and at the same time exclude the acts which are not injurious.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN. I would like the gentleman to state whether he thinks this section in any way interferes with or conflicts with the first amendment to the Constitution, which in substance prohibits Congress from enacting any law which abridges the freedom of the press or the freedom of speech?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; I do not think so. Of course, I realize that the President might make a regulation that might be too broad. But we have to assume that the President will obey the Constitution, and that he will make his regulations conform to it. I do not anticipate any trouble on that account.

Mr. MORGAN. The gentleman knows that under this provision of the Constitution Congress can not enact any statute which abridges or restricts or controls the freedom of the press.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Oh, yes; but we have a large number of statutes prohibiting various abuses of the press and of free speech, passed under State constitutions containing the same prohibition.

Mr. MORGAN. I understand the National Government has never but once enacted a national law which applied any control or limitation to the press, and that was in the sedition act passed in 1798.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That never was before the Supreme Court.

Mr. MORGAN. I understand Mr. Jefferson would not enforce these laws because he said these laws were unconstitutional and void.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Well, if Mr. Jefferson did say so I think he was wrong. However, I do not know enough about the sedition laws, so that my opinion on the subject would be worth nothing.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. You are talking about section 4?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Allow me to read:

During any national emergency resulting from a war to which the United States is a party—

Now, a man might do anything until the President of the United States makes his proclamation. But suppose he makes his proclamation when Congress has not declared war. Could there be a conviction?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think so, because the phrase following the language just read says:

or from threat of such war.

Mr. CANNON. Threat by whom?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I presume there would be no great difficulty in ascertaining that war was threatened. The President is the proper party to find and declare that fact, and if he does find it, I do not believe the courts would disturb his finding.

Mr. CANNON. Let me put a question. All criminal statutes and statutes imposing a penalty are strictly construed. Just let me put a question that has absolutely arisen. The President is Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. He recognized Carranza as the head of a legal Government in Mexico. Yet, as Commander in Chief, without Congress having declared a war—and the power rests with Congress alone to declare war—he ordered the Army across into Mexico, for what? To bring Villa, dead or alive, and the Army did go in 100 or 200 miles, and there were two battles. Now, suppose this statute had been in existence at that time, and the proclamation had been issued, would the indictment have to show that there was war? Is not that the first thing that must be alleged?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; a threat of war and a finding by the President of that fact is sufficient.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no. The President can not make war by proclamation. Congress alone has the authority to make war. Now, suppose he had made the proclamation, without Congress having declared war, and had put the Army into Mexico. Could anybody be punished, without first alleging that there was a war with Mexico, and proof that there was a war with Mexico? Mind you, this statute must be strictly construed, and without the allegation of a war and a proclamation by the President there could be no conviction.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. If the gentleman will permit me, the language goes a good deal further than the part he has read. It says that during any national emergency resulting from a war in which the United States is a party, or from the threat of such war, the President may declare so and so.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; but suppose you had indicted a man, and you were the prosecuting officer, and my friend here was the judge before whom the trial was had. Would you have to prove first that there was a war?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No.

Mr. CANNON. In the case I have supposed—a war with Mexico?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No.

Mr. CANNON. Can the President make war by proclamation?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The President would have the right to determine whether war was threatened, and when he made that finding, if he had any evidence that fairly supported his finding, it would be conclusive on our courts. They would make no inquiry beyond that.

Mr. CANNON. I think if the gentleman was the presiding judge and I was the prosecuting officer he would grant a new trial in a holy minute unless I proved that there was a war.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I would not. A threat of war would be sufficient.

Mr. CANNON. But I am putting it in the event of war. I grant you if an indictment was found under this statute, war with Germany having been declared by Congress, that proof would be made, and it would have to be made before there could be a conviction, and then following that proof the proclamation by the President.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. If the proclamation was to rest upon the finding that there was a war, then, of course, the President would have to find that a war existed. If there was any fact upon which he could reasonably conclude that a war did exist, his finding would be conclusive. I think that is the general rule.

Mr. CANNON. Without proof?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Even without a declaration of war. If they made war upon us, still it would be war. The President does not have the right to declare war, but he has the right to declare that a war does exist, that somebody else is making a war upon us, has he not?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I am speaking now of the nature of the proof. Could the President create a war on his own motion?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not believe that will occasion any great difficulty. The proclamation itself will prove the existence of the war.

I do not believe that there can be any question of our power to delegate to the President the power to declare when a national emergency exists or of the fact that his finding will be binding upon the courts, provided there is any evidence upon which the President can base it. Whether he is right or wrong, his findings can not be questioned. I believe that it is the general rule that where you delegate to an officer the power to determine a certain fact, his finding is conclusive if supported by any testimony that will reasonably support his finding. The finding in the proclamation will be evidence of the emergency necessary to authorize its issue.

Mr. COMSTOCK. The declaration or finding would be presumptive evidence, but would it be conclusive? Would it not be a matter of defense to show that there was no war?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes; but I do not care to be diverted from the general subject. I want to call attention to this situation: In preparing for and carrying on this war many things will be done and many things will happen that can not be anticipated. Inventions and experiments will be tried, the details of which should remain secret; knowledge of the movements and numbers of troops and ships may or may not be of advantage to the enemy. Somebody should determine what may be published. It seems to me that the President, who is in touch with every department, had better, by proclamation, regulate these matters than have Congress attempt in a general way to draw a bill that will cover all these various contingencies. It is a good deal easier for the executive departments that have got to deal with these things from day to day, and know just where the difficulty is. They may very properly suggest what information ought to be prohibited. If we undertake to cover every situation now, perhaps a week from now or a month from now something else may come up requiring a new regulation. To illustrate, take the old espionage act, which we are amending. It is in many respects one of the most drastic laws imaginable, infinitely worse than anything we propose to the House in this bill. Still, when the Government came to apply it, it was discovered that it did not cover a great many things that it ought to cover, and they came to us and asked us to amend it. Instead of using general language, as we do in this bill, they attempted to enumerate offenses. If we attempted to do the same thing now I am sure as the days go by it would soon be discovered that we had omitted a great many things that ought to have been covered. In the attempt to make the language of that act cover everything that might be injurious many innocent acts are denounced by severe penalties. We must trust somebody, and it seems to me we had better trust the President than anyone else. We do not want to leave it to the executive departments. We felt that if a rule was to have the force of law, it ought to have the sanction of the President and ought to be proclaimed publicly.

Mr. McCORMICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will.

Mr. McCORMICK. Does the gentleman object to the principle embodied in the Senate bill? Perhaps he will let me read a few lines of the Senate bill, because it illustrates the fundamental difference between the two bills. On page 8 of the Senate bill, line 19, it provides:

Whoever, in time of war, in violation of reasonable regulations to be prescribed by the President—

And so forth—

shall publish any opinion with respect to the movement, number, description, conditions, or disposition of the Army forces—

And so forth.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. If I remember it correctly, it makes an enumeration of certain information that is not to be published, and follows it up by a general prohibition against the publication of all information. This method is as objectionable as that adopted in this bill. It seems to me that it is better to use a general definition of an offense than to attempt to enumerate specific acts to be condemned.

Mr. McCORMICK. Suppose there was an epidemic in the Army—and there is at this moment a considerable amount of infectious disease, not of a serious character—among the new recruits in the Navy, under the proviso in the House bill would it not be possible for the President by proclamation to prohibit any Member of the House standing on a street corner and drawing public attention to the condition of the troops. If it developed, as it did in France and England, that munitions were inadequate and improper, any Member of this House, or a man in any other vocation, who drew public attention to the condition of the troops in the field by reason of the failure of judgment by the Department of War would be liable to imprisonment.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not think there is any serious danger of anything of the kind. In the first place, the information has got to be of such a character as to be useful to the enemy. Suppose they did find out that there was some disease or epidemic in the Army, what great harm would it do? Let us remember that we are living under a free government—at least, I hope so—and I do not believe that the man at the other end of the Avenue would dare to write a law that would approach anything tyrannical.

Mr. McCORMICK. The gentleman recalls the prosecution of Lord Northcliffe because he declared that the munitions supplied to the British Army were absolutely unsuited to conditions of modern warfare, and compelled the appointment of Lloyd George as minister of munitions. The gentleman recalls that he was prosecuted for rendering an incomparable service to the army and the British Empire. [Applause.]

Mr. VOLSTEAD. But this provides that the information must be useful to the enemy. That it is information relating to the national defense which, in his judgment, is of such a character that it is or might be useful to the enemy.

Mr. McCORMICK. In whose judgment?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Well, strike out the words "in his judgment," in line 7, if you please; if you insist that the President's judgment can not be trusted, trust it to a jury. In a case like this—that is, during the war—we ought to trust the President. It seems to me that we have got to do it, whether we like to or not. This section is only in force during war times.

Mr. McCORMICK. Let me say that while the law provides that the President shall exercise his judgment, inevitably some minister of the President will exercise his judgment, which will be confirmed by his chief, and if a Member of Congress or other person discovers that the conduct of the war——

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Pardon me, but I can not permit the gentleman to make his speech in my time.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will yield to the gentleman for a question but not for a speech.

Mr. SLOAN. I did not want to make a speech. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the two facts upon which the procedure can be predicated—one, actual war, which would be by act of Congress, and the other is from a threat of such war. I understand a threat is that act of a person which would indicate a danger to another person, and I think that is the language which ought to be there. If it is a threat, a threat by whom? Is it a threat by the President of the United States that he would begin a war against some other country, or king of another country that he would begin war against this country?

Would it not be better to couch it in such language so that the only time that we could resort to it would be in the case of actual war declared by Congress, or from his finding that there was an imminence of war brought about by the act of another nation toward this Nation?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Now the gentleman has talked about as much as I have.

Mr. SLOAN. I know; but the gentleman is such an eloquent listener that I wanted to entertain him.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I would prefer to be excused for a moment. I am not partial to the language in the first two lines of this section. I think that language is unfortunate, and my recollection is that it is different from that upon which we agreed.

It may have been inserted inadvertently in copying the bill, because it had to be recopied two or three different times. We amended it so often that we never did know what we had in it until it was reprinted finally. I think the gentleman would render a service by offering an amendment that will clarify that language. It does not seem to me that that affects the real merits of this controversy. As has been called to the attention of the House, the newspaper men realize that some provision like this section 4 must be passed. When they were called together and consulted in reference to it, they conceded, as I understand, that they could work under a provision much more drastic than this. They were willing to accept it in its original form.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. FESS. The bill refers to information that would prove useful to the enemy. Under that characterization would such a matter as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] mentioned here be classified as useful?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Oh, I do not think that ordinarily it would be of any use to the enemy. It would be only in a very extreme case.

Mr. FESS. What I wanted to get at was whether under the term "useful" it would mean encouragement to the enemy in the conviction that our forces were not being treated as they ought to be. Would such an interpretation as that fall within the purview of the language?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not think so. Another section in this bill covers any information that would be useful to the enemy.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman understands that I am in sympathy with his purpose.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not think that that criticism ought to be directed against this section at all. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] insists that we can get along and ought to get along without any prohibition of this kind, as the newspaper men are now good. Yes; but here is the situation: Suppose they are good at this time, which I believe is true generally, some newspaper may commence to publish matters that might do injury to use. Then others in competition will have to do the same thing.

There is no way now to punish, and it seems to me it is absolutely necessary that we should protect the good newspapers by compelling the others to live up to the same standard of patriotism. You can not do it by voluntary consent. They never will in the long run. They may do it now in the beginning of the war, but suppose the war drags along not only during this, but through next year, then it seems to me that it is quite evident that there may be more or less dissatisfaction, and when that dissatisfaction does occur there are going to be newspapers that will publish matters that ought not to be published, and the only way then to compel them to treat this country decently will be to have a law under which they all can be punished if they violate the order of the President in reference to these matters.

Mr. FARR. Suppose the war should be prolonged for a year or two years due to weaknesses in our system of defense, and that the newspapers caustically or otherwise called attention to those things?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That might happen.

Mr. FESS. They would have the right to do that.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. They have a right to criticize under the proviso attached to this section. We have sought to guard these men, to give them the right to criticize and comment upon the acts and policies of the Government. If they do that in the spirit of helpfulness, which they ought to do, and not for the purpose of injuring this country, they will not be punished. It seems to me that newspapers ought to welcome such a law, and I do not believe that any government would dare to throttle the press if it is doing a good and useful thing.

Mr. FARR. That would be regarded in the interest of our country, and not as giving aid and comfort to the enemy.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Certainly. Somebody has got to use his discretion, his judgment, in matters of this kind, and I do not see how we can avoid it. I wish we could draw this bill so that the innocent man, every man who really does want to help the Government, will stand no show of being annoyed, and I have no doubt that when a man does a thing with good intentions to aid the Government there will be no difficulty at all.

Now, there are other provisions to which I might call attention, but I am not going to devote very much more time to it. This provision in reference to the use of mails has been criticized. We were very careful in that title not to make it drastic. The proposition that was submitted to us would have given wide power to the Postmaster General, power to deny the use of the mails to anyone who might publish a treasonable or an anarchistic article. We refused to accept that provision for fear that it might work an injustice. The only power we left in the bill over the mails gives the postmasters the right to exclude treasonable or anarchistic matter—exclude that particular edition, the particular article. Then we make them subject to punishment, to fine or imprisonment. We have that sort of statute all over this country. There is nothing very drastic about that; every State has statutes to protect assaults upon the character of its citizens. Why should we not pass like statutes to protect the Nation and its defenders. When our boys are out in the trenches fighting or on the seas to guard our coasts it seems to me we ought not to hesitate to pass laws to protect them against any insidious foe at home. We can have no patience with those who insist that we must not pass these laws for fear that, perchance, they may abridge somebody's idea of free speech and a free press. We have not been so careful in the past. We have passed statutes like these; we have lived under them; and we have found that they were salutary, and this bill, if passed, will be salutary law, just as salutary written to protect the Government as if written to protect an individual. Your character can be protected, why should not the stability and safety of this Government be protected? [Applause.] Mr. Speaker, I am not going to take any more time, and I will reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Speaker, the American people, by an overwhelming majority, by their sentiment expressed through their Representatives here, have declared the fact to be, as it is, that by virtue of the conduct of the Imperial German Government the United States and Germany are in a state of war. The Representatives of the people of the United States, in pursuance of national interest and honor and in keeping with national sentiment, have provided billions of funds with which to insure the carrying on of this war. The Congress has provided the country's defenses. During the past week the most interesting, the most intense, the most intellectual debate in the past four years has been conducted in this Chamber. We are now at war. We have now provided for a real Army. The honor, the interest, the life, the sovereignty of this Nation are at stake. [Applause.] Notwithstanding these facts the hydraheaded monster of treason is at work in our midst among those who enjoy the food, shelter, clothing, freedom, liberty, and equality of opportunity under our flag. For one I rise in my place here now and protest. On a letterhead, "Socialist Party, National Office, Executive Secretary Adolph Germer, 803 West Madison Street, Chicago, Ill.," under date of April 26, 1917, a committee made up of three—Victor L. Berger, John M. Work, and Adolph Germer—constituting the national emergency committee of the Socialist Party, wrote me a letter which reads as follows:

> In behalf of hundreds of thousands of Socialists throughout the United States we urge you to vote against conscription, selective or otherwise.
> All arguments which have been put forth in favor of conscription are specious and false. It would strike a blow to the liberties of the people. It would not only compel the individual—if he submitted to it—to kill other human beings, regardless of his conscientious scruples against doing so, but under the pretext of fighting militarism in Germany it establishes militarism of the worst kind in America.
> As everyone knows, the war is a commercial one. It is being waged for the benefit of a certain group of capitalists.

I have no capitalist class in my district in Texas, and yet 99 per cent of the people of my district are solidly supporting me in the assertion that I would protect the rights and sovereignty of this Nation. [Applause.]

It says to me further:

> They should really be permitted to fight the battles themselves, except in so far as others are freely willing to help them. It would be an outrage and a stupendous crime to compel anyone against his will to become a hired soldier in the most mercenary war the world has ever seen.

And Berger and Work and Germer, who favored the volunteer plan, have had for the past six months opportunities to volunteer and not one of them has volunteered, and even yet they graft upon the credulity and ignorance of their deluded followers and encourage and aid the foreign-propaganda sentiment in treachery and treason to the country.

The proclamation which they attach to that letter, which came to me through the mails of the United States, and to each of you in turn, contains, among other things, excerpts of a treasonable nature, a specific instance of which is as follows:

> The Socialist Party of the United States in the present grave crisis strongly affirms its allegiance to the principle of internationalism and working class solidarity the world over—

Which they have a perfect right to say and circulate. That is honorable, and they have a right under the free institutions protected by our flag to publish and to scatter through the mails that statement.

Now, this is treasonable:

> And proclaims its unalterable opposition to the war just declared by the Government of the United States.

This was printed after the American people, through their Congress, declared war, and it is treasonable to make and print and circulate such a declaration.

Another thing they say is this:

> The war of the United States against Germany can not be justified even on the plea that it is a war in defense of American rights or American honor.

They furthermore say:

> The American people did not want and do not want this war. They have not been consulted about the war and have had no part in declaring war. They have been plunged into this war by the trickery and treachery of the ruling class of the country through its representatives in the national administration and national Congress, its demagogic agitators, its subsidized press, and other servile instruments of public expression.

As if we had not a representative form of government; as if the people of the United States 128 years ago did not put the Constitution forward for ratification by the several States, which Constitution provided the people themselves should act not by immediate referendum upon any issue but through their Representatives, who are compelled to act in pursuance of public sentiment and national interest. [Applause.] In that treasonable pamphlet thus circulated through the mails they further say:

> We brand the declaration of war by our Government as a crime against the people of the United States and against the nations of the world.

Furthermore they add:

> In all modern history there has been no war more unjustifiable than the war in which we are about to engage.

And then they add this infamous and treasonable advice to the hundreds of thousands of those in that association who can procure and read these inflammatory pamphlets, which are printed at their headquarters organization—they offer this infamous and treasonable advice under which, if followed, not one dollar in support of this war could be raised and not one more soldier in defense of the flag could be enlisted:

> We recommend to the workers and pledge ourselves to the following course of action:
>
> 1. Continuous, active, and public opposition to the war, through demonstrations, mass petitions, and all other means within our power.
> 2. Unyielding opposition to all proposed legislation for military or industrial conscription. Should such conscription be forced upon the people, we pledge ourselves to continuous efforts for the repeal of such laws——

That would not be treasonable, but it would be fair for any citizen to propose an agitation for the repeal of a law.

They continue—> and to the support of all mass movements in opposition to conscription.

And this is put forth after Congress has passed an act providing for selective service, but which they call "conscription." They say further:

> We pledge ourselves to oppose with all our strength any attempt to raise money for payment of war expense by taxing the necessaries of life, or issuing bonds—

And so forth.

If there could be in a free land, whose hospitable shores welcomed these men born in other lands, a greater contempt expressed in mere words for the institutions into which they were invited to come and in which they are protected by the flag or a more treasonable insult to the flag which all of us alike who are real Americans heartily support, I can hardly conceive it.

I have no right to speak for the Socialist Party, but I make bold here to predict that this treasonable utterance finds not a ratification in the breasts of the honest Socialists of the United States, who impress us all with the conviction that they are sincere people, devoted to the achievement of peaceful and legitimate ideals for the improvement of society, and I hope that the sole and only Representative of the Socialist Party in this Chamber will add his courageous rebuke to the infamous treachery and base, treasonable utterances of these representatives of the un-American propaganda yet lingering in our midst while this young giant Nation is girding up its loins for the life and death struggle against the Prussian autocracy, which has insulted us, violated our acknowledged rights, and made war upon us. [Applause.]

For me there is no longer any tolerance for foreign sentiment in our midst. Either a man is for America or he is a base traitor to America and a hired or craven slave to foreign monarchy. [Applause.]

Let the people and their representatives strike this monster of treason each time it raises its hideous head. [Applause.] The destiny of the world and of civilization is at stake in the issue and by the brutal methods Germany has precipitated upon us and upon the world, and we should deal alike in severity with the traitor in our midst and the visible enemy on land or sea. [Applause.] Life, happiness, property—all we are and all we shall be are dedicated to the rights of nations and to liberty and freedom in America and the world. [Loud applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, if there is no further desire on the part of Members for general debate, I will ask for the reading of the bill for amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, there are others who want to participate in the debate. I will make the point of order of no quorum immediately if the gentleman is going to close it up with the small membership that is present now. The Members are absent from the Chamber. There are several gentlemen on this side who desire to be heard.

Mr. WEBB. Gentlemen on the other side have not informed me that they desired time. They may have notified the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD], but they did not notify me.

Mr. STAFFORD. They do want to be heard.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I would like to be heard.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, in view of these representations, to the effect that other gentlemen, including Judge PARKER, on the other side desire to be heard——

Mr. STAFFORD. A gentleman from New York wants to be heard and also others on this side.

Mr. WEBB. The gentleman understands, and the Members of the House understand, that we are trying to get through with this work so that we can adjourn here by the 1st of June, and there is no desire on my part to rush anything through this Congress. But——

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman can see by the empty benches that the House is not ready to go on with the debate at this hour.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WEBB. Well, as to the empty benches, that is probably because there is no desire to speak on the subject. It was well understood by the membership of the House that this bill would be taken up to-day for consideration. But in view, Mr. Speaker, of the representations that have been made that other gentlemen desire to be heard, I will now move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, May 1, 1917, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, recommending that sections 1538 and 1539 of the Revised Statutes, requiring inspection and estimates by a Navy board before major work can be undertaken on a vessel of the Navy, be repealed (H. Doc. No. 82); to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Onosohatchee River, Fla. (H. Doc. No. 83); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of channel from the Gulf through Johns Pass to Boca Ceiga Bay, Fla. (H. Doc. No. 84); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

(Legislative day of Monday, April 30, 1917.)

The Senate reassembled at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

INCREASE OF MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3545) to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That in view of the existing war, which demands the raising of troops in addition to those now available, the President be, and he is hereby, authorized—

First. Immediately to raise, organize, officer, and equip all or such number of increments of the Regular Army provided by the national-defense act approved June 3, 1916, or such parts thereof as he may deem necessary; to raise all organizations of the Regular Army, including those added by such increments to the maximum enlisted strength authorized by law. Vacancies in the Regular Army created or caused by the addition of increments as herein authorized which can not be filled by promotion may be filled by temporary appointment for the period of the war or until replaced by provisional appointments made under the provisions of section 23 of the national-defense act, and hereafter provisional appointments under said section may be terminated whenever it is determined, in the manner prescribed by the President, that the officer has not the suitability and fitness requisite for permanent appointment.

Second. To draft into the military service of the United States, organize, and officer, in accordance with the provisions of section 111 of said national-defense act, so far as the provisions of said section may be applicable and not inconsistent with the terms of this act, any or all members of the National Guard and of the National Guard Reserve, and said members so drafted into the military service of the United States shall serve therein for the period of the existing war unless sooner discharged.

Third. To raise by draft as herein provided, organize, and equip an additional force of 500,000 enlisted men, or such part or parts thereof as he may at any time deem necessary, and to provide the necessary officers, line and staff, for said force and for organizations of the other forces hereby authorized, or by combining organizations of said other forces, by ordering members of the Officers' Reserve Corps to temporary duty in accordance with the provisions of section 38 of the national-defense act approved June 3, 1916; by appointment from the Regular Army, the Officers' Reserve Corps, from those duly qualified and registered pursuant to section 23 of the act of Congress approved January 21, 1903 (32 Stat. L., 775), from the members of the National Guard drafted into the service of the United States, from those who have been graduated from educational institutions at which military instruction is compulsory, or from those who have had honorable service in the Regular Army, the National Guard, or in the volunteer forces, or from the country at large; by assigning retired officers of the Regular Army to active duty with such force with their rank on the retired list and the full pay and allowances of their grade; or by the appointment of retired officers and enlisted men, active or retired, of the Regular Army as commissioned officers in such forces: Provided, That the organization of said force shall be the same as that of the corresponding organizations of the Regular Army: And provided further, That officers with rank not above that of colonel shall be appointed by the President alone, and officers above that grade by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate: Provided further, That the President may recommission persons who have heretofore held commissions in the Coast Guard department and have left the service honorably, after ascertaining that they are qualified for service physically, morally, and as to age and military fitness.

Fourth. The President is further authorized, in his discretion and at such time as he may determine, to raise and begin the training of an additional force of 500,000 men, organized, officered, and equipped, as provided for the force first mentioned in the preceding paragraph of this section.

Fifth. To raise by draft, organize, equip, and officer, as provided in the third paragraph of this section, in addition to and for each of the above forces, such recruit training units as he may deem necessary for the maintenance of such forces at the maximum strength.

Sixth. To raise, organize, officer, and maintain during the war such number of ammunition batteries and battalions, depot batteries and battalions, and such artillery parks, with such numbers and grades of personnel as he may deem necessary. Such organizations shall be officered in the manner provided in the third paragraph of this section, and enlisted men may be assigned to said organizations from any of the forces herein provided for or raised by selective draft as by this act provided.

Seventh. The President is further authorized to raise and maintain by voluntary enlistment, to organize, and equip not to exceed four Infantry divisions, the officers of which shall be selected in the manner provided by paragraph 3 of section 1 of this act: Provided, That the organization of said force shall be the same as that of the corresponding organization of the Regular Army: And provided further, That there shall be no enlistments in said force of men under 25 years of age at time of enlisting: And provided further, That no such volunteer force shall be accepted in any unit smaller than a division.

SEC. 2. That the enlisted men required to raise and maintain the organizations of the Regular Army and to complete and maintain the organizations embodying the members of the National Guard drafted into the service of the United States, at the maximum legal strength as by this act provided, shall be raised by voluntary enlistment, or if and whenever the President decides that they can not effectually be so raised or maintained, then by selective draft; and all other forces hereby authorized, except as provided in the seventh paragraph of section 1, shall be raised and maintained by selective draft exclusively, but this provision shall not prevent the transfer to any force of training cadres from other forces. Such draft shall be based upon liability to military service of all male citizens, or male persons not alien enemies who have declared their intention to become citizens, between the ages of 21 and 27 years, and shall take place and be maintained under such regulations as the President may prescribe not inconsistent with the terms of this act. Quotas for the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, or subdivisions thereof, shall be determined in proportion to the population thereof available for military service as shown by the registration provided for herein, and credit shall be given to any State, Territory, District, or subdivision thereof, for the number of men who have entered the military service of the United States under the provisions of this act from any such State, Territory, District, or subdivision, as members of any Federal force hereby authorized. All persons drafted into the service of the United States and all officers accepting commissions in the forces herein provided for shall, from the date of said draft or acceptance, be subject to the laws and regulations governing the Regular Army, except as to promotions, so far as such laws and regulations are applicable to persons whose permanent retention in the military service on the active or retired list is not contemplated by existing law, and those drafted shall be required to serve for the period of the existing war unless sooner discharged: Provided, That the President is authorized to raise and maintain by voluntary enlistment or draft, as herein provided, special and technical troops as he may deem necessary, and to embody them into organizations and to officer them as provided in the third paragraph of section 1 and section 8 of this act: Provided further, That all persons within the designated ages voluntarily presenting themselves for registration as herein required, and when selected for duty as herein provided, voluntarily present themselves at the time and place designated by the President, shall be held and deemed to have volunteered for military service and shall be so carried upon the rolls of the organization to which they may be assigned.

SEC. 3. That the Vice President of the United States, the officers, legislative, executive, and judicial, of the United States and of the several States and Territories, duly ordained ministers of religion, students who at the time of the approval of this act are preparing for the ministry in recognized theological or divinity schools, and all persons in the military and naval service of the United States shall be exempt from the selective draft herein prescribed; and nothing in this act contained shall be construed to require or compel any person to serve in any of the forces herein provided for who is found to be a member of any well-organized religious sect or organization, at present organized and existing, whose creed forbids its members to participate in war in any form and whose religious convictions are against war or participation therein in accordance with the creed of said religious organization; and the President is hereby authorized to exclude or discharge from said selective draft and from the draft under the second paragraph of section 1 hereof, or to draft for partial military service only from those covered by paragraph 3 of section 1, persons of the following classes: Customhouse clerks, persons employed by the United States in the transmission of the mails; artificers and workmen employed in the armories, arsenals, and navy yards of the United States, and such other persons employed in the service of the United States as the President may designate; pilots; mariners actually employed in the sea service of any citizen or merchant within the United States; persons engaged in industries including agriculture found to be necessary to the maintenance of the Military Establishment or the effective operation of the military forces or the maintenance of national interest during the war; those in a status with respect to persons dependent upon them for support which renders their exclusion or discharge advisable; and those found to be physically and morally deficient: Provided, That medical students shall be exempted until graduation and shall thereupon be subject to draft for the same period of time as other citizens. No exemption or exclusion shall continue when a cause therefor no longer exists: Provided, That notwithstanding the exemptions herein enumerated, each State shall be required to supply its quota in the proportion that its population bears to the total population of the United States.

The President shall make rules and regulations to carry out the terms and provisions of this section, and provide for the issuance of certificates of exemption or partial or limited exemption, and for a system to exclude and discharge individuals from selective draft. There shall be created under the direction of the President local tribunals in the several States or subdivisions thereof, composed of the members of the local civil government, to decide all questions of exemptions under this act, and also all questions arising under the draft for partial military service or for including or discharging individuals or classes of individuals from the selective draft, which shall be made under the rules and regulations aforesaid, and shall also provide for an appeal tribunal.

SEC. 4. That all male persons between the ages of 21 and 27 years shall be subject to registration in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the President, and upon proclamation by the President or other public notice given by him or by his direction stating the time and place of such registration it shall be the duty of all persons of the designated ages to present themselves for and submit to registration under the provisions of this act; and every such person shall be deemed to have notice of the requirements of this act upon the publication of said proclamation or other notice as aforesaid given by the President by his direction; and any person who shall fail or neglect to present himself for registration or to submit thereto as herein provided shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, upon conviction in the proper district court of the United States, be punished by imprisonment for not less than three months nor more than one year, and shall thereupon be duly registered: Provided further, That persons shall be subject to registration as herein provided who shall have attained their twenty-first birthday and who shall not have attained their twenty-eighth birthday on or before the day set for the registration, and all persons so registered shall be and remain subject to draft into the forces hereby authorized, unless exempted or excused therefrom as in this act provided.

SEC. 5. That the President is hereby authorized to utilize the service of any or all departments and any or all officers or agents of the United States, and of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, in the execution of this act, and all officers and agents of the United States, and of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, and public officials and agents therein, are hereby required to perform such duty in the execution of this act as the President shall order or direct, and the officers and agents of the several States shall hereby have full authority for all acts done by them in the execution of this act by the direction or request of the President. Any person charged as herein provided with the duty of carrying into effect any of the provisions of this act or the regulations made or directions given hereunder, who shall fail or neglect to perform such duty; and any person charged with such duty or having and exercising any authority under said act, regulations, or directions, who shall knowingly make or be a party to the making of any false or incorrect registration, physical examination, exemption, enlistment, enrollment, or muster, or any false or incorrect report or return pertaining to any registration, physical examination, exemption, enlistment, enrollment, or muster; and any person who shall make or be a party to the making of any false statement or certificate as to the fitness or liability of himself or any other person for service under the provisions of this act, or regulations made by the President thereunder, or otherwise evades or aids another to evade the requirements of this act or of said regulations, shall, if not subject to military law, be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction in the proper district court of the United States, be punished by imprisonment for not less than six months nor more than one year, or, if subject to military law, shall be tried by court-martial and suffer such punishment as a court-martial may direct.

SEC. 6. That the qualifications and conditions for voluntary enlistment as herein provided shall be the same as those prescribed by existing law for enlistments in the Regular Army, except that recruits must be between the ages of 18 and 40 years at the time of their enlistment; and such enlistments shall be for the period of the war unless sooner discharged. All enlistments, including those in the Regular Army Reserve which are in force on the date of the approval of this act and which would terminate during the war, shall continue in force during the war unless sooner discharged, but nothing herein contained shall be construed to shorten the period of any existing enlistment.

All voluntary enlistments shall be in the Army of the United States and those enlisted may be assigned upon enlistment to any force of said Army not required to be raised exclusively by selective draft.

The President may provide for the discharge of any or all enlisted men whose status with respect to dependents renders such discharge advisable; and he may also authorize the employment on any active duty of retired enlisted men of the Regular Army, either with their rank on the retired list or in higher enlisted grades, and such retired enlisted men shall receive the full pay and allowances of the grades in which they are actively employed.

SEC. 7. That the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, is authorized to appoint for the period of the existing war such general officers of appropriate grades as may be necessary for duty with brigades, divisions, and higher units in which the forces provided for herein may be organized by the President, and general officers of appropriate grade for the several Coast Artillery districts. In so far as such appointments may be made from any of the forces herein provided for, the appointees may be selected irrespective of the grades held by them in such forces. Vacancies in all grades in the Regular Army resulting from the appointment of officers thereof to higher grades in the forces other than the Regular Army herein provided for shall be filled by temporary promotions and appointments in the manner prescribed for filling temporary vacancies by section 114 of the national-defense act approved June 3, 1916; and officers appointed under the provisions of this act to higher grades in the forces other than the Regular Army herein provided for shall not vacate their permanent commissions nor be prejudiced in their relative or lineal standing in the Regular Army.

Each chief of bureau of the War Department shall, during the existing war, have the rank, pay, and allowances of major general.

SEC. 8. That the appointments authorized and made as provided by the second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh paragraphs of section 1 and by section 7 of this act, and the temporary appointments in the Regular Army authorized by the first paragraph of section 1 of this act, shall be for the period of the war, unless sooner terminated by discharge or otherwise. The President is hereby authorized to discharge any officer from the office held by him under such appointment for any cause which, in the judgment of the President, would promote the public service; and the general commanding any division and higher tactical organization or territorial department is authorized to appoint from time to time military boards of not less than three nor more than five officers of the forces herein provided for to examine into and report upon the capacity, qualification, conduct, and efficiency of any commissioned officer within his command other than officers of the Regular Army holding permanent or provisional commissions therein. Each member of such board shall be superior in rank to the officer whose qualifications are to be inquired into, and if the report of such board be adverse to the continuance of any such officer and be approved by the President, such officer shall be discharged from the service at the discretion of the President with one month's pay and allowances.

SEC. 9. The President is hereby authorized and the Secretary of War directed to call into the service of the United States by enlistment for the term of the present war three or more regiments of mounted volunteers in addition to any other forces herein or otherwise provided; such mounted volunteers to be selected from men between the ages of 18 and 45 years, and under the provisions of section 3 hereof, and to be used in protecting property and citizens along the southern border of the United States, and also to be used in any foreign country as the President may direct.

SEC. 10. The President is hereby authorized to appoint officers for such volunteer force, including appointments from the numbers of such volunteers as shall have heretofore served in ranger or police forces of the southern border States, or as peace officers of the counties or municipalities thereof.

SEC. 8a. That the service of all persons selected by draft under the provisions of this act shall be for the period of the war, unless sooner terminated by discharge or otherwise. Whenever said war shall cease by the conclusion of peace between the United States and its enemies in the present war, the President shall so declare by a public proclamation to that effect, and from and after the date of said proclamation the provisions of this act, in so far as they authorize compulsory service by selective draft or otherwise, shall cease to be in force and effect.

SEC. 11. That all officers and enlisted men of the forces herein provided for other than the Regular Army shall be in all respects on the same footing as to pay, allowances, and pensions as officers and enlisted men of corresponding grades and length of service in the Regular Army: Provided, That on and after May 1, 1917, the pay of all men with the rating of enlisted men during the continuance of the war shall be increased $14 a month over and above the rates of pay proper as fixed by law for times of peace: Provided further, That this rate of pay shall apply to enlisted men of the National Guard and to those in the Regular Army now enlisted, called, or drafted into the service of the United States during the war.

SEC. 12. That all existing restrictions upon the detail, detachment, and employment of officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army are hereby suspended for the period of the present war.

SEC. 13. That the President of the United States, as Commander in Chief of the Army, is authorized to make such regulations governing the prohibition of alcoholic liquors in or near military camps and to the officers and enlisted men of the Army as he may from time to time deem necessary or advisable: Provided, That no person, corporation, partnership, or association shall sell, supply, or have in his or its possession any intoxicating or spirituous liquors at any military station, cantonment, camp, fort, post, officers' or enlisted men's club, which is being used at the time for military purposes under this act, but the Secretary of War may make regulations permitting the sale and use of intoxicating liquors for medicinal purposes. It shall be unlawful to sell, furnish, or give away any intoxicating liquor, including beer, ale, or wine, to any officer or member of the military forces while in uniform, contrary to the provisions of this act. Any person, corporation, partnership, or association violating the provisions of this section or the regulations made thereunder shall, unless otherwise punishable under the Articles of War, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than 12 months, or both.

SEC. 14. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby suspended during the continuance of the present war.

RECEPTION OF FRENCH COMMISSIONERS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair makes the following statement: At 12.30 to-day the French vice premier, the inspector general of public instruction, and Gen Joffre are coming to visit the Senate of the United States. Two of them are members of the French Assembly and, of course, are entitled to the privileges of the floor. The marshal is not entitled to the privileges of the floor if there is any objection. The Chair is therefore inquiring whether there will be any objection to the marshal coming in on the floor of the Senate?

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask that the rule be suspended and unanimous consent given that he may have the privileges of the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is no objection, he will be admitted.

The Chair in looking over past occasions, when Gen. Lafayette and Louis Kossuth were here, has ascertained that very shortly after they had been admitted to the Senate Chamber a recess was taken in order that Senators might be presented to the visitors. The Chair suggests that course of action upon the present occasion. There will be no speeches of any kind whatever; it will be simply a formal visit.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand that when the distinguished Austrian visited the Senate there was a motion for a recess.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is simply making the announcement in order that his conduct may meet with the approval of the Senate.

On Saturday last when it became apparent that the Senate of the United States would be in session until near the hour of midnight, Senators having been invited to the Army and Navy Club to attend a reception to the marshal of France, the Vice President transmitted a letter stating the facts and expressing regret that Senators could not attend. A reply has been received to that letter, which the Chair desires to have inserted in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

[Le Marechal Joffre, Republique Française.]

WASHINGTON, April 30, 1917.

To the Hon. THOMAS R. MARSHALL,
Vice President of the United States, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: I wish to thank you for your warm letter in behalf of France and of her army which I represent here. I am particularly appreciative of the words you have said in the name of the Senate and which reflect so well the friendship uniting our two countries. The law which you have voted is a most eloquent proof of the common will that inspires us both.

Kindly, I pray you, Mr. President, transmit to your colleagues the expression of my high appreciation for the sympathy with which they have honored me during my sojourn in Washington and receive the assurances of my high appreciation.

J. JOFFRE.

INCREASE OF MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3545) to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Inasmuch as the bill now before the Senate contains the provisions which were passed by the Senate in the Senate bill, I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be read for amendments that may be offered to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—GOVERNMENT OF MEXICO.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I rise to a matter of personal privilege, which will take only a few moments. On the 27th day of April, 1916, in a public address I made in the city of Pittsburgh before the Americus Club, in speaking of the recognition by large numbers of the Mexican people and large areas of the Mexican Republic of the accession of Gen. Huerta, I used this language:

It was the judgment of the diplomats representing foreign countries in Mexico that the provisional government in Mexico had been installed in compliance with the Mexican constitution and Mexican precedent, and that its speedy recognition would be helpful in restoring normal conditions throughout the country. The American ambassador shared this view and asked for instructions. Gen. Carranza, who at that time was governor of one of the Mexican States, had officially informed this Government of his adherence to the new government; the Mexican Congress and courts had recognized its authority, and advices from our diplomatic and consular officers indicated a very general adherence to its authority throughout the Republic.

A few days after the publication of that address, on the 7th day of May, there was published an article in the New York World by Gen. Carranza in which he referred to the statement I have just read. Gen. Carranza said:

It was impossible for me to have adhered to Huerta or to have notified anyone that I had, for upon the very day I received a message from Huerta inviting me to adhere to him, I officially proclaimed that I disclaimed him and his government. KNOX can not prove his statement.

I was requested to give an interview in reply to that statement by Gen. Carranza. I declined to do it, stating that there would be time enough for me to take cognizance of such a statement when what I had said had been denied upon the authority of the State Department where the archives rested proving or disproving my statement.

I would have let the matter go at that, but a few days ago, in an address to the Mexican Congress, Gen. Carranza revived this denial and stated that I had, in an interview recently in regard to the situation in Mexico, practically reiterated that statement, and he denounced it as false.

I wish to say, Mr. President, that from the time I ceased to be Secretary of State until this very moment I never gave out an interview upon any matter pertaining to the foreign affairs of the United States at any time or in any place, and so far as I know no interview purporting to have come from me has ever been published in an American newspaper.

I send to the desk and ask that there may be read in the order in which they are arranged a letter I addressed to the Secretary of State, his reply, and the inclosure of his reply.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

APRIL 18, 1917.

Hon. ROBERT LANSING,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. LANSING: In a report made by Gen. Carranza to the Mexican Congress on the 15th instant, the general took occasion to denounce as entirely false an interview which he alleged I gave out, naming me as Senator KNOX, in which he puts into my mouth words I never said, and refers to an interview I never gave, never having given any upon the subject. This all arises out of a statement that I made in a public speech to the effect that within a few days after the accession of Gen. Huerta Gen Carranza had notified the American consul in the State of Coahuila that he was prepared to acknowledge the Huerta régime in Mexico. These are not the exact words I used, but they were words to that effect. Within a few days after making this statement there appeared in the New York World an interview with Gen. Carranza, in which he denounced that statement as false.

I will be obliged to you if you will transmit to me, for the purpose of having the same introduced into the RECORD, a copy of a telegram received by the Department of State, in which the department is informed as to the intentions of Gen. Carranza in relation to the recognition of Huerta, and which likewise states that this information had been transmitted as well to our embassy in Mexico City. I can not recall the date of this telegram, but it appeared in the information series on the troubles of Mexico, and will be found, I think, under some date in February of 1913.

Your compliance with this request will enable me to justify my statement and settle an annoying incident. My purpose is to rise to a question of personal privilige and deny that I ever gave an interview such as Gen. Carranza quotes, or any interview at all on the subject, and to produce the telegram as an authority for the only statement that I have ever made in reference to the matter.

Very sincerely, yours,

P. C. KNOX.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington, April 19, 1917.

Hon. P. C. KNOX,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR KNOX: In response to your letter of April 18, it gives me pleasure to inclose a copy of a telegram from Consul Holland at Saltillo, dated February 21, 1913, which is in the archives of the department. If this is not the telegram to which you refer, please communicate with me further in the matter.

Sincerely, yours,

ROBERT LANSING.

(Inclosure: As stated.)

[Telegram received from Saltillo, Dated Feb. 21, 1913, received Feb. 22, 1.22 a. m.]

SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington, D. C.
February 21, 1 p. m.:

Gov. Carranza has just announced to me officially that he will conform with the new administration at Mexico City. All opposition here abandoned. Railroads will be opened at once. Perfect quiet prevails. Embassy advised.

HOLLAND.

INCREASE OF MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3545) to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I requested that the formal reading of the bill might be dispensed with, but no announcement, I think, was made by the Chair to that effect.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair put the usual form of such a request, that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the committee amendments be first considered. The Chair will again inquire if there is objection to dispensing with the formal reading of the bill. The Chair hears none.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There are one or two amendments which I desire to submit as committee amendments, though the committee has really not had an opportunity to consider them since they were presented to me. Both of these measures, the House bill and the Senate bill, were placed by me in the hands of the Judge Advocate General on Sunday, and he analyzed both bills and sent to me a few suggestions where he thought amendments ought to be made in the pending amendment of the Senate committee. I will call attention to them and propose that the amendment be amended as suggested. This is really the Senate amendment to the House bill. The first amendment to the amendment is to strike out the word "war" where it occurs in the amendment and substitute the language of the Senate bill as it originally stood, inserting the word "emergency."

The Judge Advocate General, in a conference with me, advises me that if the word "war" is used instead of the word "emergency" it will only include the war of the United States as with Germany; that if during its course we become involved with any other power, no matter how that involvement may be brought about, the war measure for raising men would not apply; and therefore Congress would have to be convened to extend the provisions of the act so as to include others with whom the United States might be involved.

I therefore move that where the word "war" occurs in the bill, and I think there are three or four places, the word "emergency" be inserted.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it seems to me the bill in its present form ought to have gone before the Committee on Military Affairs. I understand the Senate committee had a bill before it and reported it to the Senate and it was passed and sent to the House. The House had a similar bill before it, and it was amended many times in the House and was sent here. The chairman of the Senate committee now proposes to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill, the House bill never having gone to the committee.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator is mistaken about that. When the bill came from the House at midnight on Saturday evening the following members of the committee were here and acted on the bill and ordered it reported out: Senators WARREN, HITCHCOCK, WADSWORTH, MYERS, CHAMBERLAIN, BECKHAM, KIRBY, FLETCHER, SUTHERLAND, NEW, and THOMAS.

Mr. REED. I desire it to be expressly understood about this matter that I am not trying to delay it for a minute. Since the Senator has made that statement I think the situation comes back to my mind. I recall that we took a recess at 12 o'clock, midnight, to meet at 12.30 in the morning. I went down stairs to get a sandwich. While I was there the bill came over and whatever action was taken was taken during those few minutes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes; it was done then.

Mr. REED. That is all right. I call attention to the suggestion of the Judge Advocate General, but I am not doing it for the purpose of taking any time. I understand the Judge Advocate General states that if the word "war" is left in the bill and some other nation should come into the war it would not be the present existing war, and therefore this bill would not be operative; and he suggests changing the word "war" to the word "emergency." I want to illustrate that by the first line of the bill:

That in view of the existing war, which demands the raising of troops in addition to those now available, the President be, and he is hereby, authorized—

And so forth.

I confess I can not understand to save my life what is the difference as far as this bill is concerned and so far as the point made by the Judge Advocate General is concerned between speaking of existing war and existing emergency. The existing emergency is a term which seems to me narrower than existing war, for as long as we are in a conflict with Germany, no matter what other nation may or may not come in, it seems to me it must be said to be the existing war.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. In one moment. The existing emergency would seem to me to be possible at least of being construed to mean just the particular emergency with which we are confronted at this moment. I am not going to cavil about it, but I can not understand——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I hope the Senator will insist on his objection. I certainly shall.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will allow me, I wish to ask him a question.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. WARREN. Of course, I would not assume to discuss a point of law with the junior Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. This is not a point of law, but it is a point of English.

Mr. WARREN. It seems to me there might be a difference in this respect. We are in war with Germany because we have declared war. We have not declared war, I understand, with the Austrian Government, yet I understand that they have sent our ambassador and agents home and there is something of an emergency there. It might not be war at present, but it is very near to it.

It strikes me that the difference in the two might be of some avail in a case like that. We are certainly only in war with Germany, and yet if not attacked we are about to be attacked and probably will be attacked by all the allies of Germany.

Mr. REED. We are at war with Germany. These other countries are allies of Germany in the very war in which we are about to engage. It seems to me almost absurd to say that the Government can not go on and raise these troops as long as this present conflict lasts.

Here is a world war with Germany and Austria-Hungary and Bulgaria on one side. They are engaged in a conflict with England, France, Italy, Russia, and several other nations. That war is going on; that is "the existing war." Into that existing war, which involves every one of these nations and a number that I do not specifically name, the United States enters. The bill provides that in view of the existing war certain things may be done. It seems to me that is the proper descriptive term. I have not had time to follow the proposed act through and to find where the term elsewhere appears. Perhaps the chairman of the committee can tell us.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I can call the Senator's attention to each one of them. The first is on page 15, line 17, where the words occur—"existing war."

Mr. REED. I have that.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The next place in the bill where it occurs is on page 16, line 5, and the next is in line 20, on page 16.

Mr. REED. I have those. I thank the Senator.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The next is on page 18, line 20.

Mr. REED. Well, those will serve to illustrate the few remarks which I intend to make further. Let us take the second time which the term appears, which is on page 16, line 5, where the language is as follows:

> Vacancies in the Regular Army created or caused by the addition of increments as herein authorized which can not be filled by promotion may be filled by temporary appointment for the period of the war or until replaced by provisional appointments.

Then, again, in line 20, on page 16, the language is:

> Shall serve therein for the period of the existing war unless sooner discharged.

Mr. President, there is an existing war; it is a world-wide war, almost. This language will enable the Government to raise these troops and to employ them during the existing war; and I insist that that is the correct language, with all the respect in the world for the Judge Advocate General.

I do not propose, so far as I am concerned, to vote to raise these large levies for a period which is to be covered by some vague, indefinite, and uncertain term, such as is suggested, to wit, "emergency." If "emergency" means more than war, then I do not want it. If it means less than the period of the war, then I do not want it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I sympathize very cordially with the view expressed by the Senator from Missouri. I think many of us who voted for the draft system voted for it in view of the war with Germany. There might be some other war as to which we would not be willing to vote for it; there might be some other trouble as to which we would not be willing to vote for it; but while our Nation is engaged in war with undoubtedly one of the most powerful nations in the world, I supported the draft system, so that we may at once, if necessary, utilize the entire forces of our country to meet the situation.

If, as the Senator from Missouri says, "the present emergency" means something else except the war with Germany, I do not think the language ought to be inserted. If it simply means war with Germany, we have already covered it. It is the war with Germany which is moving us; and more indefinite language does not meet the situation. I see no advantage to come, but only disadvantage, from striking out the language we have adopted.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, before the Senator from Georgia takes his seat, I should like to ask him a question. Let us suppose that during the prosecution of the present war Germany's allies, or some of them, should declare war against the United States or that the United States should declare war against some one or more of them, would the Senator from Georgia hold that the term "existing war" would apply to that situation?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Undoubtedly; unless the existing war had ceased, unless we had made peace with Germany. Until we have made peace with Germany, these troops may be mobilized and used.

Mr. THOMAS. That is my construction of the situation. Therefore, I think the objection of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is well taken.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. So long as the war continues with Germany this force is available; this draft stands. If the war with Germany terminates and we have trouble with some other nation, I should like to have the opportunity to then consider the question as to whether or not I wish to see a draft system continued. I do not think there is any trouble about calling Congress together if we should become engaged in war with some other country. We are voting as to the war with Germany and not as to some other war.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I do not care to discuss the matter at any greater length. There is some question about it, and I suppose that was the reason of the suggestion of the Judge Adovocate General. The language refers to the existing war. It is, however, immaterial to me what the Senate does with it. I should like to get the matter disposed of, and to take the view of the Senate on it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the chairman of the committee having the bill in charge to what I believe is a word which should be changed, on page 21, line 25, where a verbal correction is needed. In referring to the exemption from service of persons belonging to religious organizations the bill states that a person may be exempted——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I suggest to the Senator from Delaware that we first dispose of the pending amendment?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I thought the Senator was discussing the whole amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; we are discussing one proposition on one point.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am quite content with the Senator's suggestion and will withhold the amendment for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, there is one other amendment, on page 16, line 5. I move to insert after the word "by" the words "permanent appointments or by," so that it will read:

> For the period of the war or until replaced by permanent appointments or by provisional appointments.

The necessity for that amendment is that the law requires that graduates of West Point be commissioned; they are not given provisional appointments, but they are appointed as soon as they are graduated. This is only to provide for the law as it now stands.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 16, line 5, in the committee amendment, before the word "provisional," it is proposed to insert the words "permanent appointments or by."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am not sure about the intention of the Senate with reference to the use of the words "25 years," on page 19, line 11, and I suggest an amendment to make it read "27 years," as that is the limit that was fixed in the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, line 11, before the word "years," it is proposed to strike out "25" and insert "27."

Mr. THOMAS. If any change were made, I should prefer to see the age limit lowered rather than raised.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I withdraw the amendment, and leave it as it is.

Now, Mr. President, on page 19, line 25, there is a word misspelled. It should be "cadres" instead of "cadras."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, line 25, it is proposed to strike out "cadras" and insert "cadres."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. What was done with the amendment regarding the words "25 years"?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I withdrew that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. On page 25, line 5, after the word "President," I move to insert the following language:

Correspondence in the execution of this act may be carried in penalty envelopes bearing the frank of the War Department.

The reason for this is, that in the correspondence with the governors of the States, and with the enrolling boards in the different counties and cities, it will be quite expensive to the local communities to carry on the correspondence with the War Department, and the purpose of the amendment is to save the States and counties from expense in the matter, taking the view of it that the expense would not fall upon the Federal Government but on the State governments and local authorities.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the amendment is unnecessary, because if the War Department to-day incloses a franked envelope the recipients have a perfect right to use it if the answer is Government business. I think without the amendment the War Department officials charged with responsibility will be able to use franked envelopes on official business.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the attorneys in the Post Office Department raised a question about it, as to whether they would have authority to recognize the right of the local authorities to use franked envelopes unless some such provision as that suggested was contained in the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think there is any question that the present law authorizes the War Department or any other department to inclose franked envelopes for replies in connection with Government business.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say to the Senator that that accorded with my view, but those who are to enforce the law say not, and I want to protect the local communities if I can do so.

Mr. SMOOT. I know that Government departments are doing it now, and that even bureaus of this Government are using return franked envelopes. I know that the Forest Service has sent out requests to parties in relation to matters affecting the forests of the country and inclosed franked envelopes for replies upon the particular matter.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Question!

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I will suggest to the Senator, if that is law, there is no harm in making it perfectly plain and placing the matter beyond any doubt by putting this amendment in the act.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say to the Senator that I have just been advised this morning of one governor who has already expended $100 in postage in getting information before the War Department which they sought.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I have had applications from governors to have this provision included in this proposed law. I am not able to say whether it is in the law now or not, but I do not see any harm in inserting it here.

Mr. SMOOT. My opinion is that there is no necessity for it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, on page 29, line 18, I move to change the word "numbers" to "members." It is evidently a typographical error.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. I will ask that that amendment be stated again.

The SECRETARY. In section 10, page 29, line 18, it is proposed to strike out the word "numbers" and insert "members," so as to read:

Including appointments from the members of such volunteers as shall have heretofore served in ranger or police forces of the southern border States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. On page 31, line 11, the word "act" should be stricken out and the word "section" inserted. I move that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 13, page, 31, line 11, it is proposed to strike out the last word in the line, the word "act," and insert in lieu thereof the word "section."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, instead of that amendment I suggest the following—I note the words are "contrary to the provisions of this act." I do not think they carry the meaning as clearing as the meaning would be carried if we used the words "except as herein provided."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am satisfied with that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 13, page 31, line 11, after the word "this," it is proposed to strike out the words "contrary to the provisions of this act" and insert "except as herein provided."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, that completes the amendments I desire to suggest.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to suggest to the chairman of the committee that in section 3, on page 21, line 25, the hyphenated word "well-organized" should be changed to "well-recognized," so that it would read:

Who is found to be a member of any well-recognized religious sect or organization.

I think that is what it means.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, on page 21, line 25, it is proposed to strike out the word "well-organized" and to insert in lieu the word "well-recognized."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, in connection with the amendment which has just been adopted, which refers to the Society of Friends, I want to say that I do not believe that the exemption will apply to all the members of the Society of Friends. Many of my warmest personal friends and a great many of my constituents belong to this well-known society. There have always been fighting Quakers in this country in every war since the Revolution. I have in my hand a copy of a letter which was sent by one of the Quakers of my community, of the highest standing, to the mayor of the city of Wilmington, declaring his position in regard to the declaration of war against Germany. I think that it is so patriotic a letter and so well represents the sentiments of a large number of that great association that I ask permission to have the Secretary read it as a part of my remarks.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Would not the Senator be content to have it inserted in the RECORD, in view of the fact that the amendment has been adopted?

Mr. SAULSBURY. If the Senator so desires, I will do that; but I think it would be very well to have this letter read to the Senate; and, if the Senator does not object, I should like to have it read.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not object at all; but the amendment has been adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Delaware? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

GEORGE B. MILLER ALIGNS HIMSELF ON SIDE OF WAR—DUTY OF EVERY CITIZEN, SAYS LEADING FRIEND, TO STAND BEHIND PRESIDENT—FOR WORLD FREEDOM.

George B. Miller, of the American Vulcanized Fibre Co., and a prominent member of the Society of Friends, to-day sent to Mayor Price a ringing letter declaring that he assigns to the background his hatred of war and regards the action of President Wilson and the Government in entering the great European conflict "as the supreme sacrifice it has to offer for the sake of greater liberty for all nations." Other Friends feel the same as he does, Mr. Miller says.

The letter follows:

APRIL 11, 1917.

HON. JAMES F. PRICE,
Mayor's Office, City Hall, City.

DEAR SIR: I am not satisfied with my position among my fellow citizens at this time of grave national crisis. I want to be counted among those who have seen the vision of a world democracy prevailing and accom plished by the entrance of our great Nation in the conflict with the entente allies who are so gallantly fighting for liberty and the law and against that autocratic Government whose slogan is that "Might makes right."

I feel that I must assign to the background my hatred of war and its accompanying horrors and look at the action of our Government as the supreme sacrifice it has to offer for the sake of greater liberty for all nations, and for a more certain and permanent peace for the future.

The great and hideous ulcer of an autocratic Government which threatens and crushes all aspiration of its subjects for a more liberal form and which, for the desire of supremacy in the world, will ruthlessly sacrifice millions of its subjects in attempting to secure its ends, and in so doing slaughter millions of its neighbors, must have heroic treatment and the instrument to do the work must be direct and powerful.

Our great Nation has heard the call for a specialist in this case from Great Britain, France, and Russia who have been so nobly fighting for the cause of oppressed humanity. We have responded, and it is the duty of every citizen of this Commonwealth to get behind our noble President who says that we have entered this war "to fight thus for the ultimate peace of the world and for the liberation of its peoples, the German peoples included; for the rights of nations, great and small, and the privilege of men everywhere to choose their way of life and obedience. The world must be made safe for democracy."

I am physically incapacitated for fighting on account of my lameness, but if there is any service to which you can put my heart, head, and hands, be sure to call upon me. I am ready to respond at any time of day or night.

There are many others in the Society of Friends, which has always strongly advocated the principles of peace, who feel as I do. Those of us who do not go so far as many others do who decline to fight, or take any part in the prosecution of war, are as ardent advocates for peace and deplore the necessity for war as much as they do.

But at this crisis we believe we must think in the terms of a great nation, with the future good and best interests of all nations before us constantly, and we believe that the only way at this time to accomplish this is to take severe punitive measures against those nations who seem to have forgotten all their humanitarian instincts in their greed for the possession of world power.

We must deal with human nature as it is, not as we wish it was. If we possessed the nature which Jesus Christ personified on earth, the individual would be all right, the nations would be safe and sane, and we would possess a heaven on earth, and no wars would be possible. But since things are as they are, we must try to accomplish the great results we are after, the end of the war and the establishment of a permanent peace, by throwing in the influence and the great resources of our country on that side of the conflict which is fighting the cause of righteous government and for humanity, regretting most deeply the great sacrifice of lives and property which it entails, but willingly making it because we believe the cause is just.

Yours, very truly, GEORGE B. MILLER.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question in reference to this very matter. I desire to ask him if he believes that these persons whom he has exempted from draft or military service are entitled to the protection of the laws of the United States; and I wish to ask him, also, if they are entitled to share in the liberty for which this great battle is to be waged?

I wish the Senator would give me some information as to his own opinion upon this proposition.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, it goes without saying that all the people in the United States, whether they belong to the combatant or noncombatant forces, are entitled to the protection of the Government, no matter what may happen. That answers the first part of the Senator's question.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then, Mr. President, by heaven, they are entitled to take their part in the defense of their country and in the defense of the liberty for which other citizens of the Union are giving their lives. Is not that true?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, that is a question that can be discussed with force on both sides. It has been the history of this Republic to exempt from combative service certain classes who have these convictions, and in every law that has been enacted since Revolutionary days substantially that provision has been included. Now, it is just a question of policy. There are men in this country, there were men in Great Britain, and there are men now, who under no circumstances will shoulder arms. The result has been in Great Britain, and it would be so in the United States, that the jails would be full of men who might otherwise be engaged in occupations that would very materially assist the Government—farming and other noncombatant work. On account of their convictions they would be locked up in the jails.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I do not think we are following precedents in this bill. We are not following any precedent when, in the very first instance, we enact a draft law instead of providing for voluntary service. We are not following precedent in any of the provisions of this bill, and if we are to follow an old precedent upon any single proposition there ought to be some legitimate reason given for following that precedent to-day.

I know that I fail to catch the ear of the Senator in charge of this bill; that he is too busily engaged in discussing another subject with another Member of the Senate; but I submit, Mr. President, that this is a vital and important matter. You have declared in this very bill, you have reiterated it over and over again through the voice of the President of the United States, that the obligation of every American citizen is to give his services in this war to the defense of the Government and the defense of civilization. If there is any class of citizens that are to be excused from taking their part in fulfilling their obligation to the Government, then they are not proper American citizens.

Why, Mr. President, how easy it would be for any great church, before another generation should elapse, simply to declare by another profession of their creed that they do not believe in making war and destroying their fellow beings. Why, we could eliminate in that way half of the fighting force of the Government. These people are not entitled to be exempted from the draft; and before we get through with this bill I at least now intend to offer an amendment to strike out that provision.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have an amendment that I endeavored to propose to the Senate bill on Saturday evening before it was disposed of, but I was unable to do so on account of the limited time. It is an amendment to which I know the chairman of the committee has given consideration, and I feel satisfied that he will be glad to accept it as a part of his bill.

I want to say that while I am not authorized to speak for the Council for National Defense, I know that they have had this matter under consideration and that they would like to have a provision of this sort incorporated in the measure. I hope that it may be adopted without discussion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of the bill, a new section, as follows:

SEC. 14. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, empowered, and directed during the present war to do everything by him deemed necessary to suppress and prevent the keeping or setting up of houses of ill fame, brothels, or bawdy houses within such distance as he may deem needful of any military camp, station, fort, post, cantonment, training, or mobilization place, and any person, corporation, partnership, or association violating any order, rule, or regulation issued to carry out the object and purpose of this section shall, unless otherwise punishable under the Articles of War, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, or imprisonment of not more than 12 months, or both.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a statement with respect to this matter, and also a quotation from a book which I will give the Reporter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

PRELIMINARY BRIEF PREPARED BY THE OREGON SOCIAL HYGIENE SOCIETY, PORTLAND, OREG.

SHALL PROSTITUTION FOLLOW OUR ARMY?

The Oregon Social Hygiene Society believes that the Congress of the United States should take drastic action to prevent prostitution in Army camps and in the Navy for the following reasons:

First. Because the experience of European countries has shown that prostitution is one of the most serious, if not the most serious, of army problems.

(1) "During the first 18 months of the war one of the great powers had more men incapacitated for service by venereal disease contracted in the mobilization camps than all the fighting on the front." (M. J. Exner, M. D., Social Hygiene, vol. 3, No. 2, p. 205.)

(2) "Venereal diseases among soldiers in Germany have increased greatly since the war began." (Journal of the American Medical Association, vol. 68, No. 9, p. 715.)

(3) "The number of syphilitics in the army must certainly be several hundreds of thousands. * * * Since the war began a total equivalent of 60 divisions have been temporarily withdrawn from the fighting for venereal diseases." (Vienna report, ibid., vol. 68, No. 10, p. 814.)

(4) Sir Arthur Conan Doyle asked in writing to the Times on February 6, 1917, "Is it not possible in any way to hold in check the vile women who at present prey upon and poison our soldiers in London?" (The Shield (London), March, 1917, p. 218.)

Second. Because prostitution was a serious problem on the Mexican border in the summer of 1916.

(1) "As soon as the order to mobilize went forth the vice interests * * * also began to mobilize their forces and to move them to the border." (M. J. Exner, M. D., Social Hygiene, vol. 3, No. 2, p. 206.)

(2) Vice districts were established especially for the soldiers. (Ibid., pp. 206, 210; see also, Literary Digest, Nov. 18, 1916, p. 1332.)

(3) Prostitutes were extensively patronized.

(a) One woman stated that on a certain Saturday she had served 60 men, and on the following Sunday, 40. (Social Hygiene, vol. 3, No. 2, p. 210.)

(b) Another woman found to be in the active stage of syphilis during two days had had relations with 120 men. (Ibid., p. 211.)

(c) In one of the large cities the soldiers thronged the vice districts in the evening, and before many of the "crib" doors soldiers stood in line. (Ibid., p. 210.)

Third. Because venereal diseases, resulting from prostitution spread more rapidly through the Nation in times of war. This condition tends to make the Army and Navy problem more serious.

(1) "It is well known that the ravages of venereal diseases are always increased by war." (London report, Journal of the American Medical Association, vol. 67, No. 21, p. 1137.)

(2) At one hospital clinic in France syphilis increased almost 50 per cent during the first 16 months of the war, and almost 67 per cent the following 8 months. (Paris report, ibid., vol. 68, No. 5, p. 384.)

(3) Venereal diseases have been causing havoc in France and Italy since the war began. (Ibid., vol. 68, No. 14, p. 1071.)

Fourth. Because the venereal diseases, gonorrhea and syphilis, cause serious complications in later life, and because these diseases will be spread among innocent women and children when the war is over.

(1) "No disease has such a murderous influence upon the offspring as syphilis; no disease has such a destructive influence upon the health and procreative function of women as gonorrhea. * * * Inherited syphilis constitutes a powerful factor in the degeneration of the race." (Prince A. Morrow, M. D., Social Diseases and Marriage, Chap. I.)

(2) "It has been computed that about 25 per cent of all blindness in this country is caused by gonococcic infection. * * * Competent authorities on diseases of women state that gonococcus infection is the cause of 80 per cent of all inflammatory diseases peculiar to women." (Ibid.)

(3) The spread of venereal diseases has occurred after other wars, and it is anticipated in Europe after the present war. (London report, Journal of the American Medical Association, vol. 67, No. 24, p. 1771.)

(4) "All previous war experience shows an increase of venereal disease. * * * When peace comes there is the danger of grave and widespread dissemination of these diseases. It is for that that we must be prepared, and there is no time to be lost." (Report of national conference for combating venereal diseases (London), Social Hygiene, vol. 3, No. 2, p. 235.)

Fifth. Because prophylactic measures, while helpful, are insufficient, since—

(1) There was venereal disease on the Mexican border even when the Army employed prophylactic measures. One regiment had 19 new cases in two months. (Social Hygiene, vol. 3, No. 2, p. 216.)

(2) Such prophylactic measures will be more difficult to carry out when the Army is in motion.

(3) The transmission of disease itself is only part of the problem. "From the social point of view the question is not only one of the effect of venereal disease upon the social body, serious as that is. The more far-reaching evil is the state of mind and of character which lies back of it. The greatest evil to society results from the shattered ideals, lowered standards, sensualized minds, and perverted practices, which are brought into home life and society by these men who represent, in large measure, the cream of the young manhood of the Nation. To safeguard the home and society against these basic evils, we must not only abolish venereal disease, but we must minimize, so far as possible, prostitution itself." (Ibid., p. 220.)

Sixth. Because commercialized prostitution is unnecessary.

A statement declaring that there is no evidence that abstinence is "inconsistent with the highest physical, mental, and moral efficiency," has recently been signed by 360 of the foremost medical authorities in the United States. (M. J. Exner, M. D.: The Physician's Answer. Associated Press, New York.)

Seventh. Because it is easily possible to prevent, in large measure, commercialized prostitution and venereal disease.

(1) The commander of one camp suppressed prostitution absolutely on the ground of military efficiency, though he did not technically possess the authority to do so. There was much less disease in this camp than in any other observed. (Social Hygiene, vol. 3, No. 2, p. 213. See also Literary Digest, Nov. 18, 1916, p. 1332.)

(2) Gen. Frederick Funston writes: "I understand that it has been claimed that I viewed with tolerance the existence of these places because I thought them necessary for the contentment and well-being of the soldiers. I assure you that my opinion is exactly the opposite." (Social Hygiene, vol. 3, No. 1, p. 155.)

(3) Maj. Gen. O'Ryan issued orders forbidding all use of intoxicating liquor and all patronizing of immoral resorts. Commenting on these orders and the results, the Rio Grande Rattler, printed weekly by the New York division, says: "We have demonstrated that United States soldiers can live three months in camp without losing more men than they would lose in three months' fighting." (Ibid., p. 155.)

(4) The educational work of the Oregon Social Hygiene Society shows that education is effective. Says R. C. Coffey, M. D., of Portland, a prominent physician, not a member of the society: "From what I can learn from doctors over the State, the prevalence of venereal diseases has diminished more than half during the past two years. The proportion of surgical operations on women resulting from gonorrhea is certainly less than half what it was two years ago. This, I think, must be attributed to two reasons—prohibition and the influence of the Oregon Social Hygiene Society." (Are We Prepared? The Oregon Social Hygiene Society, Portland, Oreg.)

(5) During the last five years not less than 30 vice commissions, made up of physicians, lawyers, educators, and business men, have declared that the policy regulating prostitution by the examination of prostitutes in restricted districts is ineffective, and city after city has abolished its restricted district for the protection of commercialized prostitution.

Eighth. Drastic (i. e., immediate and powerful) action is necessary, because a large amount of disease in the Army originates in mobilization camps and home barracks.

(1) One regiment developed a frightful venereal rate in its mobilization camp, near a large city. It had 76 cases at one time. (M. J. Exner, M. D., Social Hygiene, vol. 3, No. 2, p. 216.)

(2) "In the case of all the troops on the border a vastly larger proportion of venereal disease was contracted before reaching the border than was contracted afterwards. This accords with the experience of the European armies in the present war. A policy of timely education, restraint, and prophylaxis, in connection with mobilization is imperative." (Ibid., p. 220.)

(3) "I think I may safely predict that, with the segregation of large bodies of young men in camps, there will be an enormous increase in the number of cases of syphilis and gonorrhea. The experience of the world has shown this to be true." (Sigmund Pollitzer, M. D., formerly president American Dermatological Society; hearings before Subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs, 64th Cong., 2d sess., pp. 502–503.)

So this hideous trade weaves itself into the very fabric of the British Empire; but even yet we have not seen the full and bitter truth of it. These empire men who come to fight and die for us, who give us their strong limbs, clear minds, and loyal hearts and lay them on our altar—what do we give them back again?

We know something about venereal disease; we are allowed to talk about this devilish thing at last. We know that drink is the cause of most of it; that drink leads men into temptation, reduces their power of resistance, and decreases their chance of recovery. But perhaps we do not know the ghastly truth about this foul disease; that it carries a canker to the grave, and even beyond the grave, for it winds its way like a snake through the lives of little children from one generation to another. In peace time in our small British Army the lost days from this cause alone were over 200,000 in a single year, and if things were no worse than that in these days the lost days in our present army would be over 6,000,000 in a year. That is bad enough, truly; but what are lost days compared with lost men? And what shall we say of our lost men, the men who came into our camps fit and strong and willing to offer up their lives for freedom, but are fit no longer and can strike no blow for freedom because this enemy at home has struck them down and made them things of shame? We are not allowed to publish figures that throw light on ghastly things like this; the truth would be so terrible that even this insolent drink trade could hardly survive it, for drink, as Dr. Saleeby says, is the great confederate of venereal disease, and the removal of drink, as the royal commission on this subject said, would be an enormous factor in fighting this foul thing.

We may not tell the truth, but we may say that the truth would set all Canada on fire. Is this how we pay the empire back for all its love and devotion and death? They lend their manhood to us, clean without and clean within, and some of it we can never send home again; but those men we do send back, shall they go back to their mothers and sisters, back to our clean dominions, with the seeds of drink and venereal disease in them? Is this to be the gift we send to Canada and Australasia, to these wide, healthy spaces of the earth that are free from this foul thing? Are these the seeds we are sowing now for the great British harvest of the days to come? Was it for this the Anzacs came across the sea to perish on Gallipoli? Is it for this that Canada's young men leap over the top in the Valley of the Somme?

Here is a story the wives and mothers of Canada have been reading of the boys and men they sent out to us on their Government's word that they should be free from the temptation of drink. Some of these men wounded in the trenches were in an English hospital; their broken bodies were at the mercy of the State. Their mothers and wives were assured that they would be protected from the only enemy they feared, but these men went out of hospital on leave and they went back drunk, and a Canadian doctor from the hospital stated on his oath that a large percentage of these wounded troops had to be sent back to Canada rendered permanently insane by alcohol.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute which I sought opportunity to offer when the Senate bill was before the Senate on Saturday evening, but the expiration of the time rendered it impossible for the amendment to be received. I now offer it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin offers a substitute for the committee amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Shall the substitute be read first?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I suppose it ought to be read first. It is somewhat extensive, because it incorporates the bill as it is before the Senate with certain modifications, followed by the main proposition of my amendment. If there were any way to obviate the necessity of reading the substitute, I should be glad to have that done; but I presume it is necessary, in order that it may be before the Senate, that the entire substitute should be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the substitute.

The Secretary proceeded to read the substitute amendment. During the reading,

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, as I understood the Senator from Wisconsin, he personally did not care that this substitute should be read, but he thought it was necessary under the rules to have it read. Am I correct in that understanding?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I desire to have the amendment read.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well, then.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is modified in a great many particulars.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I was simply thinking of saving time; but if the Senator from North Dakota asks that it be read, of course I have no objection.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the substitute amendment, which is as follows:

That in view of the existing war, which demands the raising of troops in addition to those now available, the President be, and he is hereby, authorized—

1. Immediately to raise, organize, officer, and equip all or such number of increments of the Regular Army provided by the national-defense act approved June 3, 1916, or such parts thereof as he may deem necessary; to raise all organizations of the Regular Army, including those added by such increments to the maximum enlisted strength authorized by law. Vacancies in the Regular Army created or caused by the addition of increments as herein authorized which can not be filled by promotion may be filled by temporary appointment for the period of the war or until replaced by provisional appointments made under the provisions of section 23 of the national-defense act, and hereafter provisional appointments under said section may be terminated whenever it is determined, in the manner prescribed by the President, that the officer has not the suitability and fitness required for permanent appointment.

2. To draft into the military service of the United States, organize, and officer, in accordance with the provisions of section 111 of said national-defense act, so far as the provisions of said section may be applicable and not inconsistent with the terms of this act, any or all members of the National Guard and of the National Guard Reserve, and said members so drafted into the military service of the United States shall serve therein for the period of the existing war unless sooner discharged.

3. To raise as herein provided, organize and equip an additional force of 500,000 enlisted men, or such part or parts thereof as he may at any time deem necessary, and to provide the necessary officers, line and staff, for said force and for organizations of the other forces hereby authorized, or by combining organizations of said other forces, by ordering members of the Officers' Reserve Corps to temporary duty in accordance with the provisions of section 38 of the national-defense act approved June 3, 1916; by appointment from the Regular Army, the Officers' Reserve Corps, from those duly qualified and registered pursuant to section 23 of the act of Congress approved January 21, 1903 (32 Stat. L., 775), from the members of the National Guard drafted into the service of the United States, from those who have been graduated from educational institutions at which military instruction is compulsory, or from those who have had honorable service in the Regular Army, the National Guard, or in the volunteer forces, or from the country at large; by assigning retired officers of the Regular Army to active duty with such force with their rank on the retired list and the full pay and allowances of their grade; or by the appointment of retired officers and enlisted men, active or retired, of the Regular Army as commissioned officers in such forces: Provided, That the organization of said force shall be the same as that of the corresponding organizations of the Regular Army: And provided further, That officers with rank not above that of colonel shall be appointed by the President alone, and officers above that grade by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate: Provided further, That the President may recommission persons who have heretofore held commissions in the Coast Guard department and have left the service honorably, after ascertaining that they are qualified for service physically, morally, and as to age and military fitness.

4. The President is further authorized, in his discretion and at such time as he may determine, to raise and begin the training of an additional force of 500,000 men organized, officered, and equipped, as provided for the force first mentioned in the preceding paragraph of this section.

5. To raise, organize, equip, and officer, as provided in the third paragraph of this section, in addition to and for each of the above forces, such recruit training units as he may deem necessary for the maintenance of such forces at the maximum strength.

6. To raise, organize, officer, and maintain during the war such number of ammunition batteries and battalions, depot batteries and battalions, and such artillery parks, with such numbers and grades of personnel as he may deem necessary. Such organizations shall be officered in the manner provided in the third paragraph of this section, and enlisted men may be assigned to said organizations from any of the forces herein provided for or raised by selective draft as by this act provided

7. The President is further authorized to raise and maintain by voluntary enlistment, to organize, and equip, not to exceed four infantry divisions, the officers of which shall be selected in the manner provided by paragraph 3 of section 1 of this act: Provided, That the organization of said force shall be the same as that of the corresponding organization of the Regular Army: And provided further, That there shall be no enlistments in said force of men under 25 years of age at time of enlisting: And provided further, That no such volunteer force shall be accepted in any unit smaller than a division.

SEC. 2. That the enlisted men required to raise and maintain the organizations of the Regular Army and to complete and maintain the organizations embodying the members of the National Guard drafted into the service of the United States, at the maximum legal strength as by this act provided, shall be raised by voluntary enlistment, or male persons not alien enemies who have declared their intention to become citizens, between the ages of 21 and 27 years, shall be eligible to voluntary enlistment in the military service of the United States according to the provisions of this act under such regulations as the President may prescribe not inconsistent with the terms of this act. Quotas for the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, or subdivisions thereof, shall be determined in proportion to the population thereof available for military service as shown by the registration provided for herein, and credit shall be given to any State, Territory, District, or subdivision thereof, for the number of men who have entered the military service of the United States under the provisions of this act from any such State, Territory, District, or subdivision, as members of any Federal force hereby authorized. All persons enlisted in the military service of the United States and all officers accepting commissions in the forces herein provided for shall, from the date of said draft or acceptance, be subject to the laws and regulations governing the Regular Army, except as to promotions, so far as such laws and regulations are applicable to persons whose permanent retention in the military service on the active or retired list is not contemplated by existing law, and those enlisted under the provisions of paragraphs 3, 4, 5, and 6 of section 1 of this act shall be required to serve for the period of the existing war unless sooner discharged: Provided, That the President is authorized to raise and maintain by voluntary enlistment, as herein provided, special and technical troops as he may deem necessary, and to embody them into organizations and to officer them as provided in the third paragraph of section 1 and section 8 of this act.

SEC. 3. That all male persons between the ages of 21 and 27 years shall be subject to registration in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the President, and upon proclamation by the President or other public notice given by him or by his direction stating the time and place of such registration it shall be the duty of all persons of the designated ages to present themselves for and submit to registration under the provisions of this act; and every such person shall be deemed to have notice of the requirements of this act upon the publication of said proclamation or other notice as aforesaid given by the President by his direction; and any person who shall fail or neglect to present himself for registration or to submit thereto as herein provided shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, upon conviction in the proper district court of the United States, be punished by imprisonment for not less than three months nor more than one year, and shall thereupon be duly registered: Provided further, That persons shall be subject to registration as herein provided who shall have attained their 21st birthday and who shall not have attained their 28th birthday on or before the day set for the registration.

SEC. 4. That the President is hereby authorized to utilize the service of any or all departments and any or all officers or agents of the United States, and of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, in the execution of this act, and all officers and agents of the United States, and of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, and public officials and agents therein, are hereby required to perform such duty in the execution of this act as the President shall order or direct, and the officers and agents of the several States shall hereby have full authority for all acts done by them in the execution of this act by the direction or request of the President. Any person charged as herein provided with the duty of carrying into effect any of the provisions of this act or the regulations made or directions given hereunder, who shall fail or neglect to perform such duty; and any person charged with such duty or having and exercising any authority under said act, regulations, or directions, who shall knowingly make or be a party to the making of any false or incorrect registration, physical examination, exemption, enlistment, enrollment, or muster, or any false or incorrect report or return pertaining to any registration, physical examination, exemption, enlistment, enrollment, or muster; and any person who shall make or be a party to the making of any false statement or certificate as to the fitness or liability of himself or any other person for service under the provisions of this act, or regulations made by the President thereunder, or otherwise evades or aids another to evade the requirements of this act or of said regulations, shall, if not subject to military law, be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction in the proper district court of the United States, be punished by imprisonment for not less than six months nor more than one year, or, if subject to military law, shall be tried by court-martial and suffer such punishment as a court-martial may direct.

SEC. 5. That the qualifications and conditions for voluntary enlistment as herein provided shall be the same as those prescribed by existing law for enlistments in the Regular Army, except that recruits must be between the ages of 18 and 40 years at the time of their enlistment; and such enlistments shall be for the period of the war unless sooner discharged. All enlistments, including those in the Regular Army Reserve which are in force on the date of the approval of this act and which would terminate during the war, shall continue in force during the war unless sooner discharged, but nothing herein contained shall be construed to shorten the period of any existing enlistment.

All voluntary enlistments shall be in the Army of the United States and those enlisted may be assigned upon enlistment to any force of said Army.

The President may provide for the rejection of all applicants for voluntary enlistment and for the discharge of any or all enlisted men whose status with respect to dependents renders such discharge or rejection advisable; and he may also authorize the employment on any active duty of retired enlisted men of the Regular Army, either with their rank on the retired list or in higher enlisted grades, and such retired enlisted men shall receive the full pay and allowances of the grades in which they are actively employed.

SEC. 6. That the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, is authorized to appoint for the period of the existing war such general officers of appropriate grades as may be necessary for duty with brigades, divisions, and higher units in which the forces provided for herein may be organized by the President, and general officers of appropriate grade for the several Coast Artillery districts. In so far as such appointments may be made from any of the forces herein provided for, the appointees may be selected irrespective of the grades held by them in such forces. Vacancies in all grades in the Regular Army resulting from the appointment of officers thereof to higher grades in the forces other than the Regular Army herein provided for, shall be filled by temporary promotion and appointments in the manner prescribed for filling temporary vacancies by section 114 of the national defense act approved June 3, 1916; and officers appointed under the provisions of this act to higher grades in the forces other than the Regular Army herein provided for shall not vacate their permanent commissions nor be prejudiced in their relative or lineal standing in the Regular Army.

Each chief of bureau of the War Department shall, during the existing war, have the rank, pay, and allowances of major general.

SEC. 7. That the appointments authorized and made as provided by the second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh paragraphs of section 1 and by section 6 of this act, and the temporary appointments in the Regular Army authorized by the first paragraph of section 1 of this act, shall be for the period of the war, unless sooner terminated by discharge or otherwise. The President is hereby authorized to discharge any officer from the office held by him under such appointment for any cause which, in the judgment of the President, would promote the public service; and the general commanding any division and higher tactical organization or territorial department is authorized to appoint from time to time military boards of not less than three nor more than five officers of the forces herein provided for to examine into and report upon the capacity, qualification, conduct, and efficiency of any commissioned officer within his command other than officers of the Regular Army holding permanent or provisional commissions therein. Each member of such board shall be superior in rank to the officer whose qualifications are to be inquired into, and if the report of such board be adverse to the continuance of any such officer and be approved by the President, such officer shall be discharged from the service at the discretion of the President with one month's pay and allowances.

SEC. 8. The President is hereby authorized and the Secretary of War directed to call into the service of the United States by enlistment for the term of the present war three or more regiments of mounted volunteers in addition to any other forces herein or otherwise provided; and mounted volunteers to be selected from men between the ages of 18 and 45 years, and under the provisions of section 3 hereof, and to be used in protecting property and citizens along the southern border of the United States, and also to be used in any foreign country as the President may direct.

SEC. 9. The President is hereby authorized to appoint officers for such volunteer force, including appointments from the numbers of such volunteers as shall have heretofore served in ranger or police forces of the southern border States, or as peace officers of the counties or municipalities thereof.

SEC. 10. That the service of all persons enlisted under the provisions of this act shall be for the period of the war, unless sooner terminated by discharge or otherwise. Whenever said war shall cease by the conclusion of peace between the United States and its enemies in the present war, the President shall so declare by a public proclamation to that effect, and from and after the date of said proclamation the provisions of this act, in so far as they authorize a force in addition to the forces of the Regular Army and the National Guard, shall cease to be in force and effect.

SEC. 11. That all officers and enlisted men of the forces herein provided for other than the Regular Army shall be in all respects on the same footing as to pay, allowances, and pensions as officers and enlisted men of corresponding grades and length of service in the Regular Army: Provided, That on and after May 1, 1917, the pay of all men with the rating of enlisted men during the continuance of the war shall be increased $14 a month over and above the rates of pay proper as fixed by law for times of peace: Provided further, That this rate of pay shall apply to enlisted men of the National Guard and to those in the Regular Army now enlisted, called, or drafted into the service of the United States during the war.

SEC. 12. That all existing restrictions upon the detail, detachment, and employment of officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army are hereby suspended for the period of the present war.

SEC. 13. That the President of the United States, as Commander in Chief of the Army, is authorized to make such regulations governing the prohibition of alcoholic liquors in or near military camps and to the officers and enlisted men of the Army as he may from time to time deem necessary or advisable: Provided, That no person, corporation, partnership, or association shall sell, supply, or have in his or its possession any intoxicating or spirituous liquors at any military station, cantonment, camp, fort, post, officers' or enlisted men's club, which is being used at the time for military purposes under this act, but the Secretary of War may make regulations permitting the sale and use of intoxicating liquors for medicinal purposes. It shall be unlawful to sell, furnish, or give away any intoxicating liquor, including beer, ale, or wine, to any officer or member of the military forces while in uniform, contrary to the provisions of this act. Any person, corporation, partnership, or association violating the provisions of this section or the regulations made thereunder shall, unless otherwise punishable under the Articles of War, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than 12 months, or both.

SEC. 14. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby suspended during the continuance of the present war.

SEC. 15. Not less than 40 nor more than 45 days after this act takes effect there shall be referred to the qualified voters of the United States for an advisory vote, as hereinafter provided, the following question:

"The Government of the United States having declared war against the Government of Germany, shall the United States Government at this time raise an army by draft to send to Europe to prosecute the war?"

Within 15 days after this act takes effect the Director of the Bureau of the Census shall cause to be printed and forwarded by mail to each postmaster in the United States (forwarding in the inverse order of their respective distances from Washington, D. C.) a sufficient number of blank ballots to enable each qualified elector residing within the limits of city delivery, rural delivery, and other postal service from such office (including its stations and branches from which mail deliveries are made) to vote "Yes" or "No" upon the foregoing question.

The said ballots shall be of such size and shape and bear such local identification marks as the Director of the Census may determine to be most suitable to enable the votes to be counted by congressional districts as rapidly as possible, and on each ballot shall be printed the following form, namely:

"The Government of the United States having declared war against the Government of Germany, shall the United States Government at this time raise an Army by draft to send to Europe to prosecute the war?

"Yes ☐

"No ☐

"The voter desiring to answer Yes to above question should mark a cross (thus X) in the square following the word 'Yes.' The voter desiring to answer No to above question should mark a cross (thus X) in the square following the word 'No.'

"I do hereby certify that I am a legally qualified voter, residing at No. ———, on ——— Street, in the city, village, or town of ———, county of ———, State of ———, and I have not heretofore voted at this advisory election.

"(Signature of voter) ——— ———.

"Dated this —— day of ———, 1917.

"The voter shall correctly fill out or cause the above blanks to be correctly filled out, except that if the voter resides in a rural community or has no street address at place of residence, the blanks as to street number may be disregarded."

And on the reverse side of said ballot shall be printed the words "Official business—free" and "Director of the Census, Washington, D. C."

The postmaster or his deputy shall immediately on receipt of the ballots cause to be posted in conspicuous places in the post office and in each branch post office or station under his jurisdiction notices announcing that the ballots are available for distribution during a period of five days next ensuing. Such notices shall be prepared by the Director of the Bureau of the Census and forwarded to each of the postmasters respectively in the United States, at the time and in the manner that the ballots are so forwarded, and such ballots shall be ready for distribution immediately upon their receipt by the said postmasters of the United States respectively. It shall be the duty of the Director of the Bureau of the Census immediately upon the passage of this act to furnish the copy for the ballots and notices to the Public Printer, to determine the number of each to be printed, and the Public Printer shall print said ballots and notices with all possible dispatch.

And said ballots and notices shall be immediately mailed to the respective postmasters of the United States by the Director of the Bureau of the Census upon receipt thereof from the Public Printer.

For a period of five days, as specified in the notice, the postmaster or his deputy shall distribute the ballots, either directly or through the regular mail, or through the carrier service to pesons entitled to vote on the question submitted in accordance with the provisions of this act, and each elector qualified to vote for President in each State shall be entitled to obtain one of the ballots at the post office where he receives mail if there is no free delivery, or from a rural carrier if such elector receives mail on a rural route from that office; and each such elector shall be entitled to mark only one ballot and mail it to the Bureau of the Census, Washington, D. C., except that if an elector by mistake loses or defaces or destroys a ballot he shall be entitled to receive from his said postmaster another ballot to be so marked and mailed. No postage shall be necessary upon such ballots. The elector may deposit his vote with the postmaster, or with any rural carrier, or in any mail box or other place designated to deposit mail for transmission and when so deposited it shall be collected, as is other mail, and taken to the local post office. It shall be the duty of the respective postmasters to receive the ballots herein provided for during a period of five days after the expiration of the time for the distribution of the ballots is completed as specified in the notice above provided for, and at least once each day during the time allowed for receiving such ballots each postmaster, or the deputy postmaster, shall assemble all ballots deposited in his office or received by him for mailing to the Director of the Census, and shall arrange the same in convenient packages for handling, securely wrap and seal the same for safe transit through the mails, and shall address each package to the Director of the Bureau of the Census, and shall designate on the outside of each package the name of the post office, the county, and State in which it is located, and thereupon mail such package to the Director of the Bureau of the Census.

Upon receipt of said ballots the Director of the Bureau of the Census shall use the staff and equipment of said bureau to ascertain separately the number of affirmative and negative votes cast from each State and from each congressional district: Provided, That no ballots upon which the certificates above provided for are not substantially filled out and no ballots received at the Bureau of the Census later than the twentieth day from the beginning of the distribution from post offices shall be counted.

The Director of the Bureau of the Census shall report the result of the count to Congress not later than 10 days after the last day upon which ballots may be received for counting, and as soon as may be thereafter shall arrange by congressional districts and shall transmit to the Clerk of the House of Representatives that portion of the ballots upon which appears the certificate of the voter.

Such certificates shall be filed by congressional districts by such clerk, and shall be open to the inspection of Senators and Representatives for their information.

Any person who shall willfully alter, mutilate, or destroy or who shall willfully delay or prevent the transmission or delivery by mail or otherwise of the ballot of any voter cast in such advisory election under the provisions of this act, or who shall willfully miscount or wrongfully certify any such ballot, and any person not a qualified elector who shall vote at such election, and any qualified elector who shall cast more than one vote at such election, shall each be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished for each offense by a fine of not less than $300 or by imprisonment for a term of not less than one year, as the court shall direct; and any person, firm, or corporation who shall willfully coerce, or attempt to coerce, by threats, intimidation, or otherwise, any employee or other person into voting or refraining from voting at such advisory election against the desire and judgment of such elector shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished for each offense by a fine of not less than $1,000 or by imprisonment for a term of not less than one year, or both fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

Any postmaster, assistant postmaster, letter carrier, postal clerk, the Director of the Census or his assistants or employees, or any other person who officially has access to such ballots, who shall reveal or make public in any way, or who shall make any note with respect to the vote of any elector cast under this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished for each such offense by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment for a term of not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, as the court shall determine.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Wisconsin bear with the Chair? The Chair assumes that the Senator from Wisconsin will not conclude by 12.30 his discussion of the amendment, and if agreeable to the Senator, as it is less than 10 minutes before it will be necessary to interrupt the proceedings until the visitors have departed, the Chair suggests to the Senator that he do not proceed now; and when the visitors depart the Chair will recognize the Senator from Wisconsin on the subject of his amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I thank the Vice President for the suggestion. I should like to say, however, that what I have to offer to the Senate for its consideration upon this amendment will require not to exceed 25 or 30 minutes of the Senate's time, but I would, of course, prefer to have the opportunity to present it connectedly and without interruption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is why the Chair made the suggestion, and in order to accommodate the Senator.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I suggest that the Senate be at ease for a few minutes without taking a recess.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That course will be satisfactory.

After a little delay,

The VICE PRESIDENT said: The Chair requests the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to meet the distinguished guests of the Senate and escort them into the Chamber.

RECEPTION OF FRENCH COMMISSIONERS.

At 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m. the Commissioners of the French Republic to the Government of the United States, M. Rene Viviani, vice premier of the council of ministers; Marshal Joffre; Vice Admiral Chocheprat, of the Navy of France; and M. Emile Hovelaque, inspector general of public instruction, escorted by Mr. HITCHCOCK and Mr. LODGE, the committee appointed by the Vice President, entered the Senate Chamber, accompanied by M. Jusserand, the French ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary accredited to the United States, aides of the French officers, and the Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Phillips. The distinguished visitors having been seated in chairs provided to the right and left, respectively, of the Vice President,

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate of the United States has had the pleasure and honor many times in the past of receiving and welcoming distinguished visitors to the Republic. It had the glorious honor of receiving Gen. Lafayette. Nearly a century afterwards it now has the great pleasure and honor of welcoming the vice premier of the French Government, the superintendent of public instruction, the marshal of France, and Vice Admiral Chocheprat, of the French Navy.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, in order that Senators may have an opportunity to be presented to the distinguished guests of the Nation who are now in the Senate Chamber, I move that the Senate take a recess for 25 minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Thereupon (at 12 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess for 25 minutes.

During the recess the members of the French commission took their places at the right of the Vice President's desk, and the Members of the Senate were presented to them.

ADDRESS BY M. VIVIANI.

The VICE PRESIDENT. While the Senate is not in session, the presiding officer has decided to vary the proceedings by asking the French premier to address you very briefly in recess. [Applause.]

M. Viviani thereupon addressed the Senate in French, the translation of which is as follows:

Mr. President and Senators, since I have been granted the supreme honor of speaking before the representatives of the American people, may I ask them first to allow me to thank this magnificent Capital for the welcome it has accorded us? Accustomed as we are in our own free land to popular manifestations, and though we had been warned by your fellow countrymen who live in Paris of the enthusiasm burning in your hearts, we are still full of the emotion raised by the sights that awaited us. I shall never cease to see the proud and stalwart men who saluted our passage; your women, whose grace adds fresh beauty to your city, their arms outstretched, full of flowers; and your children hurrying to meet us as if our coming were looked upon as a lesson for them, all with one accord acclaiming in our perishable persons immortal France. And I predict there will be a yet grander manifestation on the day when your illustrious President, relieved from the burden of power, will come among us bearing the salute of the Republic of the United States to a free Europe, whose foundations from end to end shall be based on right. It is with unspeakable emotion that we crossed the threshold of this legislative palace, where prudence and boldness meet, and that I for the first time in the annals of America, though a foreigner, speak in this Hall which only a few days since resounded with the words of virile force. You have set all the democracies of the world the most magnificent example. So soon as the common peril was made manifest to you, with simplicity and within a few short days, you voted a formidable war credit and proclaimed that a formidable army was to be raised. President Wilson's commentary on his acts, which you made yours, remains in the history of free peoples the weightiest of lessons. Doubtless you were resolved to avenge the insults offered your flag, which the whole world respected; doubtless through the thickness of these massive walls the mournful cry of all the victims that criminal hands hurled into the depths of the sea has reached and stirred your souls, but it will be your honor in history that you also heard the cry of humanity and invoked against autocracy the rights of democracies. And I can only wonder as I speak what, if they still have any power to think, are the thoughts of the autocrats who three years ago against us, three months ago against you, unchained this conflict.

Ah! doubtless they said among themselves that a democracy is an ideal government, that it showers reforms on mankind, that it can in the domain of labor quicken all economic activities. And yet now we see the French Republic fighting in defense of its territory and the liberty of nations and opposing to the avalanche let loose by Prussian militarism the union of all its children who are still capable of striking many a weighty blow. And now we see England, far removed like you from conscription, who has also, by virtue of a discipline all accept, raised from her soil millions of fighting men. And we see other nations accomplishing the same act; and that liberty not only inflames all hearts but coordinates and brings into being all needed efforts. And now we see all America rise and sharpen her weapons in the midst of peace for the common struggle. Together we will carry on that struggle, and when by force we have at last imposed military victory our labors will not be concluded. Our task will be, I quote the noble words of President Wilson, to organize the society of nations. I well know that our enemies, who have never seen before them anything but horizons of carnage, will never cease to jeer at so noble a design. Such has always been the fate of great ideas at their birth; and if thinkers and men of action had allowed themselves to be discouraged by skeptics mankind would still be in its infancy, and we should still be slaves. After material victory we will win this moral victory. We will shatter the ponderous sword of militarism; we will establish guaranties for peace; and then we can disappear from the world's stage, since we shall leave at the cost of our common immolation the noblest heritage future generations can possess. [Loud applause.]

In response to calls for an address, Marshal Joffre said:

I do not speak English. Vive les États Unis!

[Applause.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. As we said, "Hail!" so now we say, "Farewell," and yet again, please God, "Hail!" [Applause.]

The distinguished visitors were then escorted from the Chamber.

INCREASE OF MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3545) to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE obtained the floor.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). The Senator from Illinois will state his point of order.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator from Wisconsin has risen to address the Senate. It is impossible to hear the Senator because of the disorder on the floor and in the galleries. I petition the Chair to exact order of everybody.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order made by the Senator from Illinois is sustained. The Senate will please be in order. Senators will suspend conversation and resume their seats. [After a pause.] The Senator from Wisconsin will proceed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the amendment I have proposed provides for an advisory vote on the part of the qualified electors of the several States upon the following question: "The Government of the United States having declared war against the Government of Germany, shall the United States Government at this time raise an army by draft to send to Europe to prosecute the war?"

The methods by which the advisory vote can be obtained are very simple. This vote could be secured while registration was going forward under the bill, which, according to my amendment, strikes out the draft features and provides for raising the required number of men by voluntary enlistment. Practically no expense would be involved in obtaining the vote, and every voter would be given the opportunity of expressing his opinion upon this most vital question. If the people vote in favor of the draft and of sending the Army to Europe, that closes the discussion. If the friends of this bill are sure that it has the support of the people, they should be the first to agree to this amendment. If the principle of the bill has not the support of the people, it should be abandoned. No harm can come from pursuing the course I propose. The draft features can be quickly added to the volunteer features, which are preserved in the bill by the proposed amendment, if the people vote in favor of the draft, and in the meantime enlistments under the volunteer system will have proceeded. Not a day will have been lost. In a matter of such transcendent importance, where it is proposed to reverse the policy of this Government from its beginning, and upon which the people have never had the opportunity to express themselves in any form, a decent regard for the principle of popular government requires that the question involved in this bill should be submitted to the voters.

The proposed amendment, as I have said, is intended to eliminate from the bill all draft features, except those relating to the National Guard, and adds to the bill a simple, speedy, and inexpensive plan by which the voters of the country may express themselves upon the principle of draft.

This is accomplished by leaving the sections numbered first and second of section 1 of the bill untouched and by slight changes in the language of the bill eliminating the draft features, as indicated on the face of the bill, and providing for voluntary enlistment.

Section 3 of the bill under this plan is necessarily stricken out by the proposed amendment.

All provisions of the bill relating to registration and raising the required number of troops is retained. The bill, if passed in the amended form, would therefore permit of everything being done that would be done under the original bill for a number of weeks, so far as actual raising and equipping the Army is concerned.

The proposed amendment does not disturb the provisions of the subdivision second, in section 1, relating to drafting the National Guard, for the reason that this is substantially the law at the present time, and to suggest disturbing it would raise a question not now necessary to consider.

While the work of voluntary enlistment, equipment, and registration would be going forward under the law if the bill in the amended form was enacted, the provisions with respect to a referendum would become operative, and within 45 days, or less, from the time the bill in its amended form became law we could have the most complete expression of the opinion of the voters of the country on the subject of draft which it would be possible to obtain. This vote is made advisory in order to avoid any possible constitutional difficulty; and there can be little doubt that if the voters express themselves strongly against the draft we would proceed to raise our Army according to the only plan under which we have ever raised an army in this country, namely, by voluntary enlistment. If, however, the voters express themselves in favor of the draft, then it is certain that all substantial opposition to the draft at this time will disappear.

The plan would give the people an opportunity to be heard, and would put at rest any possible criticism which might arise if it is sought to enforce a draft without giving to the voters any opportunity for expression on the subject.

This amendment requires no new machinery to put it into operation. It uses the Census Bureau and the post offices of the country as the agencies of the Government to conduct the advisory vote, and it can be completed within 45 days. The Government Printing Office can supply the necessary ballots within 10 days. They can be delivered at the rate of 1,800,000 per day. As soon as such delivery begins, the Director of the Census can start the distribution, and the whole country can be supplied within the time provided. The Director of the Census can determine the size of the ballot, and thus can order it in a form to permit it to run through the counting machinery, so that the counting can be done rapidly. The result will be ascertained promptly, accurately, and in a way to furnish an authoritative guide to Congress.

Mr. President, for the first time in the history of our Government it is proposed within 30 days after war is declared to raise an army by draft.

In the struggle to perpetuate this Government, when we were in the third year of the Civil War, Lincoln gave his sanction to the draft only when, as he declared, it was no longer possible to secure men by voluntary enlistment.

In the European war now on Canada has not even considered the draft.

Australia submitted the question of drafting men to be sent overseas to the voters of Australia at a special election held for that purpose, and the draft was defeated by more than 60,000 majority.

Commenting upon the result of this referendum vote, the London Times said:

> Naturally there will be some disappointment in this country that Mr. Hughes's policy has not commanded a decisive majority.
> Equally naturally no one will think of questioning the verdict of the people of Australia on an issue which it is wholly for them to decide.

From the Manchester Guardian, published in England, I quote the following comment upon the result of the Australian referendum as to whether draft should be resorted to in Australia for overseas service in France.

> We may take it—

Says the Manchester Guardian—

> that the people of the Dominion will not be compulsorily enlisted. It is the first time in the world's history that a direct vote has been taken on such an issue, and the result is of great importance and interest. Classic history has instances of the direct issue of peace or war being put to peoples, but to refer to the voters in the midst of war the question whether they shall or shall not be conscripted is a precedent that will be of value to democracies for all time. With the imperishable records of Gallipoli and Egypt to her credit, she can afford to reject conscription if she wishes. It is not in a waning enthusiasm for the war that the explanation of this vote lies but in causes less simple but not less vital.

The Canadian Liberal Magazine, January 4, 1917, commenting upon the vote taken in Australia, another colony of the mother country, has this to say:

> Probably in no country and on no issue was ever such tremendous influence brought to bear upon the electorate as was exerted in this Australian referendum on conscription. The leaders of both political parties were in favor of the principle—

Mark you that—

> The leaders of both political parties were in favor of the principle. The churches, irrespective of creed, united in their appeals for it. And yet the measure was defeated decisively. Comment or reflection upon the people's decision is unnecessary.
> Considering what Australia has done to assist in this great war in supplying ships, equipping and sending forward her soldiers, the sacrifices at Gallipoli and in France, contributing her money for all necessary purposes, nobody can think for a moment that her decision in this matter of conscription is due to indifference to the cause for which she, the Empire, and the Allies are fighting.
> In view of the efforts that were made, of the pressure that was exerted by the political leaders of the Commonwealth and from outside by outstanding personalities, it is evident that the instinctive feeling of democracy against compulsion must have a tremendous hold upon the people here.
> There is no more democratic country in the world than Australia. The people cherish free British institutions under which their constitution is formed. They are a thinking people, who reason and decide for themselves.
> When they rejected conscription, they did so because they felt it was the proper action to take in a free democratic country. They may also have resented what might well be considered as outside interference.
> The whole Empire can well take a lesson from their decision.

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch, commenting on the Australian referendum, says:

> The fact that the Australian Government did not dare to put a conscription law in effect without submitting it to a popular vote is immensely significant.
> This first conscription referendum sets a precedent marking progress for democracy.

Mr. President, let us stop just a moment and consider what we are doing here.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. STONE. I desire to ask the Senator if he can tell the Senate just what machinery was provided for taking the referendum in Australia?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have here all the proceedings preliminary to the vote. In this case the vote was taken under authority of law, so that it was binding. The vote which I propose here is only advisory to Congress. Will you not grant the people that much?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. In Australia they have the machinery for a referendum.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, in order to make the RECORD complete, I will print as an appendix the matter collected upon this subject by the Legislative Reference Bureau of the Library of Congress with regard to this whole question.

Mr. President, just a word and I am done. I want to bring to the minds of Senators who listen to me this thought on this amendment before we vote. The bill proposes to draft an army within 30 days after the declaration of war. Never before in the history of this Government was such a thing done. It proposes to draft for service on foreign soil, over-seas service. England does not do that. English colonies nowhere do that. Germany does not do that. When the German Government desired to send troops to China in the Boxer trouble she called for volunteers for over-seas service, and in any war there can be no conscription from the colonies for over-seas service. Her law in that respect is exactly like England's.

Mr. President, I have been unable to find any parallel or precedent for what it is proposed here to do at this time. It is proposed in this free Government to apply the draft system for compulsory over-seas service in foreign lands, and to do it before you have tried to raise an army under a volunteer system.

The advocates of the draft say it is democratic.

The opponents of the draft say it is undemocratic, un-American, unprecedented.

If the majority here who favor the draft truly believe that it is in accord with the spirit of our free institutions, if you really believe that it is democratic in principle, then you should certainly be willing to submit it to a vote of the people. And that, too, when it can be done without delaying the general program which you have mapped out in your bill.

That is all, Mr. President, that I care to say.

APPENDIX.

THE COMMONWEALTH OF AUSTRALIA MILITARY-SERVICE REFERENDUM.

(No. 27 of 1916.)

An act to submit to a referendum a question in relation to military service abroad.

[Assented to Sept. 28, 1916.]

Be it enacted by the King's Most Excellent Majesty, the Senate, and the House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Australia, as follows:

1. This act may be cited as the military service referendum act, 1916, and shall be deemed to have commenced on the 18th day of September, 1916.

2. In this act, unless the contrary intention appears, "member of the forces" means a member of the Commonwealth naval or military forces employed on active service outside Australia or employed on a ship of war, and includes a member of the army medical corps nursing service who is accepted or appointed by the director general of medical services for service outside Australia; "proclaimed subdivision" means a subdivision which is declared by the Governor General by proclamation to be a proclaimed subdivision within the meaning of subsection (4) of section 9 of this act; "the electors" means electors of the Commonwealth, and includes persons qualified to vote under regulations made under section 12 of this act; "the prescribed question" means the question set forth in section 5 of this act; "the referendum" means the submission of the prescribed question to the electors.

3. The chief electoral officer for the Commonwealth shall be charged with the administration of this act.

4. (1) The Governor General shall issue a writ, directed to the chief electoral officer, for the taking of a vote by ballot under this act on the prescribed question.

(2) The writ shall be in accordance with Form B in the schedule and shall appoint a day for the taking of the vote, and shall be returnable within 90 days from the date of issue: Provided, That if at the expiration of 60 days from the date of issue the chief electoral officer certifies that he is satisfied (a) that not more than 2 per cent of the total votes polled are still awaiting scrutiny, and (b) that the result of the referendum can not be affected by the exclusion of the votes which are still awaiting scrutiny, the chief electoral officer may return the writ at the expiration of such period of 60 days, and may, at the conclusion of the scrutiny, notify in the Gazette—

(a) The total number of votes polled in favor of the prescribed question;

(b) The total number of votes polled not in favor of the prescribed question; and

(c) The total number of ballot papers rejected as informal.

5. The prescribed question shall be:

Are you in favor of the Government having in this grave emergency the same compulsory powers over citizens in regard to requiring their military service, for the term of this war, outside of the Commonwealth as it now has in regard to military service within the Commonwealth?

6. The original writ shall be forwarded to the chief electoral officer, who shall forthwith after the receipt thereof—

(a) Forward a copy of it to each Commonwealth electoral officer, and cause a copy of it to be forwarded to each divisional returning officer and assistant returning officer; and

(b) Insert in the Gazette a notification of the receipt and particulars of the writ.

7. The provisions of sections 4, 10 to 14, inclusive, subsection (1) of section 18, sections 19 to 22, inclusive, and 24, and Parts VIII (except section 41) and IX of the referendum (constitution alteration) act 1906–1915, shall, so far as they are not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, apply to the referendum to be held under this act in like manner as they apply to a referendum upon a proposed law for the alteration of the constitution: Provided, That any reference to a proposed law shall be deemed to be a reference to the prescribed question: Provided further, That, notwithstanding anything contained in section 10 A of that act, the following persons shall be disqualified from voting at the referendum:

(a) Any naturalized British subject who was born in any country which forms part of the territory of any country with which Great Britain is now at war: Provided, That this paragraph and subsection (1) of section 9 shall not apply to any naturalized British subject, wherever born, who produces to the presiding officer a certificate signed by the district commandant of a military district, or an officer thereto authorized by him, that that person is a parent of a person who has been or is a member of the forces; and

(b) Any person who is interned in any place of internment.

8. The governor general, or any person authorized by him, may appoint one scrutineer at each polling place, and at each place where the scrutiny is conducted, in the Commonwealth, and the person who in the opinion of the chief electoral officer is authorized by a majority of those members of both houses of the Parliament who are not in favor of the prescribed question may appoint one scrutineer at each such polling place and place.

9. (1) In addition to the questions prescribed by section 141 of the Commonwealth electoral act 1902–1911, the presiding officer may, either of his own motion or at the request of a scrutineer, put to any person claiming to vote at the referendum, and shall put to each person who he has reason to believe was born in any country which forms part of the territory of any country with which Great Britain is now at war, the following question:

Are you a naturalized British subject who was born in any country which forms part of the territory of any country with which Great Britain is now at war?

(2) If any person refuses to answer the question fully, or by his answer shows that he is not entitled to vote at the referendum, his claim to vote shall be rejected.

(3) If any person answers the question in the negative, the presiding officer shall, before permitting him to vote, indorse the ballot paper with the words "Section 9."

(4) If, in the case of any person enrolled in any proclaimed subdivision, the presiding officer has reason to believe that that person is the son or daughter of a person who was born in any country which forms part of the territory of any country with which Great Britain is now at war, the presiding officer may issue to the person a ballot paper indorsed with the words "Section 9."

(5) Any ballot paper issued to an elector in pursuance of either of the last two preceding subsections shall, when completed by the elector, be folded by him and handed to the presiding officer, who without unfolding it shall, in the presence of the elector, place it in the prescribed envelope, fasten the envelope, and place it in the ballot box.

(6) If the elector places the ballot paper in the ballot box without having it inclosed by the presiding officer in the prescribed envelope, the ballot paper shall be disallowed at the scrutiny.

(7) Ballot papers inclosed in envelopes in pursuance of subsection (5) of this section shall not be opened by an assistant returning officer, but shall be forwarded by the assistant returning officer by registered post to the divisional returning officer.

(8) The divisional returning officer shall, as soon as practicable, submit to the prescribed tribunal or tribunals lists of the names, addresses, and occupations of the electors whose votes are inclosed in the envelopes received by him, and shall retain each envelope unopened until the tribunal has made a determination in accordance with the provisions of this section.

(9) The tribunal shall have jurisdiction to determine whether or not each elector whose name is on the list submitted to it is, in its opinion, disloyal; and the members of the tribunal may inform their minds on the subject in such manner as they think fit.

(10) The determination of the tribunal shall be notified to the divisional returning officer of the division in which the elector is enrolled.

(11) If the tribunal determine that an elector is, in its opinion, disloyal, the ballot paper shall be rejected by the individual returning officer without the envelope being opened; otherwise the ballot paper shall be admitted to further scrutiny in the prescribed manner.

10. (1) The ballot papers to be used for the purposes of the referendum may be in accordance with Form C in the schedule.

(2) For the purposes of voting under section 139 of the Commonwealth electoral act, 1902–1911, or of the regulations relating to absent voting made in pursuance of section 139a of that act, or under regulations made under section 12 of this act, the ballot papers to be used for the purposes of the referendum may be in accordance with the forms prescribed by the regulations.

11. (iii) who are not included in the classes of persons disqualified by the second proviso to section 7 of this act, may vote at the referendum.

(2) Subject to the regulations, the regulations under the Commonwealth electoral act, 1902–1911, and under the referendum (constitution alteration) act, 1906–1915, shall, so far as they are applicable, apply to the referendum held under this act in like manner as if that referendum were an election within the meaning of the Commonwealth electoral act, 1902–1911, and a referendum within the meaning of the referendum (constitution alteration) act, 1906–1915.

THE MILITARY SERVICE REFERENDUM ACT, 1916.

State of_____

Directions to voter: The voter should indicate his vote as follows: If he is in favor of the question set forth hereunder, he should make a cross in the square opposite the word "Yes." (Submission of a question to the electors.)

Question: Are you in favor of the Government having, in this grave emergency, the same compulsory powers over citizens in regard to requiring their military service, for the term of this war, outside the Commonwealth, as it now has in regard to military service within the Commonwealth?

☐ Yes.
☐ No.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not rise to support the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin. On the contrary, we have, in my judgment, passed beyond the point where a referendum or advisory vote, if indeed, one were ever practicable, can be taken. I desire, before we finally pass from this important bill, to put into the RECORD what I conceive to be the most conclusive evidence of a total lack of consistency that has ever been displayed in the Senate.

The McKellar amendment, which provided generally for raising by the volunteer plan 500,000 troops, was defeated in the Senate by the arguments of very distinguished Senators. Among those arguments was this one, "That the draft system and the volunteer system can not run along parallel lines; that an army composed in part of volunteers and in part of conscripts is inharmonious and ineffective." That argument was made by the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING], who with great eloquence inveighed against the volunteer system, yet the Senator introduced and had passed an amendment which authorizes the raising of 120,000 volunteers. The Senator from Ohio expressly stated that his purpose in offering the amendment was to provide a plan whereby Theodore Roosevelt could raise that number of men and take them to France. So we find the Senator from Ohio willing to deny to all the rest of the people of the United States the right to volunteer and to deny to all of the States the privilege of raising their proportion of the troops called for by the volunteer system and willing to deny that privilege upon the ground that to mix volunteers and conscripts will bring disorder and destroy or injure the efficiency of the Army. But we find him, after he has taken that position, introducing an amendment to give that privilege to a private citizen of the United States, which he voted to deny to the 48 States of the Union and which he voted to deny to all the other people of the United States.

But, Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio is not more illogical than are certain other Senators. I ask the privilege of printing in the RECORD, in parallel columns, as a part of my remarks, the names of the Senators who voted against the volunteer plan as applying to the country generally, and who then voted for the volunteer plan when it was proposed for the use and benefit of Theodore Roosevelt, a plan to confer a special privilege upon one citizen, as is suggested by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Whatever may be the fate of the amendment which I have offered, I ask the Senator from Missouri if he will not permit me to have a vote upon the amendment before some other subject is taken up for discussion?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am substantially through with my remarks. I have made a request that there be printed in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, in parallel columns, the names of the Senators who voted against the McKellar amendment and who also voted for the Harding amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The names referred to are as follows:

SENATORS WHO VOTED AGAINST THE M'KELLAR AMENDMENT GRANTING THE 48 STATES THE RIGHT TO RAISE VOLUNTEERS.	SENATORS WHO VOTED AGAINST THE M'KELLAR AMENDMENT AND YET VOTED FOR THE HARDING AMENDMENT GRANTING SPECIAL PRIVILEGE TO ROOSEVELT TO RAISE VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have simply this further to say: If any Senator can reconcile to his own conscience the proposition of refusing to permit troops to be raised by the various States by the volunteer plan, and then the conferring of that privilege upon one man in the United States—if Senators can reconcile that to their consciences and their judgments and to their constituencies, well and good. I say it is a glaring example of inconsistency that is very remarkable.

Mr. VARDAMAN and Mr. LA FOLLETTE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi first addressed the Chair.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, unless there is to be some other discussion upon the amendment which I have offered, I beg the Senate to give me a vote upon the amendment.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I was merely going to make that request. I want to have the privilege of voting on the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think we ought to have a quorum here, and so I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I want to make a few remarks on the amendment which has just been proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Very well; I withdraw the suggestion.

Mr. NORRIS. I had just as lief make them now, before the Senator from Oregon suggests the absence of a quorum, as afterwards.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, under any ordinary circumstances, in any case that to me seemed practicable, I would favor an amendment such as that which has been proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin; but, Mr. President, as I look at it——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me to make a demand for the yeas and nays? I should like to get the yeas and nays ordered now, if I may do so.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to the Senator from Wisconsin doing that.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for a yea-and-nay vote on my amendment, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Upon the amendment I ask for a yea-and-nay vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Upon which the Senator from Wisconsin demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. NORRIS. Before that order is entered I should like to address the Senate on the subject.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not want to have the vote taken now, but I desire to ask for the yeas and nays. I should like to have a record vote taken on the amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will get it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is all I ask.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator from Nebraska pardon me for a moment?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to address an inquiry to the Senator from Wisconsin concerning his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield for that purpose?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. As I caught the question which the Senator from Wisconsin proposed to submit to the voters, it is as to whether they favor a draft system to raise an army to send to Europe.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. To send abroad, to send overseas. That is exactly the question which was presented in Australia.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator from Wisconsin, I suppose, recognizes that that embraces two questions: First, whether an army should be sent abroad at all; and, second, whether it is to be raised by draft.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not care to yield the floor further, Mr. President.

Mr. WALSH. I did not ask the Senator to yield the floor. I simply desired to ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to ask whether the Senator from Wisconsin intends to submit that as one question?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I submit it as one question, just as it was submitted in Australia, and just exactly as I think it should be submitted.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, Mr. President, let me repeat my opening statement. If I had an opportunity to vote for a referendum under any plan that I believed to be practicable in a case pending a declaration of war, or a proposition to declare war, where there was no invasion, I should favor it. I myself believe that there ought to be some way devised in every democracy, in every republic, where a referendum vote would be compulsory before a declaration of war could be made by the Government; but, Mr. President, we have declared war against Germany and we are now at war. An army is necessary; money is necessary. Every preparation which we can possibly make must be made, and made as soon as possible. We ought to exert every influence and every power and strain every nerve in order that no stone may be unturned to prosecute this war to the limit, with a view of a successful termination.

I am aware that there is a prohibition in some countries, perhaps in most of them, against conscription for foreign service. If we were not now engaged in war with a foreign country, where foreign service, if there is any service that can be rendered, must be rendered, and it were a question of establishing a permanent policy of our Government, I would vote for such a prohibition in our country; but we have declared war against a foreign country, knowing that it was impossible, under any conditions now existing or which can possibly exist in the near future, for that country to invade ours. We did that with our eyes open, and the question presented by the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin, it seems to me, contains in reality two propositions. Under ordinary circumstances I should favor them both, but under existing circumstances it seems to me at least one of them ought not to be considered by Congress. The vote which under this proposed referendum is to be submitted is as follows:

> The Government of the United States having declared war against the Government of Germany, shall the United States Government at this time raise an army by draft to send to Europe to prosecute the war?

As I look at it, there are two propositions embraced in that language: First, shall "we raise an army by draft"? As everybody here knows, I am opposed to raising an army in that way. I should like to submit that question, and probably it ought to be submitted to the people under different conditions than exist now, and I think I would vote to submit that question even now if in the meantime we could provide the machinery to go on with the raising of the army. But the further question is presented, after we have raised an army, shall we send it to Europe? On that question I want to consider the constitutional prerogatives of the Congress and of the President. I have been one of those Senators who have stood always, I think, to preserve the constitutional prerogatives of Congress, and I brought upon myself the displeasure of many people, both inside and outside of this body, because I did so.

The Constitution provides that war can only be declared by Congress; that Congress alone can raise armies. It is the only power in our Government that can legally do either one of those two things; but the Constitution further provides, Mr. President, that the President of the United States shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy; and while I have been jealous of the constitutional prerogatives of Congress, I am just as anxious to preserve in full the constitutional prerogatives of the President of the United States.

Let us take the present conditions. Congress, exercising its constitutional prerogative, declared war against the Imperial German Government. It is necessary for Congress to raise an army. When that army is raised, under the Constitution it will be under the command of the President of the United States. I am unwilling by any congressional action to limit the President of the United States in any reasonable discretion that he ought to have in the command of that army in this war. I am unwilling by congressional enactment to take away from the President any discretion that he may have in conducting that war. I think the Constitution places that power in his hands; and it is by his discretion and his judgment that the operations of the army that we provide must be governed. I would be unwilling to say by any act of mine now that under the present existing circumstances the President should be prohibited from sending an army to Europe. I would not, on the other hand, command him to send an army there. I want him to exercise the full power the Constitution gives him as to how he shall fight the war, where he shall fight it, and when he shall send an army to Europe, if it shall be necessary to send one there.

It seems to me it must follow, war having been declared against Germany at a time when everybody knows Germany can not get at us in this country, that, if we mean anything by it, we mean that we are going to at least give to the President as Commander in Chief of the Army the discretion to take the Army over to Europe whenever, in his judgment, the proper time arrives.

It is for that reason that, much as I dislike to so vote, I can not vote for this amendment, although it embodies a principle of government of which I think a great deal, and which I should like to see enacted into permanent law, so that it would be impossible for war to be declared by the Government, unless in case of invasion, except by a referendum vote of the people who have to do the fighting.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I beg to impose upon the Senate for a few moments. My object is to invite attention to the real effect of what we would do if the proposed substitute offered by the able Senator from Wisconsin were adopted.

Mr. President, no one can have a higher regard for the motives which inspire the Senator from Wisconsin than I. No one more than I respects the need in this hour of great deference to be paid to the popular will; no one more than I fears the consequences which will surely follow if ever we establish the aspect of indifference to the public on the one hand or defiance of their wishes on the other.

Mr. President, if a system of laws prevailed in this Government under which questions of policy of every nature could be submitted by referendum, the suggestion proposed by the eminent Senator from Wisconsin would have an immediate propriety. The Governments of Switzerland and Australia have kept in view that the very emergencies surrounding us were the things concerning which they legislated—in which they provided for referendum. But the United States has not so done. Therefore may I address myself to the Senator from Wisconsin in connection with this thought: This Government having declared war, the discretion having been vested in the President of the United States as to the manner of conducting the war with the aids provided for him by our law, to wit, the Army and the Navy, is not the real question before us, not alone to be determined to-day, but every day hereafter during this conflict, is as to who shall fight this war—those who by our law have been constituted the directors and commanders of it—the President and the Chiefs of the Army and the Navy—or shall it be Congress? The people have never vested in Congress the privilege of fighting wars nor of directing the methods of campaign. They have specifically, as the earnest Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has alluded, been vested in the executive officers—these discretions.

Now, I submit to the able Senator from Wisconsin a question: In his judgment, as a student and expounder of constitutional law, does he believe he can repeal the United States Constitution by referendum to localities? Surely, that would be the effect; and once we enter upon that field where would we end? The able Senator from Wisconsin, like myself, is an advocate of that theory, well set forth by Washington in his farewell address, that we comply with and adhere to those specific prescriptions of government which set forth the manner and method by which we shall make constitutional changes; otherwise, we would have riot, insurrection, and revolution from despotic or irrational action. Mr. President, the only way to amend the Constitution and change it is to submit to the people the proposed amendment. Let them compare these propositions with the reasons being brought forth for the amendment proposed—then we adopt or reject it.

Now, sir, the question, therefore, for us to-day, and for the able Senator from Wisconsin, is, Shall we encourage the President of the United States by our aid and sustain the officials who are aiding him by our assistance, or shall Congress present the spectacle to these visitors of the Congress of the United States whom we have honored to-day, the marshal of France and its statesmen, while we are at war, merely to gratify a most respectable and commendable abstract principle of government of haggling over the measure how to fight the war and obstruct the Commander in Chief in the prosecution of it?

If the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin will reflect a moment, he will realize that to submit these questions to a referendum is to temporarily suspend the operation of enlistments, and then, however the questions are decided, we would have dissatisfaction in the communities. I invite the able Senator's attention to the thought that if to local communities where views such as he has might prevail we once establish the principle that questions of this kind can be submitted to the ballot box, may I not ask the Senator will he not meet this situation: Before the constituency can decide how we should go to war must they not first decide what are the causes of the war and must not all the reasons for the war be presented to them? Then, second, must they not decide what are the grievances, and must not these grievances then be put before them? Must not the secrets of the Government then be submitted to them? Must not all the confidences of the Nation be transmitted? And then, Mr. President, may I not say, as I conclude, would we not in that case then invite those on the Atlantic coast, where, the able Senator says, are great influences of the public press that dominate, who are demanding war and conscription—will they not turn to the other direction and use their power to defeat the will of those who want peace or a volunteer army?

Sir, let me hope that we may lay aside for the while these very respectable propositions, these abstract differences, divine, almost, in their humanity, yet now impracticable of execution, and throw a united support behind the President, that we may not present the spectacle to the world now at a time when we are needing armies, when our men are being blown to pieces on the sea, that we haggle over and hesitate to put all the strength that the law can give behind the Commander in Chief to the end that, as to the war, if 'twere done, then, sir, "'twere well it were done quickly," so as to bring quick success to American arms. These reasons I now give are those why I can not support the proposition of the distinguished Senator. What is needed now is action—and again, action!

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the gifts of the Senator from Illinois are exceptional. The fluency with which he speaks is unrivaled, but sometimes it seems to me that that very achievement and talent permit him to obscure the real issue presented. This is not a question to be submitted to the people, as to whether we are to go to war, as the Senator says. That has been determined under the Constitution. This question which it is proposed to submit to the people is to have no binding effect upon Congress, except as it may inform them as to the judgment of the people of the country with respect to drafting an army to send abroad. That is the limitation as proposed in the amendment which I have offered. It does not impinge upon the Constitution, Mr. President. There is not any question about the President being Commander in Chief and having the right to direct the operations of the armies and the navies after they are in the field and upon the seas. But, Mr. President, Congress has a control and a responsibility with respect to puting the armies in the field, to furnish the means which shall sustain them there; and, Mr. President, when there is involved in that a great foreign policy, Congress is still charged with its responsibility.

Mr. President, this amendment simply proposes that we shall submit to the people of this country, not the question of fighting this European war—we have already declared for that—not the question of sending an army to Europe to fight, as is indicated by the position announced here by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], but the question as to whether that army shall be a drafted or a volunteer army. On that question only is it proposed to take, under this amendment, an expression of opinion of the voters of this country. That is all there is proposed here. Are Senators afraid of an expression of opinion upon that question? If you are, vote against it; if you are not, let it go to the people, and let them say whether men ought to be roped and taken into the trenches in Europe or whether they are to be permitted to volunteer, as in every war which has been fought under our flag from the beginning down to now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when Mr. GOFF's name was called). I desire to announce the absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], on account of illness. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when Mr. HUGHES's name was called). I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. HUGHES] on account of illness.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when Mr. LANE's name was called). I desire to announce, and have the announcement stand for the day, that my colleague [Mr. LANE] is detained from the Senate by illness.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 4, nays 68, as follows:

So Mr. LA FOLLETTE's amendment was rejected.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I move to strike out the word "morally," on page 22, line 23 of the bill, and to insert in place of that word the word "mentally."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Before the word "deficient," on page 22, line 23, it is proposed to strike out the word "morally" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "mentally."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator that he include in that amendment the word "or," so that it will not be conjunctive? If he does that, I shall have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; that is a good suggestion. The Senator has no objection to the amendment in that form?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. REED. Let us hear it read as it will read if amended.

The SECRETARY. On page 22, line 23, it is proposed to strike out the words "and morally" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "or mentally," so that, if amended, it will read:

and those found to be physically or mentally deficient.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, after the word "prescribed" and the semicolon, on page 21, line 22, I move to strike out the following words:

and nothing in this act contained shall be construed to require or compel any person to serve in any of the forces herein provided for who is found to be a member of any well-organized religious sect or organization, at present organized and existing, whose creed forbids its members to participate in war in any form and whose religious convictions are against war or participation therein in accordance with the creed of said religious organization.

Mr. President, I have petitions from members of certain religious organizations in my own State asking me to support this provision in the bill. It is perfectly proper that I should say to them at this time that, while respecting their beliefs, I can not bring myself to believe that any citizen of the United States who enjoys the liberty of our institutions and the protection of this great Government has a right to say that he will not raise his hand in defense of the Government which supports and protects him and his family and his life and his property. Therefore, I, as one, want the opportunity to put myself on record against any proposition that will excuse any American citizen from rallying to the defense of his country as long as he calls upon this country to defend his rights.

Mr. President, I should like a yea-and-nay vote upon this amendment even though I should be the sole Member of the United States Senate who will vote for it. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, it will be recalled that during the discussion of the Senate bill last week I offered an amendment which was an addition to the clause which the Senator from North Dakota now proposes to eliminate from the bill. I then took occasion to state that I did not approve of the exemption, and for the reasons—although I did not state them so fully or so clearly as the Senator from North Dakota—which he has just assigned for his amendment. But I could not reconcile the clause in the section with any principle that would justify it so long as it limited its operations to those citizens entertaining conscientious scruples who were also affiliated with religious denominations believing as they did upon that subject.

There are in America many very sincere and conscientious men totally opposed to bearing arms—so much so, indeed, that I question whether, if they are conscripted, they will make good soldiers—whose convictions are just as strong and just as abiding as the convictions of those who belong to the several denominations a part of whose creed is against war in any of its forms.

I shall vote for this amendment because I think the Senator is fundamentally right in his objection to the provision, in view of the fact that we are about to substitute conscription for the hitherto prevailing method of recruiting for our armies.

Let me say, Mr. President, that I do this in no invidious spirit whatever. I believe it will perfect the bill. I made as constant and persistent opposition to the enactment into the laws of the country of the conscription system at this time as I knew how to make, and the Senate, by an overwhelming majority, decided otherwise. Now, Mr. President, I have always tried during my life to be what is commonly called a good loser. I believe in the action of the majority. The bill has been passed by the Senate by an almost unanimous vote. I accept their verdict, and propose to do all I can in my humble sphere of official duty to make this system as effective as possible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). I announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan] and his pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. This announcement may stand for the day.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. THOMPSON. I have been requested to announce that the senior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] is detained on official business.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (after having voted in the negative). I find that my pair has not voted. I transfer the pair to the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 54, as follows:

So Mr. McCUMBER's amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, we are very anxious to have this bill disposed of as soon as we can. Some of the amendments that have been proposed are amendments which were suggested when the Senate bill was before the Senate, and were discussed at length and disposed of then. I may therefore feel impelled to move to lay on the table amendments that cover the subjects that were discussed when the other bill was before the Senate.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, before the bill is finally disposed of I want to say just a word in explanation of my own position with reference to an amendment which I had intended to offer before the final disposition of the bill. I want to ask the Secretary kindly to read the amendment, as I have changed it somewhat. It is a very short amendment, and I shall take only a few minutes to discuss it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill the following:

That for the purpose of conserving, during the present war, all agricultural food products, and to prohibit the manufacture of said food products into alcoholic liquors, it shall be unlawful during such period for any person, firm, corporation, or association to use for manufacture into alcohol or alcoholic liquors any cereals, vegetables, fruits, or any agricultural food product: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit the Government of the United States, through the Secretary of Agriculture, from issuing to any person, firm, corporation, or association a license to use any such agricultural food products in the manufacture of alcohol for use in the manufacture of high explosives, or for mechanical, medicinal, or sacramental purposes, or for any other purpose necessary to carry on the war: Provided, however, That the manufacture, sale, or gift of any such alcohol or alcoholic liquors for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

That any person, firm, corporation, or association, who shall violate the provisions of this act shall be guilty of felony, and shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment at hard labor not exceeding one year, or both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, the State which I in part have the honor to represent is a purely agricultural State. I realize, Mr. President, that it might be argued that a bill of this kind would limit consumption, and in that way affect the interests and the welfare of the people of the State in proportion to the amount of grain used for the manufacture of grain into alcohol. But, Mr. President, I am willing to take the responsibility upon myself and say that my people, regardless of this selfish interest, are ready to enact a law making it unlawful to take any of the cereals produced by the people of my State for the purpose of manufacturing them into alcoholic liquors.

However, I realize that at this time the Senate is unwilling to put the amendment upon this bill. I believe it ought to go upon this bill for two reasons. The first and a very important one is the conservation of food products. But the fundamental reason is that now would be the proper time to stop the manufacture of alcohol and alcoholic liquors for beverage purposes, at least during this war. It is my opinion that if that were done the Government of the United States during the time this unfortunate war is to continue would learn a lesson and that we never would permit anyone within the borders of our country to again manufacture alcohol or alcoholic liquors for beverage purposes.

Mr. President, this amendment or bill was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I am a member of that committee, and I wish to say that the chairman of the committee has been kind enough to appoint a subcommittee to consider it either as a separate bill or as an amendment to be offered to some of the bills which must necessarily come before this body very soon.

I shall therefore not ask the Senate at this time to embody this provision into this war measure.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. GRONNA. I do.

Mr. CURTIS. I understand the Senator's bill is pending as a separate measure before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator that it is pending there as a separate measure.

Mr. CURTIS. May I ask the Senator, as he is a member of that committee, whether any effort is being made to urge its early consideration?

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator there is an effort being made, and that a subcommittee has been appointed.

Mr. CURTIS. I am in favor of the bill and I should like to see it reported as soon as possible. I hope the Senator will urge it.

Mr. GRONNA. I am very glad to hear the Senator from Kansas say that. Of course I can not prejudge the action of the committee, but I believe the committee will report out some sort of a bill. It may not report out this particular bill, but it will report out some bill bearing upon this important subject.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. GRONNA. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I should like to inquire of the Senator if he really thinks there is a likelihood that we shall have legislation of this character enacted at the present session unless it is put on a bill of this character?

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator from Mississippi that I have been assured there will be given support either for this measure or as a separate measure upon some of the conservation bills which will shortly come before the Senate.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I am sorry the Senator is not going to permit the amendment go to a vote. I favor it for two reasons. First, the grain that is consumed in making alcoholic stimulants will be needed to nourish the human body. I am in favor of it for another reason. I should like to stop the traffic and prevent the poisoning of the human body by the pernicious stuff made of the grain. I do not think there is a better time to take radical action on this question than right now. We all realize that alcohol kills more people than bullets, it causes more unhappiness, blights more lives, frustrates more ambition, and, in fact, has done more harm to mankind than all other agencies for evil combined.

I am glad to have had the privilege of expressing my approval of the amendment and my hearty condemnation of the nefarious liquor traffic.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to his colleague?

Mr. GRONNA. In just a moment. I know how sincere the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] is in his advocacy of measures of this kind, but I can assure the Senator that he and other Senators will be given an opportunity to vote upon it. I now yield to my colleague.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to suggest to my colleague that I think he is taking too pessimistic a view of the possibility of getting the amendment upon this bill; and I would say to him that, I believe, taking the vote of the Senate the other day, if he would amend his amendment in such a way as to provide that alcohol produced from any of these food products shall not be sold to any Member of Congress during this war, he would receive the support of the Senate of the United States. As such a proposition was voted on affirmatively only the other day, and acquiesced in by the chairman of the committee, I see no reason why the same Senate would not pass the same amendment again to-day.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. GRONNA. I will yield in just a moment. I want to assure my colleague that I shall not withdraw the amendment if it is the wish of the Senate to vote upon it now. I shall be very glad to have them do so, but I have been told by Senators who are friends of prohibition that it would be unwise to ask that it should go upon this particular bill, and it is for that reason and that reason only that I thought perhaps this was not the proper time to offer it. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think I ought to say at this moment that I offered an amendment substantially like the one just presented by the Senator from North Dakota to the collection of bills that is known in a general way as the espionage bill. It is a collection of some 14 bills which have no relation whatever to each other, but which do have in a vague way a relation to the war. I believe that it was a proper subject to be considered in connection with that collection of bills.

If the amendment presented by the Senator from North Dakota can be added to the Army bill I should be very glad, but if it is not added to the Army bill I want to assure the Senate that I intend to offer it as an independent chapter in the collection of legislation to which I have referred, and I will do my very best to get a vote upon it. I do hope that it will be adopted as a part of that bill.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. GRONNA. I yield.

Mr. MYERS. I ask the Senator from North Dakota why he thinks the Senate would not take kindly to this amendment at this time?

Mr. GRONNA. I want to be very frank with the Senators. I have been so told by several Senators whom I know are sincerely in favor of national prohibition and in favor of conservation; but so many Senators have expressed a willingness to vote upon it that I shall offer it as an amendment to section 13, at the end of the prohibition section.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to say if these gentlemen are, in the words of the Senator from North Dakota, "very sincerely in favor of prohibition," it seems to me they would vote for this amendment, and would be glad to have an opportunity to do so. I think quite a lot of them would like to vote for it, and I hope the Senator will not withdraw his amendment. He can only find out how it will be received by offering it and letting it come to a vote. That is the only practical test. I am told that flour is now bringing $16 a barrel.

Mr. GRONNA. That is true.

Mr. MYERS. Two or three years ago it was bringing $6 a barrel. Wheat is over $3 a bushel and there is grave prediction that a serious shortage of food will confront the people of this country before the grain crop of 1917 is manufactured into flour; that the people of this country will feel the pinch of hunger, let alone the people of the entente allies in Europe. In face of that situation to think of turning millions of bushels of this year's wheat crop into whisky is absurd.

I do not think the Senator ought to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I agree with every word that the Senator from Montana has said; and I will offer my amendment, to be inserted at the end of section 13.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. GRONNA. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I just want to say that I think I am as earnestly in favor of the proposition submitted by the Senator from North Dakota as any Senator here, and I am just as much in favor of prohibiting the liquor traffic as any Senator on this floor.

I think, Mr. President, it would be very unwise for the friends of temperance to urge this amendment upon this bill. We have a prohibition provision in the bill, and I think it is very properly there, because it deals directly with the soldiers; and, while I should like to see the Senate go much further on this bill, I can see where some of the friends of temperance could justify themselves in voting against this amendment upon the bill; and in opening the matter up we would probably have a prolonged debate.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator from Washington to point out to me why there should be any opposition to this particular amendment as a prohibition measure?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Not as a prohibition measure; but I can see reasonable grounds for opposing an attempt to put upon this Army bill, looking to the raising of an Army promptly, a general provision to further the cause of prohibition. I can see——

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator must admit that this would be a very effective provision.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes. I am in favor of it; but the Senator can see what objection would be offered to a resolution providing for a constitutional amendment being inserted on a bill of this kind. That would be a prohibition measure, and one which I would be in favor of, but it would hardly be applicable to a bill of this character.

We have a prohibition provision that, as I said a moment ago, is clearly applicable to this bill. It prevents the sale of liquor to soldiers in uniform and at forts and military camps and posts, giving the President additional power to surround the Army with prohibition safeguards.

That is as far, it might be said, as we are justified in going in a bill of this character. I believe if this amendment is submitted to a vote it would not command the strength of the temperance forces in the Senate, yet the vote that is cast for it will be heralded abroad as the strength of the temperance forces in the Senate, when it will not represent the real temperance sentiment here.

Now, as the Senator has suggested, there is a bill going to come in here with reference to the food supply and its conservation, and the amendment of the Senator is in every sense applicable to a bill of that character. I can see no reason why upon a proposition of that kind the real friends of temperance should vote against the Senator's amendment.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator from Washington if the same argument could not be used against this amendment on a conservation bill? A conservation bill, of course, means the conserving of food, but not prohibition.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I was just saying I do not think the same argument would apply to that bill as applies to this, because what the Senator proposes is one of the wisest methods of conserving the food supply of this country. Every article of food that is consumed in the manufacture of liquor for beverage purposes does not conserve the food at all; it simply wastes it.

Mr. GRONNA. Does not the Senator recognize the fact that there is to a certain extent a provision for prohibition in this very bill?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; I said that; and I think the provision that is in it is clearly applicable to the real purposes of the bill, which is to form an army.

Mr. GRONNA. It only applies to a certain class, of course; it applies only to soldiers.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It only applies to soldiers in the Army. I merely wish to suggest this matter. As a friend of temperance, I shall vote for the Senators' amendment, of course; but I want to say that the vote upon the amendment will not represent the full temperance vote in the Senate. I think it is really unwise to present it now.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I shall not further delay the Senate, so far as I am concerned, in discussing the measure; but from the expressions which have been made to me and the expressions which have been made on this floor, I can not now withdraw it, and I will simply ask that we have a vote upon it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I do not think the bill ought to be encumbered with this amendment. I am in entire accord with the Senator from Washington. Inasmuch as it was discussed when the bill was before the Senate the first time, I feel it to be my duty to move that the amendment be laid on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon moves that the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota be laid on the table.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. GRONNA. I call for a division.

On a division the amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report it.

The SECRETARY. On page 29, line 15, after the word "direct," insert the following:

Provided, That the President is hereby authorized to accept for foreign service a company composed of members of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company of Boston, Mass., such company to be raised, equipped, and transported at the expense of said organization, and to be subject to such conditions as the Secretary of War may prescribe.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, if that amendment is adopted, it is the purpose of this organization, as the amendment states, to organize, equip, and pay the transportation of a company to go to London and to join the Honorable Artillery Company of London in the trenches. These organizations are the two oldest military organizations in the world. The Honorable Artillery Company of London is 370 years old, in continuous service. The Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company of Boston, which was a direct offshoot of the London company, is 269 years old. It is very nearly a hundred years older than any other military organization in America.

I do not know what the Secretary of War or the President, who will have full power in this matter, will decide is a proper course to take, but it has been brought to my attention by these men, who represent those who in the past have served in all our wars and furnished officers enough in the Civil War to officer several regiments. They are among the best citizens of Massachusetts. They do not ask any expenditure on the part of the Government whatever. I hope the amendment will be accepted and brought to the attention of the proper authorities.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. In view of the fact, Mr. President, that we have that question in the section proposed to be amended, so far as I am concerned I am willing to let the amendment go in and take it up in conference.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am not only astonished but appalled to find that the Senator from Massachusetts who has insisted upon the floor that the only proper way to raise forces in the present war is by conscription should now come forward not only with a volunteer proposition but a rich man's volunteer proposition.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I believe I am the only New England Senator who voted in favor of giving the people of this country an opportunity to enlist, and I am not appalled so much as I am gratified to learn that I am going to have an associate in favor of that system, so there will be two New England Senators instead of one.

Mr. REED. Of course, the viewpoint determines everything. I am not appalled at seeing a recruit, a volunteer, coming back to the old fundamentals, but I am appalled to find a Senator usually so logical as the Senator from Massachusetts at such utter war with himself or with the position he took a day or two ago.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, just a word more.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield further to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. In view of the fact that I have been very seriously criticized and excoriated because of my vote on that proposition, I really sympathize with my friend the Senator from Massachusetts when he proposes to get into the same class.

Mr. REED. The difference, as I understand it, is this: The ordinary volunteer who has nothing to give but his life is rejected with scorn and contumely. He is not regarded as a fit person to defend his Government or to carry its flag. Accordingly we are to have conscription—forced service—but according to the philosophy or by the philosophy of the Senator from Massachusetts if a man has money enough to pay his own expenses, or if he is to be financed by some wealthy society, he becomes a very great asset as a volunteer.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. Does it occur also to the Senator that that is the identical class of men whom we were told last week were so necessary to fill the many desirable positions of officers, and that we should not sacrifice them upon the field of battle as volunteers in the ranks?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to ask the Senator if he has any knowledge that the particular company which the Senator from Massachusetts desires shall have the privilege of volunteering in this war are of the age to be conscripted? Are they just some conscripts or prospective conscripts who are going to be given the privilege of volunteering, who are to be permitted to do the criminal act of volunteering, or what are the facts and circumstances surrounding this peculiar company by which they should be given this great privilege?

Mr. REED. I understand the men themselves are not so very old, but the organization is exceedingly ancient. Of course we must assume that these gentlemen coming from Boston, where all men are learned, must possess learning sufficient to qualify them to be officers. The fact that they are able to pay their own expenses, or to have them paid, would seem to put them in a class with those who are to be requisitioned for important work in the civil life of the country. So it is proposed at once to violate the principle that only conscripts are fit to serve in the war; second, we are to take in conscripts who are of any age apparently, for there is no age limit mentioned; third, we are to take in conscripts who are undoubtedly qualified to be officers in the Army; finally, you remember in the debates we were to have only one class of soldiers; all must be equal, all must be obtained in the same way, and hence conscription was necessary. You all remember that. Now, it is proposed that we shall have conscripts for the plain, common people, volunteers for the benefit of men or of one man of political eminence, and finally another and a third class of volunteers who are composed of the class able to finance themselves.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has not the Senator overlooked another class, those who were given home duty down on the Texas border. For that class I notice the Senator from Massachusetts also voted.

Mr. REED. There is the Texas ranger class, and then there are several other classes. They, however, I think are to be drafted. There is the class which is to be drafted for partial military service.

The astonishing thing of all is that the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, who stood here and fought more gallantly than ever Trojan battled to keep everything out of the bill except the men who are dragged into the service and to make the Army a conscript army, now offers to accept this amendment. Would the chairman of the committee accept an amendment now to the effect that the State of Missouri might raise her quota by the volunteer system, just to put the State on an equality with Mr. Roosevelt and with this ancient and honorable order the Senator from Massachusetts speaks for?

I do not want to delay the passage of the bill, but since the Senator is accepting amendments I would like to be permitted to put in an amendment providing that the sovereign State of Missouri, with three and a half millions of people, might be permitted to raise its quota by the volunteering process.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the mere acceptance of a proposed amendment or of an amendment to a bill at this stage of the proceedings does not always express the deep convictions of the committee or of the chairman of the committee. We want to get through with this bill. Mr. President, you heard one of the distinguished Senators who has been in the Senate for 25 years say the other day, "I will accept anything and let it go to the committee of conference, and it will die a cruel death." Accepting this amendment does not commit me or the members of the committee to any particular course.

Mr. REED. That must be a very astonishing statement to the Senator from Massachusetts, assuming that the Senator from Massachusetts is in earnest.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment to come immediately after the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts which is now pending.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That would be an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. McKELLAR. No, sir; there is only one——

Mr. WARREN. Oh, no; the whole matter is in amendment; the Senate bill is an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts is to me very gratifying, and I shall vote for it with a great deal of pleasure if I have an opportunity; but my pleasure in hearing the amendment read is brought about very largely by the fact that the papers yesterday reported that a very eminent Senator said that the draft proposition being adopted would do away with sentimentalism in the matter of raising armies to conduct the war. I do not know whether that report was correct or not. I am inclined to believe that that could not have been correct, and in that belief I am even more gratified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, however men may differ as to whether I have fought a good fight in opposing the conscription system, the result by so great a majority in its favor seems to conclude that question. No man will say that I have not "kept the faith," that I have not stood by the volunteer system to the "last ditch," and then voted against the bill which abrogates that system. It seems to me that the time has come now when we have found what we think ought to be done, and that we ought to do it without any further delay. I hope this matter will be finished finally and at once.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, a number of persons inside the Chamber and out have suggested to me the propriety of offering an amendment to this bill, which I will do in order to test the feeling of the Senate, because the question, in one form or another, will be discussed quite seriously when we get into conference. I should like to have the advice of the Senate regarding it; and to that end I propose the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 21, line 24.

I offer this amendment, Mr. President, for the purpose of getting the matter before the Senate. If it happens to be adopted, it will give the conferees between the House and the Senate an opportunity to discuss the whole situation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 21, line 24, after the word "who," it is proposed to insert "is found, under such regulations as the President shall prescribe, to have in fact and in truth conscientious objections to participating in war as an actual combatant, or who," so that it will read:

> And nothing in this act contained shall be construed to require or compel any person to serve in any of the forces herein provided for who is found, under such regulations as the President shall prescribe, to have in fact and in truth conscientious objections to participating in war as an actual combatant, or who is found to be a member of any well-recognized religious sect or organization—

And so forth.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the chairman of the committee, does this amendment which is proposed represent the views of the committee or is it offered by the Senator individually?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I stated to the Senate that I had been requested by some Members of the Senate and by many persons outside of the Senate, who have been before the committee from time to time, to propose such an amendment. I do so because there is a very deep feeling on the subject. That has been evinced in the hearings before the committee on more than one occasion. I desire to have the advice of the Senate on it.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon to explain just what kind of people this amendment would protect against service? I know the amendment says those who have conscientious scruples; but does the Senator understand that to mean that any man in any vocation or business, one who is of proper military age and strength, can evade service by simply making an affidavit that he has conscientious scruples against becoming a soldier in the ranks? I should like to ask the Senator to say, if that should be the rule, if it would not open a very wide door for men to escape the service?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, there are a large number of people in this country who have these convictions on the subject. I stated here the other day that the Presbyterians, as a rule, do not oppose war; the Presbyterian ministry do not oppose war; they have no scruples upon the subject; and yet I was impressed by the argument made by a Presbyterian minister from New York before our committee representing a large body of people. I am satisfied from his testimony before the committee that he would rather be shot than to go to war in any form, and yet men of that class are bound to be small in numbers in the very nature of things. They will be engaged in other occupations, where they will be as useful, probably, as the men who are actually in the trenches doing the fighting. They will be needed in agriculture; they will be needed in other work, which will add much to the resources on which an army depends.

The amendment proposes to leave it to the President to adopt some rule or regulation by which the tribunal before whom these men register can be governed.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Oregon a question. I assume from the Senator's statement that he wishes to have it understood that this amendment is not offered on behalf of the committee and that it has not the indorsement of the committee?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I stated that.

Mr. WARREN. I want to ask the Senator a further question. Does not the Senator believe that the permission given to the President to excuse from draft such persons is sufficient to excuse, we will say, the Presbyterian minister to whom he refers or the minister of any other church, as his business is perhaps as necessary for the country as is the business of a man engaged in some trade?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I question if the authority that is now in the bill is broad enough to authorize the President to take that step.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I want to agree with the chairman of the committee that there are a great many people in this country who have conscientious scruples about entering into this war. There were a great many such in the Northern States during the Civil War. We called them "copperheads" at that time. I do not know what more pleasant and euphonious name would be given to them in this great world war; but I appreciate the fact that there are a great many of them who would find their consciences very much lacerated if they were called upon to serve their country in this war.

To verify what I have said, I desire to state that there was a little meeting of a certain class of these citizens over in Newark, N. J.—I think it was yesterday—and this is what the New York Tribune says of them, under the proper headline, "Hoboes Vow Not to Fight." Under that headline I read as follows:

> "I promise to be kind and courteous in my treatment of my fellows, and not to take up firearms or the tools of production against my fellow workingmen."
>
> This is the pledge which all hoboes take when joining the International Brotherhood Welfare Association, and they proclaim triumphantly it makes them all "conscientious objectors" and exempts them from draft.
> A May Day meeting of the tramps will be held to-day in Newark, when their attitude toward the war will be discussed.

Mr. President, they will all have conscientious scruples about entering into this war.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. Just a moment. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] is not in error when he says that there are a great many such people. There is just one place where that kind of people belong, and that is in the trenches, at the front, making them serve their country.

I am against your "conscientious-scruples" proposition when it comes to the service of the country.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator from North Dakota think that if this Ancient Order of Hoboes—I do not know that I get their name correctly——

Mr. McCUMBER. I should have to read the article over again to give the name.

Mr. THOMAS. If they were to unite with some religious organization expressing the same sentiments with regard to war, they would then be exempt under the proviso which the Senator unsuccessfully endeavored to expunge from the bill?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, a part of their religion is that they will not work, and a part of their religion is that they will not fight. They all come under the provision contained in this proposition.

Mr. THOMAS. It may be that that kind of an organization is a religious one whose article of faith is opposition to war.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment and ask a conference with the House on the bill and the amendment, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. HITCHCOCK, and Mr. WARREN conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. In this connection, I move to reconsider the votes by which the Senate passed the bill (S. 1871) to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the bill be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

ENLISTMENTS IN FOREIGN ARMIES.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2893) to amend section 10 of chapter 2 of the Criminal Code.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. What is that bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. It is a bill to allow Frenchmen in our country to enlist in the French Army and Englishmen to enlist in the English Army.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is not the so-called espionage bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; I have not yet called up that bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2893) to amend section 10 of chapter 2 of the Criminal Code, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 10 of chapter 2 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 10. Whoever, within the territory or jurisdiction of the United States, enlists or enters himself, or hires or retains another person to enlist or enter himself, or to go beyond the limits or jurisdiction of the United States with intent to be enlisted or entered in the service of any foreign prince, state, colony, district, or people as a soldier or as a marine or seaman on board of any vessel of war, letter of marque, or privateer shall be fined not more than $1,000 and imprisoned not more than three years: Provided, That this section shall not apply to citizens or subjects of any country engaged in war with a country with which the United States is at war, unless such citizen or subject of such foreign country shall hire or solicit a citizen of the United States to enlist or go beyond the jurisdiction of the United States with intent to enlist or enter the service of a foreign country. Enlistments under this proviso shall be under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of War."

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, this bill has passed the other House unanimously. The Judiciary Committee of the Senate has reported it favorably, and I do not think there is objection to it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator, in a few words, state exactly what is proposed to be accomplished by the bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. Under our Criminal Code no citizen of France, for instance, living in this country could enlist in the French Army, and no Englishman living in the United States could enlist in the English Army. Under the proviso which has been added to the section, and which is the real amendment, Frenchmen living here and Englishmen living here can enlist, respectively, in the French and English Armies. Of course they can not enlist in our Army.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does it propose that recruiting officers shall come over here from those countries?

Mr. OVERMAN. There is no provision about that. It provides that the enlistments may be made under regulations established by the Secretary of War. I desire to say this measure is requested by the representatives of the great countries who are here now, and they desire the speedy enactment of such legislation. They are of the opinion that they can raise perhaps two or three hundred thousand men in this country who would not enter our Army, but who would be glad to join the English or the French Army.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think they could enlist in our Army, could they not?

Mr. OVERMAN. No, sir; they are not citizens of this country. We could not conscript them. They might volunteer.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; that is what I meant; they could volunteer. They could join Roosevelt's army, of course.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

YAKIMA INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2, known as the espionage bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate joint resolution 43. Briefly, I desire to state that irrigation development is going on upon the Yakima Indian Reservation which will make available a large area of very fertile land for the production of crops. The Indian Office says that the work on the project will have to be stopped for a month or so before the 1st of July unless the money that we appropriated in the last Indian appropriation act is made immediately available. I hope that, under those circumstances, there will be no objection to the consideration of the joint resolution. It is only four or five lines long.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the joint resolution, and then the Chair will inquire if there is any objection to its present consideration.

The Secretary read the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 43) making available the $200,000 appropriation for irrigation purposes on the Yakima Indian Reservation, State of Washington, carried in the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire whether the joint resolution makes an appropriation or merely makes an existing appropriation immediately available?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It makes an existing appropriation immediately available.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 43) making available the $200,000 appropriation for irrigation purposes on the Yakima Indian Reservation, State of Washington, carried in the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment at the beginning of line 6, to insert "approved March 2, 1917," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the appropriation of $200,000 for certain irrigation development on the Yakima Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, contained in the Indian appropriation act, approved March 2, 1917, for the year ending June 30, 1918, be, and the same is hereby, made immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUNISHMENT OF ESPIONAGE.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from North Carolina has made a motion, I believe, to proceed to the consideration of the so-called espionage bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have already made that motion.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is a very important bill, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Beckham	Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Sterling
Brandegee	Jones, Wash.	Poindexter	Stone
Calder	Kellogg	Pomerene	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Kendrick	Ransdell	Swanson

Johnson, S. Dak.	Overman	Smoot	Wolcott

Mr. RANSDELL. I have been requested to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] on official business, attending a meeting of his committee.

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] because of illness. I understand that he has been granted an indefinite leave of absence.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

ANTHRACITE-COAL SUPPLY.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 2.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, pending that, I ask the Senator to yield to me that I may ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a resolution which will take but a moment.

Mr. OVERMAN. If it will take only a moment, and there is no objection to it, I will yield.

Mr. CALDER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 51) as follows:

Whereas the quantity of coal in the large centers of population in the United States is such that it is impossible to supply the immediate needs of the people, and from every indication the supply available in the winter of 1917–18 will be such as to cause untold hardships to many people: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Federal Trade Commission be, and it is hereby, requested to report to the Senate at the earliest possible moment all information obtainable relative to the anthracite coal industry in the United States, and to include in its report a statement of the amount of coal produced during he year 1916 and the probable output during the year 1917.

Resolved, That the commission be requested also to investigate and report to the Senate the cost of mining anthracite coal and the disposition of the anthracite supply during the years 1916 and 1917, as compared to previous years.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from North Carolina to yield to me long enough to introduce a resolution. I will not ask for its consideration at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let us dispose of this question first.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I thought the resolution had been disposed of.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Oh, no. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to have the preamble again read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Whereas the quantity of coal in the large centers of population in the United States is such that it is impossible to supply the immediate needs of the people, and, from every indication, the supply available in the winter of 1917–18 will be such as to cause untold hardship to many people——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, it seems to me it would be well to omit such a statement, putting the Senate on record as declaring that there is such a scarcity of coal, and merely have the resolution call for information.

Mr. CALDER. I have no objection to that being done.

Mr. THOMAS. I think the Senator from Nebraska is correct, Mr. President, because there is no scarcity in the coal supply of the United States. The difficulty does not lie in the supply but in the manner of distribution.

Mr. CALDER. I have no objection, Mr. President, to striking out the preamble.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the resolution also covers some information that was included in a resolution which I presented and which was adopted by the Senate at the last session.

Mr. CALDER. That is true.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It covers ground which the commission is already investigating, but I think there will be no harm in going over it again.

Mr. CALDER. The statement of the Senator from Nebraska is correct.

Mr. President, I desire to say that the purpose of this resolution is to obtain through the Federal Trade Commission all the information relative to the cost of placing anthracite coal on the market, the quantity of it on hand, and whether or not the supply is being diverted from our large centers of population. Last winter there was a dearth of coal in New York, to-day there is hardly enough to meet the immediate needs of the city, and from every indication there will be so great a shortage next winter as to cripple business and cause untold hardships to the people.

The authorities of the city of New York have begun an investigation of the matter, the Federal Trade Commission have been taking testimony on this subject, and the resolution may be the means of bringing out additional facts which may warrant Congress in enacting legislation that will remedy the situation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the consideration of the resolution, the preamble having been stricken out? The Chair hears none, and the resolution is agreed to.

RAILROAD REVENUES.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, we have had no morning hour, and I feel that I ought to yield and I will yield to morning business, but not for the consideration of any bill which will require debate. If I can do that by unanimous consent, I will yield for a few moments, and then will ask that the motion I have made be put.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I have a resolution asking the Interstate Commerce Commission to furnish the Senate certain information in regard to the revenues of the railroads which I have been trying to present for a week past. I am quite anxious to have the authentic information to use in a discussion that I desire to present to the Senate within the next few days. I ask unanimous consent to present the resolution at this time.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the resolution be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary proceeded to read the resolution (S. Res. 52).

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if the resolution can be presented, I am content to have it printed in the RECORD, and I will call it up, I hope, in the morning hour to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator want it read?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It need not be read, but I should like to have it printed in the RECORD.

The resolution was ordered to lie over under the rule and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it resolved, etc., That the Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby directed to furnish for the use of the Senate a statement of the gross and net revenue of the railroad companies reporting to the commission for the first fiscal year for which reports were made after the creation of the commission, together with a statement showing the gross and net income of said railroads since said time, the statement to be total of said roads and not statement as to each road.

The commission is furthermore directed to furnish for the use of the Senate a statement showing the gross and net incomes of said roads for the last six months of 1916, the statement to be totals of said roads and not statement as to each road.

The commission is furthermore directed to furnish for the use of the Senate a statement of the bonded and other liabilities of the railroads, together with their capital stock, preferred, common, and debentures. Also statement of the net income of said roads after paying interest on their bonded debts. The above information to be applied to the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

The commission is furthermore directed to furnish for the use of the Senate a statement of the gross and net incomes of the said roads for the last six months of 1916, with a comparison of same with the gross and net incomes for the corresponding six months of 1915, reference being had to the calendar months.

The commission is furthermore directed to furnish for the use of the Senate a statement showing a comparison of the gross and net income of said roads, for the months of January, February, and March, 1917, with the gross and net income for the corresponding months of 1916, together with the total book costs or property investment account of said roads for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1916.

The commission is furthermore directed to furnish for the use of the Senate a list of the roads making a total net income of 7 per cent or more upon their capital stock during the fiscal year ending July 1, 1916, together with a statement showing the percentage of profits upon the capital stock for the fiscal year of 1916.

The commission is furthermore directed to furnish for the use of the Senate a list of the roads making a total net income of 7 per cent or more upon their book values during the fiscal year ending July 1, 1916, together with a statement showing the percentage of profits upon the book values made by each.

PRODUCTION OF FOOD CROPS.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield to me for a moment?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield to the Senator temporarily.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to Senate joint resolution 31. The matter of the food supply of this country, as all of us know, is acute and vital. I have had conferences with the President and with members of the Cabinet. This joint resolution, which I have here before me, is indorsed by all those who have considered it. It does not contain any appropriation in the real sense of that term, but simply authorizes a temporary loan for the purpose of getting fertilizers in time for use in connection with this year's crop. I have sent out a wire to the Atlantic seaboard asking what, in the opinion of the farmers, will be the increase if they can get this ingredient now. I have some one hundred replies. All of them are to the effect that if they can get these fertilizers at a reasonable price the crop can be increased from 50 to 100 per cent. Without them it is almost impossible to raise enough food to supply the Atlantic seaboard. On account of the scarcity of ships it is impossible for private individuals to engage in this business and bring these ingredients here. I am informed by the Government that they are in a position to relieve the situation if this joint resolution is passed.

I shall not take the time right now to read the responses that have come from the farmers themselves in reference to this matter. I hope that the Senate will now pass this joint resolution, as every hour spells disaster if it is delayed, and it means a great deal for us to expedite it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. I dislike to object to the consideration of this joint resolution. Does the Senator really think an emergency is here with regard to that particular subject?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will state to the Senate that there is not a matter of more vital importance to the entire farming interests of the Atlantic seaboard than immediate relief from this condition.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as I understand from conversation with the Senator, this nitrate will be furnished by the Government to the farmers——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. At cost.

Mr. SMOOT. And I understand that the Government has it on hand at the present time.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; it has enough to relieve the situation.

Mr. SMOOT. And if the officials of the Government allow the farmers to take this nitrate, they have got to rely upon securing sufficient ships and a sufficient quantity of nitrate from Chile to take its place.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will explain to the Senator that provision has been made by which none of the Government's supply will be at all jeopardized.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the Senator explain how that can possibly be.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. There are certain individuals who have laid up a supply here for their own use who are willing in this emergency to permit it to be used as far as it will go for the purpose of relieving the acute condition on the Atlantic seaboard, and the Government will replenish the supply during the year and return it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am totally opposed to the Government of the United States disposing of a single pound of its nitrate.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do not think the Government will dispose of a single pound of its nitrate.

Mr. SMOOT. If private concerns or private individuals are willing to advance this nitrate to the farmers and take their chances of getting it back, there may be some excuse for it, although I wish to say in that regard that certainly the only corporations or individuals that may be using nitrate to any extent sufficient to relieve the situation now would be the concerns manufacturing powder for the Government of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will state to the Senator from Utah that this joint resolution leaves it entirely at their discretion. I have talked freely with them, and there is absolutely no danger of the Government jeopardizing its munitions supply by this use.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, is not that optional with the President?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It is left entirely at their discretion.

Mr. SMOOT. Whose discretion?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. At the discretion of the President, through such instrumentalities as he sees fit to employ.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, why not have the resolution read?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; let us have the resolution read, please.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the joint resolution.

The Secretary read the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 31), as proposed to be amended by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

Whereas there is compelling need for the fullest agricultural production in the United States this year; and

Whereas a large proportion of the arable lands of America require fertilizers for the production of full crops; and

Whereas since the beginning of the European war there has been a reduction in agricultural production due to the scarcity of fertilizers; and

Whereas this scarcity is caused by the lack of shipping to bring fertilizer ingredients from abroad: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the President is authorized and directed to procure, or aid in procuring, such stocks of nitrate of soda, and other fertilizers and fertilizer ingredients, as he may determine to be necessary, and find available, for increasing agricultural production during the calendar year 1917, and to dispose of the same, on credit or otherwise, at cost, in such way as he deems best to facilitate the purpose. For carrying out the purposes of this resolution, there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, available immediately and until expended, the sum of $10,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, and the President is authorized to make such regulations, and to use such means and agencies of the Government, as, in his discretion, he may deem best. The proceeds arising from the disposition hereunder of fertilizers and fertilizer ingredients shall go into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. OVERMAN. If there is going to be any great debate on this joint resolution, I shall be compelled to object to its consideration.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I just want to call attention to the fact that on line 6, page 2, where the words "on credit or otherwise" appear, I want those words stricken out, because all the advices that I get are to the effect that the farmers are prepared, if they can get this nitrate, to manage to get the cash and pay for it, so that whatever amount is appropriated will be paid back into the Treasury within 90 days.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I knew, of course, that the Senator would not insist on any such proposition as this.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Oh, no.

Mr. SMOOT. The idea of saying that we will appropriate $10,000,000 to purchase certain nitrates to be advanced at cost to the farmers of this country and to be paid for on credit or otherwise is unthinkable; but now the Senator has taken that out, Mr. President. I will ask the Senator if he will not allow the matter to go over at this time and let us talk over the question—not on the floor—as to the amount of money that we ought to appropriate?

There is no necessity of appropriating $10,000,000 if the farmers are going to take this nitrate and pay for it, and I should like to learn about what the Senator thinks will carry it over. If the farmers are going to pay the money for it, I am perfectly willing then that whatever the Senator thinks is necessary to purchase the nitrate in sufficient quantities from the parties owning it and pay for it from the Treasury shall be appropriated, and then have the farmer receive it almost as fast as the Government purchases it and pay the Government for it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, we have gone over all of this carefully. Let me read some of the telegrams here just to show the urgent situation that exists.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, I know that the farmers want it. There is not any question about that. I am perfectly willing to say to the Senator now that he could get a million telegrams as far as that is concerned.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. But the point I am making is this: As a member of the Agricultural Committee, I know that we have only a few days for seeding and fertilizing, and know by practical experience that unless this fertilizer is obtained at once we are going to have a shortage of millions and millions of bushels of corn and grain on the Atlantic seaboard. For 60 years we have been dependent upon this kind of fertilization of the crops that we have raised, and for the first time in our history we are cut clean off from the supply. I have been working on this matter now for over a month, and have gotten it in such shape that if so much is not needed, then so much will not be used; but every dollar that is used will be returned into the Treasury immediately upon the delivery of the article.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am fully aware of the necessity of fertilizers for the use of the farmers. I believe that with the words that have already been stricken out, "on credit or otherwise," it would have required perhaps $10,000,000 to cover the whole sections of the country within the short period of time in which it must be shipped out; but with those words stricken out, it then becomes only a question of the farmer depositing the money with the Government of the United States, and they in turn can turn over the money, and the nitrates can be shipped directly to the farmer. It will then take but a very little money out of the Treasury of the United States by way of advancement.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Let me explain to the Senator that if it becomes necessary for the Government to use such vessels as are at its disposal to go to the Chilean mines and bring the nitrate, it will perhaps need this total amount, and as fast as the nitrate is delivered the cash will be paid for it; so that what I am pleading for now is this: Having taken up this matter with the different departments here, with the different members of the Cabinet under whose administration it will come, this joint resolution is in the shape that is workable. If they do not need this amount, they will not use this amount; and if they do need it, they will use this amount; and it will be covered back into the Treasury within 90 days; and any delay now means a shortage of the crops on the Atlantic seaboard.

Mr. SMOOT. Why, Mr. President, I understood the Senator to say just a few moments ago that the nitrates were now in this country.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Only a part of them. They are not all here. It is only a part.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, then, if the nitrates are not in this country there will not be any nitrates brought by boat from Chile up to the United States in time to use for this season's crop.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I understand, but——

Mr. SMOOT. I understand, however, and I have understood right along, that the nitrates were now in the possession of certain corporations in this country, and that they in turn had promised that the nitrates that they hold to-day should be advanced to the farmers of this country provided the Government of the United States would see that those nitrates were replaced from Chile by the time they want to use the nitrates they have on hand.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Let me say to the Senator that that is only partial. It must be remembered that on the Atlantic seaboard corn is planted from March until the 15th of June, and that we can get a partial supply for the corn in this country now. It is possible and very probable that we will have to import nitrate for the later corn, and it is absolutely vital that we make arrangements now to have this quickly diffusible stimulant for the grain and corn crop and the vast truck crop of the Atlantic seaboard. The Government is in a position now to get nitrate anywhere from $30 to $35 a ton cheaper than the private individuals can get it. It is now selling at from $80 to $85 a ton, and as high as $100 a ton, as against $35 and $40.

I have here letters and telegrams from the men who make the bread of this country, pleading and begging me to expedite this matter and see that they are not put in a position where two or three weeks' delay spells practically the loss of all the time and labor that they have put in. They are perfectly willing to work; they are perfectly willing to take the chance of making the crop for this country without any fixed price or any guaranty, if the Government will see that they can get the ingredients to make it with at a reasonable price; but you can not expect them to sell cheap and abundant food when they have to pay enormous prices for the thing that goes to make the food, and this is the fundamental upon which it all depends—the fertility of the soil.

Mr. OVERMAN. I hope Senators will not discuss this matter much longer.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do hope that the Senator from Utah will allow this joint resolution to pass this afternoon, let it go to the House, let it be discussed there, and let us get the practical relief that is demanded by the emergency that stares millions of us in the face.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, Mr. President, I know that $10,000,000 does not amount to anything in these days.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. But this is not an appropriation of $10,000,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, is the Senator going on with this discussion for any great length of time?

Mr. SMOOT. Just a minute more.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator from North Caroline is as much interested in the matter as I am.

Mr. OVERMAN. I know, but——

Mr SMOOT. We are thinking in terms of billions nowadays; but in the joint resolution as it was originally, providing that this nitrate should be sold on credit, there was an appropriation of $10,000,000. Now, when the credit is stricken out, it does seem to me that $10,000,000 is altogether too much.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. We have calculated upon the cash. The only reason why the committee inserted the words "or on credit" was with the thought that prime commercial paper from certain banks might be placed over against it; but the very first conception, and the conception now, is that the Government will be secured. Now, we strike out all of that, however, because I am advised by the farmers, and I knew at the time, that they can make arrangements to get the money to pay for this fertilizer, so that the Government will not be out a moment after the fertilizer is delivered. They do not ask you to give it to them. They ask you to save them from paying the enormous price now, as compared with the ordinary price. The Government is in a position to get it. They are the only ones that are in a position to get it, and you are now asking the people to come to the rescue of the Government.

You have spent $3,000,000,000 to help the people across the ocean, and yet you are not willing to spend $10,000,000 to help feed our own flesh and blood on the American Continent. We do not ask you to give this to them. We just ask you to authorize a temporary loan until it can be brought here and furnished to us, and we will give quid pro quo. I do not see how any Senator can object to it. I do not see any possible reason for objecting.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am not objecting at all to the Government of the United States assisting the farmers in securing fertilizer. That is not what I am objecting to. I do say, however, that no bill——

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator what he would suggest?

Mr. SMOOT. Just a moment; let me finish the sentence, anyhow. I do state that no bill was ever brought into the Congress of the United States with such loose provisions in it for the expenditure of $10,000,000 as this bill.

For instance, as reported, this nitrate was to be disposed of "on credit or otherwise, at cost." The committee have stricken out the words "credit or otherwise," and this is the way it reads:

> And to dispose of same, at cost, in such way as he deems best to facilitate the purpose.

At cost, payable in advance? Payable 30 days after date? When is it to be paid? There is nothing in the joint resolution which says how it shall be paid; the only statement is that it shall be sold or disposed of at cost.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. When it says "sold at cost," does not that imply that the Government will protect itself, as a matter of course? Who is the Government? We are a part of it. Who is it feeding? Us, as a matter of course.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course the Senator knows who the Government is, and so does every other Senator.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if he will suggest what sum he would favor inserting there?

Mr. SMOOT. Why, at least it ought to read:

> And to dispose of same at cost, payable in advance.

Then we will know, at least, that we will get the money back.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I ask the Senator if he will not accept that.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will accept that amendment.

Mr. REED. How would "for cash in hand" do?

Mr. SMOOT. Well, we do not want the farmer to be compelled to bring up the cash and put it in the Treasury.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will accept the amendment, so as to make it read, "payable in advance, at cost."

Mr. SMOOT. No; "at cost, payable in advance."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. All right; I will accept that.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, I want to say to the Senator in all seriousness that I can not see why there should be $10,000,000 appropriated, now that the words "on credit" have been stricken out.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Why, it does not make a particle of difference. It is the volume; it is the amount.

Mr. McKELLAR. It would have to be reappropriated.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It has been found, after careful calculation, that it will take that amount to supply the needs of those who are anxious to join in this matter.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, Mr. President, I think the whole joint resolution could have been drawn in very much better shape.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will state to the Senator from Utah that it was drawn with care by those who are charged with the administration of this work.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not care who drew the joint resolution, whether it was the Secretary of Agriculture, or anybody else.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Secretary of Agriculture did not have anything to do with it.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to ask the Senator now, how this money is to be distributed? Where is it to go? Who is to distribute it?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. As to the details, you have your different organizations throughout the country. Every State has its organization to help in this emergency.

Mr. SMOOT. But this does not provide for it in any way.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The joint resolution provides that the President shall prescribe rules to protect it. We could not go into all the particulars.

Mr. SMOOT. Having faith, Mr. President, in the House of Representatives that this proposition, if it is favorably acted upon, will be redrafted and put into some kind of business-like form, I shall not object any further to its consideration at this time.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina whether these fertilizers are to be applied to the ground for the purpose of raising cotton?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; this is grain fertilizer.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then why not substitute the word "food" for "agricultural"? I think the need of the day is the production of food, and the Government can well afford to take some interest in the production of food; but I should not like to see a large part of the nitrate used for the production of some crop other than food.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to state to the Senator that right at this time there is not a finer food product in the world than cotton seed. It is the finest cattle feed in the world. One thousand pounds out of every 1,500 pounds of what is called a bale of seed cotton is cattle feed, the finest in the world, so that it would really do two things if it could be profitably applied to cotton. It would help clothe the country and feed it at the same time. Besides that——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me ask the Senator another question. The cotton production is not deficient in any way, is it? It was enormously large last year.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Oh, it was 6,000,000 bales small for the lack of fertilizer—6,000,000 bales short.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Was it? Then is it proposed to use this fertilizer for cotton production?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Only partially.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I notice that the Senator in his remarks has confined himself to food production.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Well, it is indicated more for that than for any other purpose. I do not know that it adds very greatly to the cotton crop, but it does double and quadruple, in some instances, the food crop. Let me read the Senator a telegram on this subject from one of the biggest farmers in South Carolina.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I should like to say to the Senator from Nebraska that one of the best food crops we have is the by-production of cottonseed.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. One of the very finest. Just let me read a telegram here from the man who runs one of the largest farms in my State. This is his telegram:

> I farm 2,200 acres, running 80 plows, 1 truck, and 1 motor truck. I plant legumes exclusively and feed cattle for manure; but without soluble nitrates, even at going prices, I could not profitably produce corn, oats, truck. I also supply 200 farmers operating 300 plows. Without soluble nitrates they could not make enough to pay their bills. My experience is that of the largest and best farmers as well in this important section. Earnestly urge that you press Government intervention to guarantee nitrate supplies at reasonable cost, and that no time be lost.

Now, that is only one. Here is another which I find at the top:

> Nitrate at reasonable prices will increase food products 100 per cent. Get it if possible.

This is just a sample of hundreds of letters and telegrams from that section.

Mr. McCUMBER obtained the floor.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina permit me to ask him a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. McCUMBER. I will wait until the conversation ceases over there.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina yielded the floor. He sat down.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, as I understand this proposition, it is that the Government shall make arrangements—which it has been indicated that it can make—with certain large holders of nitrate of soda in this country to turn over to the Government part of their supply, with the understanding that the Government will later replace that with nitrate of soda to be brought from Chile.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That has been suggested; but it is also proposed, in the meantime, to bring from Chile what is indicated for the later crops.

Mr. SIMMONS. Now, then, Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I think I know something about the farming situation of the South——

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I assume that the Senator wishes my time, and if he will take it he can have it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not know that he had been recognized.

Mr. SIMMONS. I beg the Senator's pardon. I thought I was interrupting the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That was my understanding.

Mr. McCUMBER. I know what the Senator thought; but I say that I was recognized, and if the Senator wants my time I will yield and ask for recognition later.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator has been recognized, I will not take him off the floor. I did not intend any discourtesy.

Mr. McCUMBER. I appreciate that, Mr. President.

I want to give just two reasons why I can not support this joint resolution, although I shall not object to its consideration. I do not consider it an emergency measure for these reasons: First, I believe the Government needs all the nitrate that is now in the United States for its own use in the manufacture of munitions. Secondly, if we are to get what the Government does not need from Chile, it will be so late by the time we get it that it can not possibly be used for this year's crops, and the emergency will have passed before we secure the nitrate.

I am opposed to the joint resolution for another reason, and that is that there is no provision made for determining what the cost will be. Allow me to suggest to the Senator from South Carolina that we will have to bring this nitrate across the water. We are now at war with Germany. It is only a short time since a German submarine sent down, I think, some seven vessels in a single day off our own coast. Now, if we are bringing 100,000 tons of nitrate from Chile in two vessels of 50,000 tons each, and one of the vessels is sunk with 50,000 tons on board, what is the cost to the Government of the other 50,000 tons, and who is to pay for the loss?

Those questions always arise whenever you put the Government into the business of dealing directly with its people. The taxpayers finally have to look after the losses. I am quite certain that the Senator from South Carolina would say that the Government ought not to charge any more for that 50,000 tons than it cost the Government in Chile, together with transportation and handling charges, even though the 50,000 tons would cost the Government twice as much by reason of having lost by submarine attack one-half of the total cargo purchased. The private individual could make that up by taking advantage of the law of supply and demand, and making charges accordingly, but the Government can not do that. Therefore the Government takes all the risk and the individual purchaser takes none.

But I would not even object to that provided I felt certain that we could secure this nitrate in time to be available this year for the use of the farmers who raise cereal and other food products. Your winter wheat is already in and toward maturity. Your spring wheat is practically all in, and that may be said of all of the ordinary cereals but corn. The number of acres of corn that could be planted and ripened after you could get this joint resolution through and get your nitrate and get it upon the farm would be so negligible that it would practically amount to nothing this year.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the statement of the Senator from North Dakota may be correct with reference to conditions in his part of the country, but the Senator evidently does not understand the situation in the South. In practically all the South Atlantic States the need for this particular fertilizer exists to some extent now, and will exist even to a greater extent later on, for treatment of both corn and cotton. I may say in passing that cotton seed has become as much a staple food product for cattle, and, to a large extent hogs, as corn. In these States corn has already been planted and cotton planting is now progressing. In a few weeks, according to the custom in the South, the farmers will begin to apply, by way of side dressing, this fertilizer. That starts the plant. Two or three months later it is necessary to make another application, the first application being directed toward making the stalks of corn or of cotton, the last being directed very largely for the purpose of making and maintaining the fruit, the ear in the case of corn, and the boll in the case of cotton.

There is in this country at this time available to the Government a limited supply of this material, but not enough to meet the total demands of the farmers. There is probably enough to supply the present needs, the requirements of the first application, so to speak, but not enough to supply the needs for the second application.

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. I am entirely friendly to this measure if it will accomplish the object it is designed to accomplish, because I think the food question is altogether the most tremendous fact we have to deal with. Is it possible to get these nitrates here in time to serve the crop this year?

Mr. SIMMONS. That is exactly what I was proceeding to demonstrate. As I said, there is probably enough in this country to-day that is available to the Government to supply the present requirements. That, I understand, can be secured by the Government, with the understanding that later it will replace the amount now, so to speak, to be loaned to it by certain munition corporations which have on hand more than their immediate needs demand; but later it will be necessary to have an additional supply, which can not be secured in this country, and to get that the Government will have to send to Chile. The Government fortunately is about ready, if not altogether ready, with the necessary ships. The only trouble has been about the ships to bring it. There is plenty of the material in Chile, but we have not been able to get the ships to transport it. The Government has the ships, and, I understand, it is a part of the scheme which has been worked out by the Department of Agriculture that the Government is to dispatch vessels at once to Chile for the double purpose of getting enough of this material to replace that which it is now proposed to borrow for immediate use, and in addition to that enough to supply the demand which will exist for what is called among the farmers side dressing for the plants during the months of June and July, for these are the months in which the second application is made.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator are these nitrates as they are imported from Chile used in their natural state by the farmers or are they used in combination?

Mr. SIMMONS. This material is not used as fertilizer except in combination with other materials.

It may be, Mr. President, that the Senator from Utah is right as to that part of this plant food which it is contemplated the Government will secure by loan from the corporations I have spoken of. That part of the transaction may require but a small outlay. But when the Government goes to Chile to get the fertilizer to replace that thus borrowed and for the purpose of buying an additional supply to meet the larger summer demands which I have described it will have to pay cash, because it is very well understood that you can not buy this material except for cash, and the amount required for the purchases will be large. It is a very expensive fertilizer. Even in normal times it cost from $45 to $55 a ton. It is being sold now at from $90 to $100 per ton. It will take, therefore, a very considerable amount of money, and I do not regard the amount appropriated in this resolution as excessive.

But, Mr. President, the money will be out of the Treasury for only a short time. A part of it will be replaced almost immediately. The balance of it will be replaced during the months of June and July of this year.

Now, as respects the necessity for this legislation, I do not believe that the case can be overstated; that is, if it is the desire of this country that the crops of the South, the corn crop, the pea crop, the truck crop, and the cotton crop, shall be anything like what they ought to be in proportion to the acreage planted. I think while we are planting in the South a very much larger acreage in food products than heretofore, though not quite so much in cotton, it makes little difference how many acres we plant unless we have this particular fertilizer. The total yield will not exceed if indeed it reaches the normal quantity. There is absolutely no other fertilizer used or known which can take its place. Its use is absolutely essential to the production of a full crop of corn, cotton, and so forth, in this section.

It is a well-understood maxim among the farmers of the South, there is no division of opinion about it, experience has demonstrated beyond peradventure, that this one ingredient used upon corn, especially grown in the light soil of the coastal regions, will add from 33⅓ to 75 per cent to the productiveness of the acreage planted in those products. That is true of corn and cotton, and it is true of truck. The farmers understand that. The farmers of the South will tell you, "We have got to double our acreage in corn to produce the same amount of corn if we do not have this material." Some of them are paying $90 and $100 a ton for it. But many of them feel they can not afford to do that. The bulk of the farming of the South is not done by rich people. Rich men sometimes own large plantations but they cultivate them by the tenant system. Sometimes they help their tenants and sometimes they do not help them. The men of small or moderate means who do the bulk of the farming of the South and naturally they hesitate to incur such an indebtedness and take the risk as to seasons and prices which a farmer must always run.

Mr. President, lately we have been passing a great deal of emergency legislation here. This resolution is presented by the Senator from South Carolina on behalf of the Committee on Agriculture as a piece of emergency legislation. My mails, like his mails, have been flooded for the last two or three days will urgent appeals from the farmers of my State and outside of my State in the South, to do what I can to secure the passage of this legislation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask the Senator at what price does he estimate the Government will be able to sell these nitrates? He states that the price in the open market now is around $100 a ton.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; but while the price in Chile has increased, it has not increased as it has in this country. It has increased here not because it is abnormally high in Chile but because of the enormous expense of transportation and the difficulty of transportation at any price.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Has the Senator any estimate of what the expense would be to the Government?

Mr. SIMMONS. Ordinarily I suppose it could be delivered at from $40 to $50 a ton. In normal times that would include profit.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does the Senator think that the Government will be able to sell the nitrate now at $45?

Mr. SIMMONS. The Government would probably have to pay for the nitrates in Chile more than the normal price in Chile before the war, but if you eliminate the profits and the freight I think the Government could sell it at about what it cost before the war, which was from $45 to $55 per ton.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand the Senator to claim that the Government will not add the freight from Chile here?

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the Government would. I think the suggestion was probably inadvertently made, but I think the difference would be the elimination of profit. Probably the Government could sell this material at what was the cost to the farmer before the war. There probably might be a little addition, but the addition would not be very considerable.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator is mistaken in that, but that is neither here nor there.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator must take into consideration that the big profit for the middle men will be eliminated.

Mr. SMOOT. The price of nitrate in Chile has nearly doubled in the last two or three years.

Mr. SIMMONS. It has not increased so much. I think in Chile it has but slightly increased. That is my information.

Mr. SMOOT. I think by this time it is more than double.

Mr. SIMMONS. As the Senator knows, the profits of the middlemen upon these materials before the war were very large. Probably one-third of the old price was transportation and middleman profits.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, we had occasion to look into this matter in the Committee on Naval Affairs in the purchase of munitions for the purposes of the Navy at the time the appropriatioh bill was under consideration. The price of nitrate in Chile has not increased very much for this reason: The freight was so high that it was impossible to get ships to carry the nitrates. They had accumulated there very much, and in comparison with the price of other things the price of nitrate in Chile had gone up less than the general increase in the price of products in the rest of the world. It was not only owing to the high cost of freight but the impossibility to get ships to bring the nitrate out of Chile. Consequently we felt that it would be very well for the Government to get a large supply of nitrate, and appropriations were made for that purpose. I am satisfied that even now, although I have not the statistics, the price of nitrate in Chile has not increased to the extent indicated by the Senator from Utah, though it has increased, but the increase has not been great for the simple reason that we have not been able to get ships to get nitrates out from Chile, and consequently the supply has accumulated there.

Mr. SMOOT. I noticed in one of the New York papers the other day an article on Chilean nitrates, and in that article it is stated that the demand has been so enormous by England, France, Russia, and Japan that the price had increased, I think over double what it was a few years ago, and that the Chilean Government itself were taking into consideration the advisability of restricting the exportation of nitrates from Chile. That article gave an account of how fast the Chilean nitrate beds were being exhausted. I think if the Senator will make an investigation he will find that not only has the price increased but there is a move on foot now to restrict, at least to a limited extent, the exportation of nitrates from Chile.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have no doubt if this nitrate is obtained by the Government and sold at cost it can be delivered to the farmers for from $50 to $60 a ton, and the farmer can well afford to pay that. He will gladly pay it.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] thinks that by reason of the possibility of the destruction of the ships laden with this material the cost to the Government might be very heavy, and therefore the farmer would not get the benefit of cheap material after all. I do not think that enters into the matter because the Government, I take it, like individuals in sending their ships to sea in conditions that now exist generally protect both the ship and the cargo with insurance. I take it that while the Government might sustain some monetary loss in case a nitrate ship was attacked by a submarine, most of it would be covered by insurance and the cost to the Government would not be very materially increased by reason of that fact.

Mr. President, I feel like making an appeal to Senators who do not live in the belt where we are so dependent upon this material not to oppose or delay the passage of this measure. It is exceedingly important, if we are going to pass it, that it should pass speedily, because, as the Senator from South Carolina has said, there is immediate need for a part of this material.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to ask the Senator a question. I have a bill pending here providing for the Government guaranteeing the bonds upon the irrigation projects of the West. Would the Senator accept that as an amendment to this joint resolution?

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not the author of the resolution, I will say to the Senator. It came from the Committee on Agriculture, through the Senator from South Carolina. I am merely addressing myself to the joint resolution. I am not in charge of it and I can not bargain about it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Before the Senator takes his seat let me call his attention to the fact that I am informed that the price of Paris green has more than doubled in the last few years, and the devastation of potatoes by the potato bug is enormous. Does not the Senator think that it would be very proper to also provide that the Government should buy up the Paris green and sell it to the farmers at cost, so that they may protect themselves against this pest?

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not familiar with Paris green and the bug situation described by the Senator. I do not know anything about the scarcity of Paris green or the price it commands. I have not heard any complaint as to the scarcity or high price of Paris green. I have not heard that the price of Paris green was so high that the farmers could not afford to buy it. We have here, in the case of nitrates, developed the proposition of an inadequate supply on the one hand and almost prohibitive prices on the other hand.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me call the Senator's attention, then, to the fact that in my own State, and in many places in the North, farmers could not put in the potatoes that they required on account of the enormous cost they had to pay for the seed. That is true also of seed wheat. They could not get it at a reasonable price. None of our people in the North, however, suggested that the Government should come to their aid and buy all these things and transport them at cost and turn them over to them.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that if he could make a statement here that the material to which he refers—Paris green—is essential to the crops of his section, that there was no way of getting a supply at reasonable prices except by the intervention of the Government, as is true in this case, and if he will offer a measure for the purpose of meeting that situation to help out the farmers in his section I shall be very glad to give it my cordial support, and I think that every other Senator from the South will also do so. I do not understand, however, that any such case has been presented.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not want to get into the habit of asking support for the farmers of the North every time there is a scarcity of things which they wish to purchase.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I am disappointed that Senators from other sections of the country should make objection to necessary legislation upon the ground that it will benefit the crops of the farmers of a particular section of this country. We are engaged in a war that will tax every resource of the soil of this country in order to feed our own people and to help feed our allies who are doing the fighting for us. Every magazine, every agent of publicity in this country is calling upon the farmers to plant more and more of foodstuffs, to the neglect of the other higher-priced products of the farm. The farmers of my section want to respond to that call. There is now only one obstacle in the way of their doing it effectually. They will do it ineffectually if that obstacle is not removed; but there is, I repeat, one obstacle in the way of their doing it with the effect which the Government and the necessities of the Government and the people who are our allies across the water have an interest in our doing it.

The great obstacle to our doing it is getting a proper and adequate supply of this material. Here it is pointed out to Congress by the ranking member of the Committee on Agriculture that after investigation and after negotiation it has been found feasible for the Government to secure not only the amount needed at present but to secure the amount which will be needed in the near future, and that in no other way can the farmers secure it.

It can be secured by the Government without risking a dollar from the Treasury, simply by a temporary loan; a loan at first for not more than probably 30 or 60 days and finally a loan for 90 days or 6 months. The Government is making the demand; the Government is the only agency that can help the farmer meet that demand adequately. The way is pointed out in which the Government can do it. Circumstances that make it impossible for it to be done in any other way are presented to the Senate. Then, if the Senate wants the farmers of that section of the country to discharge their full duty and to contribute to the full extent of their potentialities to the needs of this emergency, upon what ground can this legislation be rejected? Upon the ground that it is unusual legislation? Upon the ground that it is paternal legislation? Upon the ground that possibly you can not find a warrant for it in the letter of the Constitution? Mr. President, that might be a good argument if times in this country were normal, but there is nobody who does not know that the situation in which we find ourselves so throws this country out of its normal condition that we are compelled, as a matter of fact, in our legislation from day to day in dealing with these great questions, to deal without any delicate regard to precedents or even to constitutional limitations.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I believe that this question and the facts which surround it take this resolution entirely out of any ordinary situation. The high price of nitrogen is not the sole trouble about getting it. It is simply not on the market in the United States. The high price is but an expression of the lack of sufficient quantity to go around. It can not be had to meet the demands of agriculture to-day. It has run up in price away beyond normal—more than 150 per cent above normal—because it is known that the supply is not sufficient to go around. It has been shown that it will add an average of 50 per cent to the production of corn in large sections of the country. It is too late for wheat and for oats, but it will add 50 per cent to the yield of beans, peas, and truck-farm crops. A few buy it, but at the exorbitant price a great number of farmers can not get it at all. If all could bid for it, it would go away above $1.25.

We are making a struggle to produce more foodstuffs; we are told that the food supply is as important as the soldier supply.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator from Georgia a question?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. Is our effort to increase the production of foodstuffs confined to one section of the country?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not at all.

Mr. LODGE. I asked that question because the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] spoke about this being for the benefit of the States on the Atlantic seaboard; but after I listened to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] I gathered that that was one of the inadvertencies of the Senator from South Carolina, and that the "Atlantic seaboard" was no further north than the Capes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have not a question but that it is important to the growers of the New Jersey coast; I have not a question but that it will substantially affect the bean and truck production in New Jersey and also in Connecticut, and along the entire Atlantic coast where the soil is sandy.

Nitrogen is not found in sandy, loamy soil and must constantly be artificially supplied; it is not needed nearly so much in a clay soil, for it is very easy by the utilization of manures and leguminous plants to accumulate nitrogen in a clay soil; but in sandy, loamy soil the nitrogen is largely used everywhere as an artificial commercial fertilizer, administered to the crop as it is grown.

Mr. LODGE. In all southern New England there is a great demand for fertilizers, for nitrates. I have had many letters about it from my own State. What disappointed me, however, was after the liberal statement of the Senator from South Carolina that this was for the benefit of the Atlantic seaboard, to find from the remarks of the Senator from North Carolina that it was confined to the cotton belt. Few people eat cotton——

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator from Georgia permit me a moment?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. Although some animals eat the products of cotton seed.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator from Georgia will permit me, I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I was speaking with reference to that territory of which I have knowledge as to conditions.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; I inferred that.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have no doubt in the world that the other sections would also receive the benefit.

Mr. LODGE. I inferred that the Senator from North Carolina was speaking about the territory of which he knew best.

Mr. SIMMONS. This material is very much used; but I think it is probably more used in the light, loamy soils of the South Atlantic seaboard than it is in other sections of the country, though I think it is used to some extent all over the country.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is more used on the South Atlantic seaboard only perhaps because there is more of that kind of soil there.

But what I desired to urge, Mr. President, was this—and I ask Senators to hear me—I have recently made quite an investigation of the nitrogen situation in connection with the construction of nitrogen plants. I have learned that the Government had 30 days ago an ample supply of saltpeter from Chile to fill its entire wants for military purposes for the full limit of contemplated military expansion for more than 12 months, and that it had en route enough for another year. That is the point I want to bring to the attention of the Senate—that the Government has now enough of the Chile supply to furnish the fullest demands of the Government for two years on the expanded plan of munitions production.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a moment?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will.

Mr. SMOOT. Before the Senator concludes his remarks I should like to have him explain, if he can, why we should have an appropriation of $10,000,000 for this purpose when the total imports from Chile in 1902 were $7,740,000—bear in mind that these figures include nitrates and everything else from Chile—that in 1903 the total amount was $9,380,000; in 1904, $10,775,000; in 1905, $11,071,000; and in 1908 the total amount was $14,000,000. And yet an appropriation is now asked of $10,000,000, when all of the imports from Chile of nitrates and everything else do not total the amount of the appropriation being asked for.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I will not stop to discuss the appropriation at this moment. I am discussing another proposition. I am discussing the proposition that the Government has the saltpeter here needed for strictly military purposes for two years, and will need only a portion of the supply for the next six months; it has saltpeter enough to last two years. Thirty days ago it had landed and stored enough to meet its demands for 12 months, and on the ocean it had enough—which no doubt has been received by this time—to last 12 months longer. What I wish to suggest is that, if our allies are greatly dependent upon us for foodstuffs as well as for bullets and powder, it will not interfere at all with our powder and bullet output if we temporarily use part of the saltpeter for the production of foodstuffs.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator understand that the Government is to advance these nitrates?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not at all.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, I should like to say to the Senator——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let me finish. I think I will explain my view to the Senator and that he will grasp it. This resolution authorizes the Government to furnish the supply at cost and be reimbursed in cash. My own view of the way in which this subject should be handled intelligently is this: The Government will determine, or the President might determine, that so much of the saltpeter which we have on hand will not be needed for 12 months, and we can duplicate that quantity from Chile in three months or two months. It can be ascertained what it will cost to duplicate the supply for military purposes and, if deemed advisable, furnish for the immediate needs of agriculture the surplus at just what it would cost the Government to replenish its supply for military purposes, and utilize now part of the supply for agriculture, first being absolutely sure that we will be reimbursed in cash for the quantity furnished to the farmer at what it will cost to bring within the next two months a supply from Chile. That is my view of the practical way to handle it. We may then stimulate food supply and in no sense jeopardize the quantity which may be required for munitions.

Mr. SMOOT. That is a very plain statement that everyone can understand.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. But that is not the proposition involved in the pending measure. The proposition, as I understand, is that they be advanced by some corporation which has nitrates on hand, and that then the Government will see that the nitrates are returned to the parties who advance them at this time. That is the proposition, as I understand.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I hope now we can vote on this joint resolution. I think it has been discussed sufficiently.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, my view of it is that we should leave the use of saltpeter on hand to the discretion of the President and his assistants, and if they find we have more than we could use in 12 months for munitions he could allow part of it to be used now to increase the crop of foodstuffs at the price it will cost the Government to bring the same amount here for munitions. If we have more now than can be used in 12 months for munitions, and can certainly duplicate any portion used now to increase food supply before it will be needed for munitions, it would be wise to so act as to make the food and munitions both certain in ample quantity.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course it is very simple, if the Government is going to allow the nitrate to be used, and is going to be paid for it in advance. It would take hardly any money at all to do that. The Senator from Georgia has made a clear, concise statement, and I do not believe anybody would object to the joint resolution if it were put in that form, but that is not the proposition in this resolution.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I have understood that such a policy might be pursued.

Mr. SMOOT. I can not read it in that way; and I can not agree with the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What the Senator from Georgia favors is what he has said. I believe it should appeal to sound judgment; our supply of munitions and foodstuffs should both be carefully assured.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia a question about this matter. There is not any provision in this joint resolution looking to any method of distribution of these nitrates. There are other sections of the country that use nitrates as well. There is no place for the storage of these nitrates.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. They are already here and are stored.

Mr. POMERENE. And there is no method whatever provided for the distribution of these nitrates that are to come from Chile.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We have already nitrates enough here to last us for military purposes for two years.

Mr. POMERENE. I am not speaking about nitrates for military purposes; I am speaking of the nitrates which it is expected to import for agricultural purposes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. My own view is that those already here may be used in part, and those hereafter brought from Chile may take the place of those used. If they are brought at once from Chile for agricultural purposes, it would not be difficult for the Department of Agriculture to handle them.

I urge that as a matter of national defense we should make certain an increase of food supply; and if the Government is in position to increase substantially the supply by furnishing saltpeter for cash, the farmers would be aided and the national defense strengthened.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, we have had some discussion as to the price of nitrates and to what extent it has advanced in Chile. I asked Admiral Earle, who is Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, to give me the figures with reference to the contracts which the Government has made for the purchase of nitrates in Chile. I am informed that in 1912 we paid $60 per ton for nitrates delivered at Indianhead; in 1913 we paid the same; in 1914 I think no purchases were made, as they were not able to get contracts; in 1915 the price was $53.76 per ton.

Mr. SMOOT. In 1914 there were greater imports of nitrates from Chile than in any other year.

Mr. SWANSON. I am talking about naval purchases. I repeat that in 1912 the Navy paid for nitrates, delivered at Indianhead, $60 per ton; in 1913 $60 per ton; in 1915 $53.76 per ton. They have not been able to find the contracts for 1916, and they think possibly no purchases were made for that year. In 1917 the department purchased nitrates in Chile at $47 per ton, which is figured, delivered at Indianhead, to be $53.76 per ton, the same as was paid in 1915. This showing would seem to indicate that nitrates in Chile have not advanced in price since 1912, but rather have declined on account of the inability to get ships to bring the nitrates out, while the price of nitrates elsewhere was greater because of freight charges being 300 or 400 per cent more than normal. In 1917 on account of the low price of nitrates, at the instance of the Committee on Naval Affairs, a large appropriation for their purchase was made, it being considered a good opportunity to get this material.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator allow me to suggest that he is referring to refined nitrates. That is not the kind the farmers use. The kind the farmers use is cheaper than that.

Mr. SWANSON. I am referring to the kind the Navy Department buys for munitions purposes, and they paid in Chile $47 a ton for it in 1917.

Mr. SMOOT. And that is the kind of nitrate, if they get it, that the Government will have to take now. I based my statement upon——

Mr. SWANSON. Just let me finish this, and then I will yield to the Senator. The position that I took in reference to this matter is that any purchase of nitrates in Chile now will not be at an exorbitant price, and I believe they will be purchased as low as the Government or anybody else would be able to get them for a long time. I believe that as soon as ships again become numerous and freight rates are reduced, the great demand for nitrates will be such that the price will necessarily greatly advance; and if we have ships that can be made available to purchase nitrates at the present price in Chile and bring those nitrates here, then, if they are not disposed of for agricultural purposes, the Government will have a good bargain, in common parlance, and a very valuable article for future use, even for governmental purposes.

That was the view that the Navy, and I also think the Army, entertained when they made appropriations for a large purchase of nitrates.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in answer to the statement which has been made by the Senator from South Carolina that nitrates had advanced in price, and therefore the farmer would be compelled to pay more, I simply referred to an article in one of the New York papers that I had read but a short time ago, in which it was stated that the orders they had received this year from the countries I have mentioned were so great that the Chilean Government was contemplating putting an embargo upon the exportation of nitrates.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, does he not think that if the Chilean Government is going to put an embargo upon the exportation of nitrate it would be very well for us to get a supply before that is done?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly. That has not been a part of this discussion at all; and I thought the article was perhaps an inspired one, for it gave the extent of the nitrate beds to-day, the estimated tonnage of nitrate that was left in those beds, showing that they were being exhausted very rapidly. It was upon the basis of that statement that I said what I did.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, a small section of my State will probably be benefited by the passage of this bill; but whether it benefits one acre of Mississippi soil or not, if it helps the farmers of the other sections of these United States without imposing a burden upon the people generally, it has my unqualified indorsement. There is nothing akin to a donation in this appropriation. It is rather an investment. The Government has the fertilizer or can get it; the people need it; and that which adds to the wealth of the individual citizen without robbing or taking from some other citizen contributes to the total wealth of the Nation, and is therefore beneficent. Nor is it sectional in any of its terms or application. As a matter of fact, every rood of land in this Republic that needs fertilizing to make it bring forth a profitable crop will be permitted to share the advantage of this legislation. As to the probability of nitrate being taken for the farm that ought to be used in the manufacture of munitions of war, I submit that we may trust to the prudence and the good judgment of the President of the United States to see that it is not done. He will not permit one ounce of this nitrate to be used in growing crops if it is needed in defense of the Nation. As has been so well stated by Senators who have preceded me, if the fertilizer is not obtained for the farmer in the very near future it means a great falling off in the crops. The amount of fertilizer used in the first application when the crop is planted is less than that which is distributed later. The scientific farmer now feeds his plant, encourages its growth with as much intelligence, prudence, and profit as he does in raising his cattle, hogs, and other live stock.

Now, the people of the United States and our allies across the ocean are going to need foodstuffs. This is a matter of first concern and vital importance which must not be overlooked, and it can not be put off. In that portion of Mississippi which uses fertilizer the yield will fall off tremendously unless the farmers are able to get it, and I know of no other way to get it except by the means provided in this measure. I can not see how there can be any valid objection to the proposition. Every dollar that is invested will bring to all the people a handsome return. The farmer pays for the fertilizer before he gets it, and the money returns at once to the Treasury.

Mr. President, I wish that measures of this character might be discussed without bringing in sectional issues. I pity the man whose patriotism is bounded by State lines or geographical sections, and I pity the Government whose laws are written in the spirit of sectionalism. I have never refused to vote for an appropriation that was helpful to the citizens of any part of this Republic. I have voted for appropriations to carry out reclamation schemes in the great arid West, and I always did it with pleasure. I acknowledge the moral obligation which I am under to serve the people of every section of this Republic, and do it as earnestly as I would serve those whom I have the honor to represent directly in this Chamber. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] has mentioned something about the exorbitant prices for which Paris green is selling. I should most cordially support any measure that the Senator might propose whereby the Government of the United States may render help to the farmers of the Northwest by purchasing and selling at cost Paris green to them, and I think to do so would be a proper use of the governmental functions. I do not care whether the Paris green is to be used on the cotton worms of Mississippi or the potato bugs of North Dakota, California, or Maine, if it helps the farmer without laying an undue burden upon the other classes of our people. I hold it is proper for the Government to help the farmer get it as cheaply as possible, and I shall vote for it. This Government, I repeat, can not make an investment that will bring larger returns to all the people than by helping the farmer, the man upon whose back, in the end, the whole burden of governmental expense falls. No, it is not a donation, it is an investment, a wise investment, and I trust the resolution may be agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am inclined to think, as the Senator from Mississippi has said, that this is an investment for the Government, and a permanent one. If there were not the element of a donation in it, if money were not being taken out of the Treasury and given to somebody, the joint resolution would not be here. There is no use, I think, in deceiving ourselves about anything so familiar as that. But what I wanted to call attention to was this:

I can understand the argument for the nitrates. Those are produced naturally only in Chile, so far as I am aware, and they are of great importance not merely to the South but to the whole Atlantic seaboard; and I am using that description to cover the whole Atlantic seaboard. I can see a reason for that; but under this joint resolution the President has the right to purchase other fertilizers and fertilizer ingredients anywhere. He can buy phosphates in the South and transport them to the North, where they are very much needed, owing to difficulties of transportation. He can buy loads of manure in the cities and have them carried out to the farmers in the country. It covers everything—every form of fertilizer on earth. It is not confined to the nitrates, for which there may be some reason; but this is a joint resolution to put the Government in the entire business of furnishing fertilizers of every sort and kind.

I am as anxious as anybody to see food raised in this country, but I think there must be some limit to these things. This is confined, at best, to a very small portion of the country, and I do not see anything to justify giving the President money to buy fertilizers of any sort or kind all over the United States, and all over the world, for the matter of that.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The proposition here, Mr. President, was this: It was suggested in the committee that there might be some difficulty in transporting certain ingredients the use of which was very much indicated in the part of the country north of us; but I think myself that after the joint resolution was put in the shape it is it might be very well, after the word "soda," to strike out "and other fertilizers and fertilizer ingredients," and just restrict it to the way we have it here.

Mr. LODGE. I move to strike that out and confine it to nitrate of soda.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will accept that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Will the Senator from Massachusetts state his amendment?

Mr. LODGE. After the word "soda," in line 2, page 2, I move to strike out the words "and other fertilizers and fertilizer ingredients."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, do I understand that the amendment I suggested, the insertion of the words "payable in advance" after the word "cost," has been adopted?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That has been accepted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will pardon the Chair for a moment, consent has not yet been given for the consideration of the joint resolution. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Now let the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, lines 2 and 3, in the amendment of the committee, it is proposed to strike out, after the word "soda" and the comma, the words "and other fertilizers and fertilizer ingredients."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, Mr. President, after the word "cost," on line 6, page 2, I move to insert the words "payable in advance."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 6, after the word "cost," it is proposed to strike out the words "in such way as he deems best to facilitate the purpose" and to insert the words "payable in advance," so that it will read "dispose of the same at cost, payable in advance."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Now, Mr. President, in order to make the text conform to the amendment, in line 15, I should like to have it read:

> The proceeds arising from the disposition of the nitrate of soda shall go into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. SMOOT. In other words, the Senator wants to strike out——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. After the word "hereunder," I want to strike out "of fertilizers and fertilizer ingredients" and insert "of the nitrate of soda."

Mr. SMOOT. No; strike out the word "hereunder," as well, so that it will read:

> That the proceeds arising from the disposition of the nitrate of soda shall go—

And so forth.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, lines 15 and 16, it is proposed to strike out the words "hereunder of fertilizers and fertilizer ingredients," and to insert the words "of the nitrate of soda."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] also proposes an amendment, on page 2, line 6, after the word "same," to strike out the comma and the words "on credit or otherwise"

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question. I understood from the debate a while ago that the real purpose of this joint resolution is to make available supplies of nitrates now on hand, and to replace them hereafter with nitrates brought by the Government from Chile; in other words, that the nitrates on hand for the manufacture of powder and things like that are of such amount that a great part of them could be used for fertilizing now and be replaced hereafter. Then the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] referred to the nitrates that were brought here by the Government for naval purposes, and then I understood the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] to say that those nitrates were not suitable for fertilizer.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Oh, yes; they are.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I find that I was mistaken about that, and I withdrew the statement.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is what I wanted to find out, because it seemed to me that if that was true, very likely the nitrates that had been brought here for the Army were unsuitable, too, and there might not be any nitrates on hand that would be suitable for fertilizer.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is all right, then.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from South Carolina a question? Has this measure been approved by the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It has been approved by the Agricultural Committee and approved by the entire preparedness board, or as many of its members as I was able to see in person. It was reported unanimously by the Agricultural Committee of the Senate.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I mean the Secretary of Agriculture; the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Secretary of Agriculture is heartily in accord with it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. May I ask one other question? Have the War and Navy Departments agreed to the depletion of the nitrate store in this country at this time and in this emergency?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is not indicated in the resolution, nor in anything that I have heard discussed at all. I have not heard that even intimated.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Does not the Senator believe that at this time, when we have just declared war, it is rather a dangerous proceeding to deplete our nitrate supply?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator misunderstands me. There is no proposition here to deplete any of the stores held by the Government for munition purposes.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. As I understand, you intend to take temporarily the nitrate supply that is now on hand in this country and then replace it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Oh, no; that is entirely a misunderstanding on the part of the Senator. That is not contemplated.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I understood that that statement was made on this floor, Mr. President.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I suggested that that would be a very intelligent mode of procedure; that if they had nitrogen that they would not need for over 12 months, and food was just as important as powder and bullets, and they could easily resupply that nitrogen in six months, I suggested that it would be a very intelligent thing to do; and I still think so.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I should like to ask the Senator another question. Where are the ships coming from to transport the nitrate at the present time? Has any investigation of that question been made?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Investigation has been made, and the department having that matter in charge has assured me——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Has the Senator any report on that subject for the information of the Senate?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I have talked directly with those who have it in charge, and they say that they are available.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, my term of service in this body has been of very short duration; but, representing my constituency, I believe it is my duty to protest against the expenditure of $10,000,000 of the public funds at this time unless we know something more about the matter. I therefore shall vote against it, not because I am unwilling to support the joint resolution of the Senator from South Carolina to meet the emergency at this time to procure fertilizers for the corn and cotton of the South, but because I believe this question is a broad question which should be considered from the standpoint of the whole country, and that we should not specialize in favor of any one section. We must be guided by the Council of National Defense, we must be guided by the Department of Agriculture, as to our policy in this question. But when it is proposed that we shall appropriate $10,000,000 with as little information as we have now, I am unwilling to vote for it unless I can procure more information.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I stated to the Senator from South Carolina that I would not object to the consideration of the joint resolution upon a brief explanation which he made to me, and I have not objected and shall permit it, so far as I am concerned, to come to a vote.

I wish, however, that we could have had this case presented by one of its advocates alone. I would have been less confused than I am at the present time. I thought I understood it from the statements of the Senator from South Carolina. Then when other Senators followed him they presented it in a different manner and which greatly confused me, and I do not know just where I am at.

I agree with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] that this is a serious question and it is being legislated upon without information that is reliable. I understood the Senator from South Carolina to say that it is proposed that the Government shall buy this nitrate and send to Chile for a large portion of it; that we have some here, but not sufficient. The Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Virginia insist that we have plenty in the United States now, and that we can use that without embarrassing the Government during the next 12 months. But what will happen if there should be an embargo placed upon the export of this material from Chile within a year, or at the end of a year? We ought, Mr. President, to have a report from the department which has this matter in charge. I do not mean by that——

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. TOWNSEND. Just a moment; let me finish the sentence. I do not mean by that that I would be bound by the opinion of a department against my own knowledge or against the actual knowledge of Senators who have become posted on the subject, but inasmuch as there is such a difference of opinion among the advocates of the joint resolution itself, and not a scrap of anything before us to indicate what the real facts are—the undisputed facts—it seems to me that we are proposing to make a very serious mistake.

The Senator from South Carolina, and it is repeated by other Senators, insists that the price of this fertilizer is almost prohibitive, that it has increased perhaps a hundred per cent during the last few years. So have the products which this fertilizer encourages. They, too, have increased hundreds of per cent, and the southern farmer is better able to purchase his fertilizer than ever before. We have difficulties in the North, but we expect to meet them. We work them out; we do not come to the Government of the United States, which already is loaded down with more than it can properly do, and ask Government aid, although on the same theory as that presented by the friends of this resolution we would be as much entitled to Government aid.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator from Michigan states that there is a possibility that an embargo may be placed upon the Chilean product. Of course, that may be true, but he will remember that we appropriated, I think, some $20,000,000 out of the Treasury of the United States for the purpose of erecting a nitrate plant in our own country?

Mr. TOWNSEND. How far have they progressed?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield now to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator was speaking about the price of everything going up. This particular product has been in this peculiar situation: That on account of the scarcity of ships and the inviting freight rate on the Atlantic seaboard it has been impossible to get nitrate here at anything like a reasonable figure; certainly not at a price where it could be used profitably by the farmer. As the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] has shown, it has not increased at the source of supply. Therefore if the Government can take its vessels and procure these nitrates and bring them here it is out no money, because as rapidly as it is brought here it is absorbed by the farmers at a price at which they can afford to use it to increase the food supply. That is the peculiar difference between it and other things that have advanced. They are not in existence perhaps or they have been cornered perhaps; but the source of this supply is abundant and we have now an opportunity to avail ourselves of a means to get it here and through the transformation into crops increase the yield without the loss of a cent by the Government or without impairing the credit of the Government.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That argument is familiar, Mr. President. The Senator proposes that the Government shall undertake this scheme and if there is any loss the Government shall sustain it, and it would be obliged to do it.

Then we propose in this emergency also to send ships, and yet nobody has pointed out to us what ships we have that we could send. We are preparing to send ships to Europe. We would have to send them into a danger zone on this nitrate mission for ships have been sunk in that region.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] suggests they would be covered by insurance, but that would mean a loss to somebody, that so much property has been destroyed and the nitrate would go to the bottom of the sea; it would not enrich the land, and the expedition would impoverish the people to that extent.

Mr. President, I know it may seem like an ungracious thing for any one to stand up before an argument which proposes to increase the food production. But who knows that it would? It is speculative and most uncertain.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I did not take the time of the Senate, and if the Senator will excuse a personal allusion I would not come before the Senate and make a plea that I have made for this measure if I myself did not know individually that the food products of the Atlantic seaboard are practically dependent upon this one material, and in substantiating that here are hundreds of letters and telegrams covering the entire country testifying to the fact that it is essential.

Mr. TOWNSEND. But, Mr. President, unless we get the nitrate it will not help the land. You are taking the chances of not getting it. If you are going to get it the only sure way to obtain it is to take it out of the Government supply as the Senator from Georgia has suggested. That is the sure way of getting your fertilizer. But in taking it from that supply you deplete the material that we need now or which we may need within a year. Otherwise you will not get it in time for your crop. You can not get it in time for use now even if you are to go out and find the ships that do not exist which may be used for this particular purpose.

So, Mr. President, I feel about this a good deal as I did a few years ago when the proposition was to buy all the cotton in the South. We have lived to see what a foolish proposition that would have been. I think this is equally foolish and equally unnecessary. I do not think at this time the Government ought to assume the burden of a $10,000,000 investment. If you are going to do it, if you are going into this enterprise, why not accept the proposition of the Senator from Utah and reduce the $10,000,000? You will not need it if you are going to pay cash for your product, as the money would be quickly turned, if in good faith it is proposed that the southern farmer is actually to pay cash.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The joint resolution provides that if it is not needed it will not be used, and as fast as it is used it will be replaced in the Treasury.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is the reason why you need a smaller sum. It sounds a little better to make it $5,000,000 or $1,000,000 than to make it $10,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I rose simply for the purpose of correcting the Senator about the cotton situation two or three years ago. If the Government had done then for the cotton industry what was asked, it would have made about 200 per cent on its investment without a particle of loss.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It would have been a very improper thing for the Government to do, but the suggestion of the Government making a profit out of such a deal is, of course, a joke.

Mr. McKELLAR. It might have been improper, but it would have been very wise.

Mr. GALLINGER. And the Government not making that great profit, the cotton raisers made it; so they ought not to complain.

Mr. McKELLAR. No, sir; I beg the Senator's pardon; the speculators made it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am very sorry this matter had to come up with so little information concerning it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield the floor.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wish to correct the statement made by my distinguished and always generous friend from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] about the cotton raisers getting the profit. The men who toiled for 12 months to make the crop in 1914 were compelled to sell it for 10 cents a pound less than it was worth, amounting to something like $40 a bale. The inability to hold it in order to bridge over the conditions that were produced by the war caused this loss to the poor fellow who toiled, sacrificed, and suffered. I am not talking about the speculator, but the man who tilled the soil and devoted 13 months of the year to make it. In 1914 and 1915 this amounted to something like three-quarters of a billion dollars, and the loss fell upon the toiling poor, the unfortunate individuals who do more for society and receive less of the profits of their own toil than any class of men who have to do with them. And I want to say to my good friend that the losses sustained by these same people in 1914 and 1915 they have never recovered from. They still feel the pinch of poverty caused thereby.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there are no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole, the joint resolution will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from South Carolina if after the joint resolution is passed he will not move to strike out the preamble?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will.

Mr. GALLINGER. There are some things recited in it that I would object to.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will move to strike it out.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, shall the joint resolution pass?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the joint resolution.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. McCUMBER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brandegee	James	Overman	Smoot
Broussard	Johnson, S. Dak.	Page	Sterling
Calder	Jones, N. Mex.	Phelan	Stone
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Pittman	Swanson

Hollis	Martin	Smith, Ga.
Husting	Norris	Smith, S. C.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is, Shall the joint resolution pass?

Mr. McCUMBER. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], whom I do not see in the Chamber, to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] and vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). Owing to the absense of my pair, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], I withhold my vote.

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], who is not in the Chamber. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JAMES (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS];

TUESDAY, May 1, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We need Thee, Almighty Father, every passing hour, but now in the great crisis which confronts us we need Thy holy influence to guide us. Solidify us as a people in thought and purpose, and inspire us with patriotism, that we may think together, work together, sacrifice together, that "Old Glory" may live and float on for liberty, justice, and equal rights for all mankind. In the name of Him who died that truth might live. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. RUBEY. The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture [Mr. LEVER] is at present engaged in an important hearing, and he has asked me to introduce the following resolution (H. Res. 72) and to ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri presents a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture of the House be granted permission to sit during the sessions of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend some remarks in the RECORD on the espionage bill under consideration yesterday.

There was no objection.

WAR EXPENSES.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the war expense urgent deficiency appropriation bill, H. R. 3971. Pending that motion I wish to inquire if it will be possible to fix the time for general debate?

Mr. CANNON. Does anybody want to talk on this bill on our side? What time does the gentleman propose?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know. I wish to make a brief statement concerning the bill. I hope we may confine the general debate to this bill in order to expedite its passage.

Mr. CANNON. I suggest that the gentleman make his statement. So far as I know, there is no disposition for any considerable general debate upon this side. I have had no applications for time. Say half an hour or an hour on a side.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will ask that the general debate be limited to two hours.

Mr. BUTLER. Not exceeding two hours.

Mr. FITZGERALD. To be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois and myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York, pending his motion to go into the Committee of the Whole, asks unanimous consent that the general debate on this bill be limited to two hours, one half the time to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3971) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the Military and Naval Establishments on account of war expenses for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, with Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee in the chair.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the items in this bill, with perhaps one or two exceptions, result entirely from the existing war emergency. The estimates considered aggregated the sum of $3,460,340,968.30. This sum included $523,658,851.87 on account of the Navy and $2,932,537,933 for the Military Establishment.

The bill recommends appropriations aggregating $2,699,485,281.18. Of this sum, $503,399,673.87 is for the Naval Establishment and $2,192,423,535.97 on account of the Military Establishment.

The amount recommended is $760,855,687.12 less than the estimates submitted to Congress.

The necessity of scrutinizing the estimates and of eliminating moneys not essential at this time, while giving to the Military Establishment all the money essential to the present emergency, is apparent from a hasty consideration of our finances.

I have roughly and somewhat hastily prepared a statement of our financial condition. The appropriations for the fiscal year 1918, including the Army bill, the sundry civil, and Military Academy appropriation bills, as they passed the Senate, and excluding the river and harbor bill, aggregate the sum of $1,974,442,174.62. Excluding the postal appropriations of $331,851,170, the permanent appropriation for sinking-fund purposes, aggregating $60,748,000, and an amount equivalent to about 5 per cent of the appropriations, which is the average amount unexpended of the amount appropriated for any one year, and which in this instance amounts to $79,092,150, which items aggregate $471,691,000, excluding these appropriations—the Postal Service, because it is practically self-supporting, and the sinking-fund provision, which has been ignored for many years, and the estimated sum that will not be expended—leaves $1,502,750,854.62, the total sum appropriated thus far for the support of the Government during the next fiscal year, exclusive of the Postal Service. In addition there was appropriated in the urgent deficiency bill approved April 11, $68,020.

In the bill authorizing the issuance of $5,000,000,000, of bonds and of $2,000,000,000 of certificates of indebtedness there was appropriated $7,063,946.46; in the pending bill, $2,699,000,000. The amount of contracts authorized in the pending bill, but for which appropriations are not made at this time, aggregate $56,000,000, and the sum of $245,000,000 is the yearly interest upon the authorized issue of bonds and certificates of indebtedness. These various sums make the total obligations to be met, or the total demands upon the Treasury, in the next fiscal year $4,510,918,102.26.

The estimated revenue for the next fiscal year and the sums available under the bond issue aggregate $3,445,000,000, so that there would be approximately $1,065,000,000 at least which must be provided, additional to the sums now available under existing revenue laws. In addition, there will be added by amendments to be proposed to the pay items $128,061,000, making the apparent deficit $1,193,972,810.26.

I do not wish to be understood that $1,193,972,810.26 is the maximum estimate of what may be required. No one can foretell what additional demands will be made upon the Treasury; but from this hasty review of the financial condition of the Government it is apparent that at least $1,200,000,000 must be raised by additional levies of taxes or else additional bond issues must be authorized to finance our operations during the next fiscal year.

The enormity of these figures justified the committee in scrutinizing with the utmost care the estimates submitted. On a previous occasion I pointed out that a special subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, consisting of myself, the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. SHERLEY, who has charge of the fortifications bill, the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. BYRNS, who has charge of the legislative bill, the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. SISSON, the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. GILLETT, the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. GOOD, and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. CANNON, had spent two weeks in making a close and searching investigation of the estimates submitted. A large amount of information was furnished to the committee of such a highly confidential character that it was the unanimous opinion of those who heard the testimony that it would be inexpedient from the standpoint of the public welfare to make public the testimony taken before the committee. Information of a highly confidential character regarding our military plans and operations was freely furnished to the committee. So that it may be that in the consideration of this bill, for reasons pertaining to the national defense, it will not be possible to answer freely questions that may be propounded, although I believe that Members of the House who desire information upon any particular point are entitled to have it, and I shall be glad to give it to them in a confidential manner.

In agreeing upon the items recommended for the Military Establishment, the committee proceeded upon this theory: The estimates submitted were based upon the requirements to sustain an army of a million men for one year engaged in hostilities It was believed that it will not be possible to have 1,000,000 men with the colors for the full period of one year between now and the 30th of June, 1918, and so the items for the pay and subsistence have been made upon the theory that there will be 1,000,000 men on the average during a period of eight months. All of the money required, or all of the money requested, for munitions and for equipment for the Medical Department, the Quartermaster's Department, the Engineer Department, the Signal Corps, and Ordnance Bureau have been carried in this bill with practically no reduction from the amount asked except in so far as those submitting the estimates acquiesced in the reductions.

The committee acted upon this theory, that if the Army is to be placed in the field the administration should be authorized and furnished the means to obtain all of the equipment and matériel required at the earliest moment possible. So all the money that it was estimated could be expended for equipment between now and the 30th of June, 1918, has been recommended, with the exception, as I have said, of some elimination in which the heads of the various bureaus have acquiesced, in some eliminations of matters that did not and do not arise out of the existing emergency, but have to do with the permanent establishment either of the Navy or of the Army. Matters of that character were eliminated.

For instance, in the Navy Department, a request was made for nearly $4,000,000 for the enlargement of the naval hospital now in existence. Those enlargements would not be completed within a year, or perhaps longer, and if our Navy were to be actually engaged at once would not be available for hospital purposes. The Navy Department has been given all the money necessary to care for sick or wounded, either in private or public institutions, and the money requested for the permanent enlargement of those naval hospitals has been withheld. That, Mr. Chairman, in a comprehensive manner explains what the committee has done.

I must, however, make one additional statement. When the bill to provide for raising a million men passed the House, an amendment was adopted which would increase the basic pay of enlisted men by $15 a month. The committee obtained from the Quartermaster General a statement of the amount of money that would be required to meet the obligation created by that amendment. It would require for an Army of a million men for the entire year $192,000,000, so that when the bill is considered the committee will offer an amendment increasing the respective items in the pay for enlisted men as carried by some two-thirds of the amount, making up the $192,000,000. So that the bill as recommended by the committee, in effect, will carry, in addition to the $2,699,000,000, an additional sum of $128,000,000, which will make $2,827,546,281.18.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Just how do they reach the figures of one hundred and ninety-two million? Of course, the addition of $15 a month for 1,000,000 men would be $180,000,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understood the amendment in the case in which it was offered added $15 a month to the basic pay.

Mr. MANN. It does not say anything about basic pay.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And that would affect some noncommissioned officers.

Mr. MANN. There is a Senate amendment which adds $14 a month to the basic pay, which would make a larger increase for the noncommissioned officers, but the amendment that the House adopted was a flat $15 increase to the rate of enlisted men and nothing about basic pay. I asked for curiosity whether the amendment was based upon the Senate bill provision or the House provision.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Quartermaster General sent me this statement:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE QUARTERMASTER GENERAL OF THE ARMY,
Washington, April 30, 1917.

CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
House of Representatives:

If the pay of all enlisted men is increased $15 each year per month, there should be added in pay of the Army amounts to items as follows:

Then he gives the items, and the aggregate is $192,091,500. And he further says that no increase has been made in the case of the Philippine Scouts.

I assume that the Quartermaster General's Department, which pays the Army, would be able to give as accurate information as could be had.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman read us the items?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are as follows:

1. For pay of enlisted men of all grades, including recruits, add	$28,441,280
2. Pay of enlisted men (National Guard)	56,882,560
3. Pay of enlisted men (additional force)	75,000,000
4. Ordnance Department, pay of enlisted men	540,000
5. Quartermaster Corps, pay of enlisted men	14,663,700
6. Signal Corps, pay of enlisted men	3,440,520
7. Medical Department, pay of enlisted men	13,123,440
Total increase	192,091,500

Mr. MANN. I assume that there is an increase provided for the recruits that would not be covered by the 1,000,000 men. My assumption may not be accurate, but I guess that is the way of it. An army of 1,000,000 men may require more men on the pay roll than 1,000,000 men.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think an army of 1,000,000, and I think it is 1,078,000 men, includes all of the officers as well as the men.

Mr. MANN. It includes the noncommissioned officers.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My recollection is the amendment made the increase in compensation from the 1st of April of this year, and it may be that the Quartermaster's Department is estimating the additional money required for these three months as well as for the full year.

Mr. McKENZIE Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to ask a question for information. Of course we understand that the bill now under consideration is a deficiency bill owing to the emergency of war. I want to ask the gentleman a question in connection with an item on page 15 of the bill now under consideration relative to the pay of retired army officers. In the annual army appropriation bill for 1918, which is now in conference, on page 26 of that bill, reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, which was based on the estimate of the army officers, we appropriated $2,700,000 for the pay of retired army officers. In this deficiency bill, at the top of page 15, I notice an item among others for the pay of officers on the retired list, $62,420. The point that I do not get quite clear in my mind is whether or not this emergency, this war now going on, has increased the retired list? How do you get that? How does it come that there is a deficiency in the pay of retired officers? It certainly is not due to the fact that we are now in war. It can only be due to the fact, in my judgment, that the men appearing before the Committee on Military Affairs and asking for the appropriation of $2,700,000 were wrong in their estimates. Can the gentleman from New York explain to the committee just how this happened?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I can not explain how it happened. The department said that those sums for pay were in addition to the amounts carried in the Regular Army appropriation bill, and the committee in determining the amounts deducted the highest amount in the bill. Wherever the Senate had increased an item in the Army appropriation bill as it passed the House, that highest sum was deducted. If the Senate decreased an amount in the bill as it passed the House, the amount carried in the bill as it passed the House was deducted. Whether under the exigencies of war some additional men will be retired I do not know.

Mr. McKENZIE. The fact that war now exists would not change the law providing for retirement.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from New York yield to me?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. Is it not perhaps possible that a large number of retired officers have been ordered to active duty and now draw their full pay, and that that is the reason?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman may be correct.

Mr. McKENZIE. If the gentleman will pardon me——

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Kansas has recalled a statement made that the taking of these retired officers in on the active pay has increased the aggregate.

Mr. McKENZIE. But on line 4 of the same page there is an item for increased pay to retired officers on active duty, $354,725. Consequently the point made by the gentleman from Kansas is not well taken.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am unable to state about the retired list other than that the Quartermaster's Department worked out details of the sum and the committee included it. Whether they have calculated correctly I can not say.

Mr. McKENZIE. If the gentleman will pardon me, the reason for asking this question grows out of the fact that the Committee on Military Affairs was charged with not giving the appropriation item in the bill careful consideration, and for that reason this appropriation should be taken and considered by the Committee on Appropriations, and I have no great fault to find with that, but I did think perhaps that after giving the bill such careful consideration each item could be explained.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know who charged the Committee on Military Affairs with not having given consideration to the bill. Certainly I did not. The criticism that I made of the Committee on Military Affairs was that it was proposing to turn over to the Secretary of War three thousand million dollars and authorizing him to expend it in his discretion, and suspending all laws that in any way limited or restricted his authority. The Quartermaster General, who has charge of the pay of the Army, made the statement that this additional sum was necessary to pay these officers upon the retired list. I do not know that any Member of Congress, whether he be on the Committee on Military Affairs or not, has either the time or the inclination to be furnished with the number of retired officers and when they go upon the retired list, and then calculate the exact sum that will be required, and I am not certain whether the Committee on Military Affairs in the pending bill gave the amount requested. A memorandum just handed to me discloses that the estimates submitted to the Committee on Military Affairs for pay of retired officers was $2,762,420, and the Army appropriation bill carries only $2,700,000. This sum of $62,420 is therefore the difference between the amount that the Army bill carries upon the recommendation of the Committee on Military Affairs and the amount the Quartermaster General has calculated is necessary to meet the obligations of the Government.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I find that the appropriation is for the fiscal year ending June 13, 1917. Is that correct?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are two provisions on page 81 of the bill to which I call the gentleman's attention. One is that the appropriations contained in the act, unless otherwise specified, shall be available during the fiscal years 1917 and 1918, and the other provision to which I shall refer, while I am about it, is that the appropriations contained in the bill shall be available for the payment of obligations on account of the existing emergency incurred prior to the passage of this act and which are properly chargeable to such appropriations.

A number of orders have been issued for supplies, a number of contracts have been made, and a number of persons have been employed without authority of law, and this provision legalizes in effect what has been done and makes those appropriations, in so far as made for definite purposes, available for the payment of the obligations thus incurred.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Do I understand, then, as a matter of law, that all this money could be expended between now and the 1st of July if the department saw fit? Is there a fund provided at all for the payment of the Army after the 1st of next July in case the War Department expended the money?

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is available until the 30th of June, 1918.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes; but the gentleman provides that it may be expended.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It may be expended, but we can not pay an army of a million men until we have them.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Contracts can be made.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Contracts can not be made legally until either the authority to make is granted by law or until the appropriations to pay the obligations are made by law.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Now, the gentleman referred further to the proposition that the Military Committee proposed to make a lump-sum appropriation. I find on page 31 the gentleman provides that all the sums included in the first 31 pages of this bill—supplies, transportation, Quartermaster Corps, and so forth—shall constitute one fund. Can the gentleman tell us how many hundreds of millions are in that particular fund?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That provision was not particularly pleasing to the Committee on Appropriations, but it is the provision which is carried in the Army appropriation bill every year, and the Committee on Appropriations did not believe that in making these additional appropriations it should establish a different law and so entirely disrupt the present accounting system. It has restricted the accounting to one fund in the same way the Army appropriation bill restricts it.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Then as a matter of fact the gentleman has turned over to the Secretary of War the privilege of spending all these hundreds of millions, how many the gentleman can not state, but I have figured over seven hundred million, to be expended exactly as he determines. Is not that true?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not exactly.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. To all intents and purposes?

Mr. FITZGERALD It only can be appropriated for the specific purposes which are under the Quartermaster General. He can not take the pay of the Army and build barracks, as he could under the gentleman's proposition. He can not take the money appropriated for subsistence of the Army and buy munitions with it. The Committee on Military Affairs for a great number of years has permitted what I believe to be an indefensible practice of making specific appropriations and then consolidating them in one fund, and as the Military Committee in its wisdom decided it was wise to adopt such a practice in time of peace, we believed it would be very inexpedient for the Committee on Appropriations to determine that it should not be permitted in time of war.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Is there any further provision of that sort in this bill, say, for instance, in regard to ordnance?

Mr. FITZGERALD. We have the same provision as to those appropriations as are found in the Army bill, as, for instance, the pay of the Army. While specifically enumerating for various classes of men and officers, the usual provision contained in the Army bill makes them available in one fund to be accounted for in that way.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The gentleman has provided for a good many hundreds of millions to be expended for ordnance and different things that money may be expended for. Has the gentleman's committee provided finally that the War Department may be allowed to expend this as one fund?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No, we have not, because those items in a great measure are provided entirely in bills originating in the Committee on Appropriations, and that committee has never indulged in that practice to any extent. The complaint made thus far against this bill by the War Department is that we have limited the ordnance items so they can not expend it in any way they please.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. One further question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Does the gentleman think the Committee on Appropriations can tell within five hundred millions of how much ordnance we must have if we get into this war?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I do not think we can do more than that. We can not do more than take the information furnished by the Ordnance Department that we ought to give a certain amount of money for powder, a certain amount of money for small-arms ammunition, a certain amount for rifles, a certain amount for seacoast cannon, and accept the recommendations, but we can and we have done something else. We have prepared this bill in such a way that money can not be spent by the Ordnance Department for purposes which the Ordnance Department itself concedes was not necessary and could not be utilized within the time during which this money is available. A number of projects have been sought from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the Committee on Appropriations for a number of years and Congress has with practical unanimity refused to grant money for such matters. Upon investigation it was disclosed that both of those establishments had started out under the guise of this emergency to get many such things, a part of the permanent peace establishment, upon the plea that they were necessary because we were at war, and they are not necessary because of the war situation and they have not been permitted.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The gentleman states the committee has reduced the amount asked for by the War Department by how many hundreds of millions?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Seven hundred and sixty million dollars.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Was the gentleman's committee able to convince the War Department to that effect or was that the judgment of the Appropriations Committee in face of the war?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In the reduction is included $280,000,000 which is now in the pending Army bill.

In the second place the War Department, upon being pressed, voluntarily admitted over $300,000,000 it did not desire.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That is the point I wished to bring out.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And a large part of the balance is eliminated upon the theory that a million men will not be actually with the colors for more than a period of eight months during the period indicated.

Then there are two items, one aggregating $140,000,000, which was included upon the theory that part of the Army would be raised under the volunteer system and that there would be dependents for whom provision should be made, and $51,000,000 upon the theory that Congress would legislate to give 20 per cent increased pay in time of war. As already pointed out, as the result of the Good-Austin amendment, the committee will add $128,000,000 to the pay item.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I gather that the items of ordnance—that is, the ammunition and ordnance—has not been reduced materially from that asked for by the War Department?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Ordnance Department has not been reduced except in this respect: Authority to enter into contracts in sums aggregating $56,000,000 is given instead of the money, because the Chief of Ordnance stated that the work could not be finished within the period. If he had authority to make the contracts he would not need the money until after the 30th of June, 1918. Then there were some items in connection with the coast defenses and the insular possessions that it was conceded were not absolutely essential.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. You have not denied to them the possibility of securing the ordnance which they were asking for?

Mr. FITZGERALD. We have given the Ordnance Department all the money that it insisted was necessary. The only complaint thus far advanced is that we have not made it in either a lump sum or more flexible so that it can be used in any way desired or with greater freedom than we give here.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Another item. Maj. Pierce, representing, I believe, the War College, stated that the cost of maintenance of the Ordnance Department would be something like $600,000,000 a year in case of war, and something like $100,000,000 in case of peace. In your figures here have you included the possible war estimate rather than the peace estimate?

Mr. FITZGERALD. We have included the war estimate, for this reason, that while we do not believe that a million men will be actually in the field inside of a year, it was believed to be essential to give the Ordnance Department all the money and authority necessary to accumulate the munitions and supplies so that whenever they were prepared to send a force into the field they would not be held back because of the failure to supply the munitions and maintenance items. In that respect the probabilities are that more money has been appropriated than can be utilized. It was there that the leeway was thought desirable to be given, and an excess of money to accumulate, rather than a large discretion to use it in ways that were not contemplated.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. In the appropriation bill of 1916, I believe it was, there is a provision made for pay to dependent mothers and wives of soldiers in the National Guard and Regular Army, brought about on account of the punitive expedition into Mexico, I think. I want to ask the gentleman if this bill makes any provision to take care of the dependents of privates that are now in the National Guard and Regular Army that may come into them prior——

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; because the President is given authority in the bill which passed the House to discharge those who have dependents.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. The point I wanted to make to the gentleman was that there have been a number of applications made to the War Department to discharge privates who enlisted under the law as it was, where they enlisted for seven years, three years of actual service and four years in the reserves, and they have declined to do that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My recollection is that the bill which passed the House the other day authorizes the President to do that.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I know it authorizes the President to do that. Is this bill drawn upon the assumption that when the appropriation is exhausted that has already been made to take care of such cases and the War Department still refuses to discharge men now in the service who while they were furloughed have married and have families dependent upon them they shall continue in the service and their families be compelled to subsist on the small amount of pay that we give to our soldiers?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The increase of $15 a month was understood to account in some way for that difference. The department intended to suggest legislation to Congress which would give an allowance, not to exceed $15 a month, to volunteers who had dependents. They have eliminated the volunteers and increased the basic pay $15.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. That is in conference?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Senate provides in their bill an increase of $14 and the House $15 a month, and there is certain to be an increase.

Mr. HILL. May I ask the gentleman one or two questions, not in any criticism of the bill, but for information along the line of the amount of money that has to be raised in making up the revenue bill? The gentleman said he would have to add to the amount of this bill probably two-thirds of $192,000,000 for increase of pay. Does this appropriation, this deficiency bill, cover the probable expenditures of the Army for the fiscal year 1918 or only up to the time when Congress will meet again?

Mr. FITZGERALD. All of 1918, including, of course, the $280,000,000 in the Army bill which is now pending in conference.

Mr. HILL. Does the gentleman figure on any continental army or any army at all in addition to the Regulars and the National Guard, which the Military Committee reported here would probably in war strength be about 1,000,000 men?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Of course. If a million men are obtained inside of six or eight months and the President undertakes to raise 500,000 additional men, as is authorized in the pending legislation, the necessary expense of subsisting, equipping, and maintaining the additional 500,000 men called for, whatever portion of the year they will be with the colors, will be provided additionally. The statement I made will show that at least $1,200,000,000 additional must be raised by taxation; at least that.

Mr. HILL. Let me ask the gentleman another question. Is there any provision in this bill for carrying out the law—I think it is now the law—that soldiers serving outside the country shall receive 20 per cent additional to their basic pay?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; there is not, because the House has proposed to increase the pay by $15 a month, which will be much in excess of the 20 per cent increase for foreign service.

Mr. HILL. Is there any provision in this bill to pay the interest on the additional bonds which we are going to issue?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. The Committee on Ways and Means properly provides for the amortization and interest. The interest on bonds, however, and all obligations of the Government are permanently appropriated for. There is never any annual appropriation for that purpose. There is a permanent appropriation of the amount required to meet the interest and obligations.

Mr. HILL. The Secretary of the Treasury in his annual report last fall estimated a deficiency for the fiscal year 1917 of about $100,000,000. The probabilities are—and I think the gentleman will agree with me—that that deficiency under the existing circumstances must necessarily be largely increased. Is that amount to be taken out? Has the committee considered that—that part of this money may be expended before the 1st of July?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. A considerable portion will be expended before the 1st of July.

Mr. HILL. Then it would be necessary, in raising money to meet the expenses to extend through the fiscal year 1918 to include that amount?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman will understand that that is a question for the Committee on Ways and Means to answer.

Mr. HILL. In making this estimate of about $3,000,000,000, with additional Army pay for two-thirds of the year for a million men, has the committee provided in other respects in this appropriation bill for the expense that will necessarily come in the last half of the next fiscal year, from January 1, 1918, to July 1, 1918, or is the committee assuming that they will bring in another deficiency bill and lay new taxation to meet it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. We have made provision to cover the expense to June 30, 1918, and the expense that would result if those men are actually engaged in the contest.

Mr. HILL. The 1,000,000 men?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. If they are not sent abroad there would be $600,000,000 or $700,000,000 that would not be expended.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to reserve a little time.

Mr. CANNON. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended until he can complete his remarks.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I want to reserve a little time. If the gentleman can yield me 10 minutes——

Mr. CANNON. I will yield to the gentleman any time he wants. I am receiving some additional requests for time, but I think I can get it.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman, I believe, has yielded. In the statement of expenditures that the gentleman has made he gave the grand total of expenditures during the next fiscal year as $4,510,000,000, and estimated that there would have to be raised $1,200,000,000; that there had already been provision made from different sources for the amount of $3,445,000,000, leaving a net of $1,065,000,000 to be raised by other sources to be provided for. I wish to inquire whether any bond issue is included in that $3,445,000,000? I believe the gentleman referred to some bond authorization to make up that amount.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Four billion five hundred million dollars?

Mr. STAFFORD. In the estimates of the amount for which provision has already been made to raise revenue, $3,445,000,000 was stated, as I got it, leaving $1,065,000,000 to be raised from other sources.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That contemplates $2,000,000,000 of bonds that will be available for the expenses of the Government and the balance as revenues.

Mr. STAFFORD. It does not include the $2,000,000,000 of certificates of indebtedness?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; that is temporary.

Mr. STAFFORD. So that there will be more than $1,065,000,000 to be raised from other sources if we are going to pay off any of the bonded indebtedness?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. AUSTIN. I thought the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] had agreed to give you some extra time, if it was needed, in which to answer questions.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. AUSTIN. Did you make provision in this bill to take care of the increased pay?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. I said amendments would be offered to do so.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HOWARD having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Carr, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2099. An act providing for the modification of the designs of the current quarter dollar; and

S. J. Res. 42. A joint resolution authorizing the President to take over for the United States the possession and title of vessels of any subject or citizen of any nation with which the United States may be at war, and for other purposes.

WAR EXPENSES.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to take much time. I have listened to the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], and I substantially agree with what he has said. In fact, the Committee on Appropriations was unanimous in agreeing to this bill, the minority uniting with the majority in recommending that it do pass. For the present I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] such time as he wants.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this appropriation bill, carrying nearly two and three-quarter billions of dollars, is almost ten times as great in amount as any appropriation bill which heretofore has passed through Congress. That statement itself shows what we are engaged in.

Mr. Chairman, I did not want to go to war. I hoped from the beginning that this country could keep out of the war, though two years ago I stated to the House that I thought we ought then to provide for an army of at least a half million of men. That was not any particular foresight. It seemed as plain to me as daylight that that was the proper thing to do then.

We are in resources the greatest Nation of the world, in resources the greatest power in all time. We are a republic. It should be the policy of our country and our people to maintain peaceful relations with all the world. We should do everything within our power at all times to avoid war; but being a great and powerful nation we should let it be known to the world that when we have yielded to the belief that we should engage in war, we should make war terrible to those opposed to us. [Applause.] We should keep out of war as long as we can, but we should warn other peoples not to engage in conflict with us. We should adopt the policy that we will not do those things which give occasion for war, and when some other nation gives occasion which causes us to engage in war, they should know in advance that our enmity is terrible. [Applause.]

Mr. DENISON. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. MANN. No; I do not yield. I hope we will always follow this course. I would have the nations, big and little, throughout the world understand that though we are a republic and a peace-loving people, when we engage in war we mean to smite them to the earth. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] 15 minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, it is only a few years since one of the most potent arguments—or an argument believed to be potent—against the party then in power was that it had extended the activities of the Federal Government to a point where we were appropriating a billion dollars during the two years of a Congress. The slogan "a billion-dollar Congress" was a campaign battle cry. Later, as our activities increased along many lines, we came to appropriating a billion dollars at a session of Congress, and the country had so grown in population and in wealth, had become so accustomed to great expenditures, had so generally demanded the broadening of Federal activities, that there was no potency as a criticism in the statement that we had come to expend a billion dollars at a session of Congress.

Those were in days of peace. At last, very much to the regret of all of us, inevitably, in my opinion, we are at war, and your Committee on Appropriations has presented to you for the purposes of that war by far the greatest appropriation bill ever presented to a legislative body in all the tide of time, a bill carrying nearly two billions and three-quarters, a sum so stupendous that the mind can not grasp it. As a matter of fact, we can not any of us intelligently understand or comprehend the enormous sum that we are proposing to appropriate. We may get some idea of what it means in the way of expenditure when we recall that it amounts to about $27 for every man, woman, and child in the United States. Yet it will be appropriated, first, by unanimous action of our committee, and then, I believe, by practically unanimous action of the House. For, notwithstanding the reluctance with which we took up the gage of battle, having taken it up, every resource of the Republic must be put at the command of those on whom rests the responsibility of waging the war which the representatives of the American people, with the sentiment of the American people behind them, in my opinion, have declared. The burden will be heavy, for this is, I fear, only the beginning, and we have started on a program under which our war expenditures can not be less than $3,500,000,000 the first full year, exclusive of the $3,000,000,000 loan to our allies, which has heretofore been voted.

We have been and the Senate is now considering a bill for the marshaling of a mighty army. Personally I keenly and profoundly regret the method of conscription proposed for the raising of the major portion of that army; but that has been practically settled except for the details, and it is now our duty to give ungrudgingly liberal support to those responsible for raising that army, for furnishing it with arms and supplies, and for preparing to strike with the full strength of the Nation.

I think we, practically all of us, went into this war with the confident expectation, at least with the hope, that it might not be necessary to send troops overseas. I am one of those who still hope, though that hope grows more dim with the rising of every morning's sun, that we may not find it necessary to send large bodies of troops abroad. It may, however, be necessary, or it may be deemed wise and advisable, for us to do that sooner than we now expect or anticipate.

There has been a good deal of talk, a good deal of speculation, and wide difference of opinion as to the class of troops we should first send abroad if we find it necessary to send any. The Senate has voted for the organization of a division of volunteers in the expectation that they will be raised by Col. Roosevelt and that they will be used for that purpose. Believing in the volunteer system as I do, I hope that division may be provided for. That would be a splendid force, when trained, to send abroad, but it would take some time to organize and train them. In the meantime may I suggest we are not entirely lacking in trained forces, and those in considerable numbers. We have upward of 100,000 men in the Regular Establishment who are as well trained and disciplined soldiers as there are in the world. They are scattered somewhat widely just now, some in Hawaii, the Philippines, the Canal Zone, and on the Mexican border; but if I felt competent to advise in military matters my advice would be that if we must send some troops, a division or two divisions to the firing line in France or Flanders at an early date, the troops to send are the volunteer troops of the Regular Establishment. They are not only trained, disciplined, hardened to service, but they are officered by men who have received the splendid education of our Military Academy and our various service schools.

There are no better soldiers than these men on any of the fighting lines of Europe; and if it were necessary, it seems to me we might send not one but two divisions of those men within a comparatively short time. I am one of those who, while I shall greatly regret the necessity, if it be a necessity, of sending our men overseas, can not forget that we have declared this war as a war of humanity, with the purpose of fighting it to the end, and that we owe a very great debt of gratitude and obligation to the people of France, to our sister Republic which is now bleeding, as practically all of her available forces are valiantly and heroically fighting along that long-drawn line across northern France.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DENISON. I understand that Gen. Bridges, who is here with the English commission, has stated that the most serious blunder England made was the sending of her regular army, with her regular army officers, to France, thereby losing their services in training the volunteer army. What does the gentleman think of our making the same mistake in sending our Regular troops abroad now in the beginning of the war?

Mr. MONDELL. As I said, I am not a military man. I do not pretend to match my judgment with the judgment of so distinguished and gallant a soldier as Gen. Bridges. I do not pretend to advise the War Department, but we could, I think, send a goodly number of the Regular Establishment over the seas and still have a considerable number of officers for the purpose of drilling commands of new troops. I simply make the suggestion in view of the fact that these troops are equipped, drilled, and splendidly officered, and could take their places when they arrived alongside of the best fighting men of France or England. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlemen from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations renders unnecessary much of a statement on my part touching a bill the details of which will be explained when we reach it under the five-minute rule. But I want, even at the risk of repetition, to call attention, in a very rough and crude way, to the financial condition that confronts the country and to the lesson that I think should be drawn from it.

As has been stated, the appropriations for the fiscal year 1918, figured on a basis of the appropriations as made by the bills that have passed and become laws, and the amounts carried in the bills that are now pending in conference, will equal the sum of approximately $1,970,000,000. If you deduct from that the Postal Service and estimated unexpended sums and the amount of $60,000,000 for the present sinking funds, which will amount in the aggregate to about $470,000,000, you will have a total authorized expenditure for the next fiscal year of $1,500,000,000.

In addition to this, we have presented in this bill appropriations amounting in round figures to $2,699,000,000, and adding the urgent deficiency bill which has just been passed, the expense of preparing and issuing bonds and certificates of indebtedness and the interest on those bonds and certificates of indebtedness for a year, we will have a grand total of $4,500,000,000 of liabilities to meet in the coming fiscal year.

Now, if you deduct the revenues to be derived under existing law and the two billions of bond issue, amounting approximately to $3,400,000,000, you will have something over a billion dollars to be met by additional revenues to be raised by a further bond issue or taxation.

Mark you, that makes no provision of any sort for a sinking fund for the bond issue recently authorized.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I just came into the Chamber and heard the statement of the gentleman, which is quite interesting to me as a member of another committee, and I understood him to say that for the next fiscal year, including the ordinary expenses of running the Government, it was necessary to raise from all sources $4,500,000,000 in round numbers.

Mr. SHERLEY. In round numbers, that is true. That is a rough estimate of the expenses for the fiscal year 1918.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from Kentucky would do a great service to another committee of the House if he would give as far as possible a detailed statement as to the items that go to make up that lump sum, because there is a division of opinion in regard to that matter.

Mr. SHERLEY. During the gentleman's absence the gentleman from New York went more into detail touching that particular matter. Of course much of it is a very rough estimate, as of necessity. But the point is that, even with no provision for a sinking fund for the great bonded indebtedness which we have authorized, we will need in addition to the two billions of money to be obtained from bonds, to raise in addition to the ordinary revenues under existing law more than a billion dollars of additional money. And therefore I repeat the warning I made to the Congress in the opening days of this session, that no more fatal mistake could be made than for Congress to fail to provide for the heavy taxation for the meeting now of the proper proportion of the burdens of this war. If we undertake now to slight in taxation and place the burden on a few instead of placing it on many things so that all bear some of the burdens, we will make the same fatal mistake that was made during the Civil War when the Congress, failing to realize the real patriotism of the people, hesitated to levy taxes sufficient to raise a proper amount of revenue, and it was only after the war had been going on two or more years that the Congress began to raise anything like the amount of money necessary. As a result the credit of America was seriously impaired, inflation took place in many ways and in many activities, and many evils in addition to those incident to war were brought upon the country because of a lack of courage on the part of Congress to do the necessary though disagreeable task of levying large taxes on the people.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HICKS. I thoroughly agree with what the gentleman has stated, and I know he has made a great study of the subject. Is he prepared to say what, in his mind, is the proper proportion to be raised by taxation this year and what is to be left for future generations?

Mr. SHERLEY. Not in detail; but I think it will be a great mistake if we do not provide in the coming revenue bill for raising a billion and a half of additional revenue.

Mr. HICKS. A proportion of 25 or 30 per cent?

Mr. SHERLEY. I have not worked it out in the way of percentage. But, in my judgment, while the House is being asked to consider the greatest supply bill that has ever been presented at any one time by any people, I think it is simply the beginning of many bills of equal and perhaps greater magnitude. We can not afford to finance the Government on the theory that this particular appropriation bill is going to be the only one of any magnitude. If, as may be possible, we shall have not a million but three or four million men in the field, the sums here, huge as they are, will become very small as compared with what we will be called upon to appropriate.

I say this because I think it is important that the country, as well as the Congress, should realize the magnitude of the task upon which we have entered, and instead of Members of Congress receiving statements from constituents pleading that they be relieved from taxation, the public should realize the Government's need and Congress should determine that taxes shall be levied with the idea of raising tremendous additional sums. The size and wealth of this country makes that possible, if we will banish from our minds all class conceptions, all sectional conceptions, all selfishness of purpose, all desire to make our road easy with our particular constituencies, and undertake simply to levy taxes in true equity for the needs that are at hand. And if we prepare a revenue bill upon that basis, we can, without in any real sense burdening the people of America, raise a billion and a half to two billion dollars in additional revenue. The trouble is that men insist upon trying to place the burden upon a few to whom they are not directly responsible, and the proposition gets to be an exchange of selfish views and compromises not looking to the need of the country but to the relief of particular sections or a particular class.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. FOCHT. The gentleman, and I assume most of the Members of the House, have received a circular letter from the representatives of the farmers of the country in which the Congress is called upon to tax the present wealth and pay as we go in the conduct of this war, and I assume they mean that there should be no bond issue or burden put upon the future. What would the gentleman's answer be to that proposal?

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course, it is not practical at this time to undertake to finance the war by current revenues, even supposing you could raise them without a serious disturbance of business. You could not obtain the money quickly enough to be available for the purposes that are pressing, and you must have a bond issue. No one desires to go to that extreme, and there is no danger of our going to that extreme. The danger is all the other way, that we will not have the courage to perform fully the disagreeable task of levying taxes upon our constituents.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to say just a word about the bill itself. There have been reductions made in the estimates amounting to $704,000,000, if you consider that in addition to the moneys carried, we are authorizing contract obligations of $56,000,000. Of that $704,000,000, $302,000,000 represent items that are carried in the Regular Army bill and the sundry civil appropriation bill and which should not have been included in the estimates as originally submitted, so that the real reduction amounts to about $384,000,000 of Army estimates and some twenty millions of Navy estimates, of which six and a half millions the department voluntarily stated could be eliminated, and the rest related largely to matters not directly related to present war needs. As has been explained by the chairman of the committee, the Army reduction is largely due to a reduction in estimates touching the pay and feeding and maintenance of a million men for a year, because the committee did not believe that we would be able to average a million men for an entire year, but that an estimate upon the basis of a million men for a period of eight months would more nearly approach the fact, and we have accordingly, as to such items, appropriated money upon that basis.

Touching matériel, things that have to be supplied for the Army and to be on hand for the Army whenever it shall take the field, the committee did not endeavor in any way to reduce the estimates that were submitted. We did undertake in a few instances to limit the amounts of money that could be expended for the purchase of land, and we did eliminate items that looked to a permanent building program having no direct relationship to the need of the Army in this time of war.

One of the difficult problems that confronted the committee, one of the difficult problems that is going to confront the Congress, is how to safeguard the expenditure of funds without unduly tying the hands of the administrative officers. There can never be an ideal solution of that problem. If you give to them absolute freedom, as was proposed by the provision carried in the bill reported by the Military Affairs Committee for the raising of the new army, whereby $3,000,000,000 were made available for the Army in a few lines, you give them absolute freedom of initiative in the expenditure of the money, but you also destroy any control whatever by the Congress. If, on the other hand, you undertake to scrutinize and pass judgment as to the wisdom of each particular activity that is to be engaged in, then you destroy all initiative on the part of the administrative officers and those who are charged with and have only the knowledge as to the actual needs that confront the Army. So, somewhere between those two extremes must lie the compromise that is made by every constitutional government that believes in responsibility by executive officers to the representatives of the people in the legislative branch. We have tried to meet that problem by carrying sums in very large quantities under the usual language of the various appropriation bills. It may be, it doubtless will be, true that by the time this bill shall have passed the House and is presented to the Senate there will be discovered the need of a different arrangement of some few of these funds, perhaps the need of additional funds along certain lines, because it is not to be expected that the departments would have the wisdom to be able to anticipate fully the situation that confronts it now.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The War Department has provided for certain training camps for the training of men who are applicants to become officers and in some cases providing for the training of officers now in the Reserve Corps. Is there any appropriation in this bill to meet the expenses of those training camps, at least to the extent of paying salaries to men now in the Officers' Reserve Corps?

Mr. SHERLEY. There are items that are carried for those training camps and there are items, of course, carried for the pay of officers and men. What the policy of the department shall be touching the pay of men who go to these training camps with the idea of being finally commissioned as officers I am not now prepared to state, and I am not sure that they have come to any final conclusion.

Mr. MANN. I think that they have stated that they have no authority of law and no appropriation at present. However, I have gone through the bill. Of course, very many of the items are in general language. I could not discover any item which seemed to me would authorize the payment of a man now in the Reserve Corps who goes to one of these training camps to be trained as an officer.

Mr. SHERLEY. We made no provision as such for the payment of these men while at these training camps. Whether or not there may not be some fund available for such purpose I would not like to state.

Mr. MANN. The War Department has stated that there was no fund available now.

Mr. SHERLEY. I mean in the bill.

Mr. MANN. Well, there might be sufficient funds available now, but there are no items in this bill, I think, that are not covered by existing law. If the gentleman has the time I would like to have his opinion on that. It seems to me extremely important while raising men by draft, which is not a difficult thing to do, the great thing we need, which we do not have, will be officers, and ought we not to be training officers now, at once?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes. I have no doubt that before this bill shall become a law there will be provision in it for payment of officers, men who are being trained as officers to the extent that the policy of the department shall make necessary, but the committee did not feel warranted in carrying a special provision for that purpose now when there had not been determined and presented to us a policy upon which we could base an appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Well, I can not understand why such a policy was not presented to the committee. Training camps have been authorized, men have been invited that they should appear at such camps. The most important thing we need to-day, while it may be matériel, I do not know, but I think it is officers, and yet we have no provision up to date comparatively for training officers except that if they will come at their own expense we will have somebody train them.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, at one time it was contemplated that they should come at their own expense and submit to training and subsequently an examination, and if they qualified, they would then be commissioned and thereafter receive regular pay. The injustice of this is, to my mind, apparent, because manifestly many men desirous of qualifying as officers and who would make very desirable officers might not be qualified financially to go to these training camps.

Mr. MANN. I understand. It is a matter that has been running for weeks and certainly it ought not to take the War Department two weeks, and I do not think it ought to take 15 minutes, to determine the policy that it ought to pursue with reference to some appropriation for training officers.

Mr. McKENZIE. If the gentleman from Kentucky will yield, I would like to ask my colleague if he does not think it will be necessary to have some legislation authorizing an appropriation and providing that these officers shall receive certain pay. Surely no one would think that a man as a member of the officers' reserve corps going to school for the Army should be entitled to full pay as a commissioned officer.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is one of the difficulties.

Mr. McKENZIE. It seems to me there should be a bill introduced and sent to the committee, perhaps the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MANN. We just passed a bill from the committee on Military Affairs. Before that bill came in I assumed, of course, there was provision for training officers, but there was not. I did not offer an amendment to it because I have sense enough to know better, but there is no provision either in this bill for money, and one thing we need is officers, and we are making no provision for officers except to let men go to camps at their own expense and take a little training.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield? I think I may throw a little light on this subject.

Mr. SHERLEY. I want to conclude in a moment.

Mr. BORLAND. The military appropriation bill, H. R. 13, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, carried an item of $3,000,000 for the pay of members of the Officers' Reserve Corps, but that is after the officer is commissioned, as I understand, and he went from there into the service. Every officer in the training camp is paid. Now, students who go to the training camps go of their own volition, and they are furnished mileage and subsistence, but no provision has been made for their pay; and probably we ought not to make provision for the pay of those who are just simply invited to take a preliminary training with the idea of being appointed officers.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Missouri having given me information, I will give to the gentleman the information that I have in my possession, a letter from the War Department stating they have neither the authority nor the money—neither the law nor the money—which authorizes them to pay a reserve officer any salary while he is in one of these training camps.

Mr. SHERLEY. The Army bill has not become a law.

Mr. BORLAND. That is H. R. 13 as it passed the House.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman from Kentucky will yield, I have information from an officer high in command of the Army to the effect that there is no intention whatever to pay men to go to military training camps to be trained for officers.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, I do not think that that is something the Congress or the country is going to take kindly to.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think so, either.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think, before this bill becomes a law, a definite policy should be determined, and that there will be provision in the bill carrying a sufficient sum to take care of that situation.

Mr. MADDEN. I have the statement of people high in authority, of the executive branch of the Government, to the effect that the men who go to these military training camps to be trained ought to have sufficient patriotism in them to do it for nothing; but that is not the way to do it.

Mr. SHERLEY. The trouble is, patriotism might exist and yet the ability to take care of oneself under those conditions would not exist, and it would put a handicap upon the poor man and a premium upon the man of means becoming an officer.

Mr. MADDEN. I agree to that, and I think the department is wrong when they make the statement to the effect that they ought to go without pay.

Mr. SHERLEY. But the committee did not feel warranted in undertaking to legislate on this subject or to carry a specific fund when it did not have legislation that would be a basis for such a sum.

Mr. COMSTOCK. Will the gentleman yield for just a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will.

Mr. COMSTOCK. I find a reference in this bill, one on the bottom of page 15 and one on the bottom of page 16 in reference to the purchase of supplies and mileage for reserve officers. I speak now of a matter I have seen a reference to. I understand the law provides for a salary for reserved officers who have been commissioned. There are a number who have been examined and have been found qualified, and which they propose to call to these training camps. Did the committee consider the pay of those who had not received commissions but who had qualified?

Mr. SHERLEY. The committee did not undertake to go into details of that sort. They took the estimates. We took the recommendation of the department except to the extent of reducing the details on the basis of 1,000,000 men for 8 months instead of 1,000,000 men for 12 months.

Now, there may be some matters carried in this bill that will need revision by the Senate committee upon information that developed subsequent to our examination and that will require a change in amounts. It may be necessary to make the provision, very much restricted as it should be, for the interchange of certain percentages of amounts in particular departments. And I repeat that the problem that confronted the committee and that confronts this House is a problem that can not be accurately and definitely solved, of just how to carry an appropriation so as to keep control of expenditures and yet in no sense interfere with the efficiency of the Army. I have no doubt that the Congress and I am sure that the committee that has considered this matter are prepared to meet new and unperceived conditions that may arise as they arise. I do not believe that the position that was strongly urged by a limited number of department officials could be followed, that because of the need of taking care of unforeseen matters we should simply throw down the bars entirely and give a lump-sum appropriation.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman had representatives of the Quartermaster Corps before him. Was there anything proposed to the gentleman's committee in connection with reducing to a smaller number the bookkeeping items, for instance, of regular supplies for the Army?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes. They presented their statement first in that form.

Mr. TILSON. Reducing it to 3 instead of 11 different items?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes. I thoroughly agree with the wisdom of doing that.

Mr. TILSON. So do I.

Mr. SHERLEY. But the Committee on Appropriations did not feel warranted in undertaking to determine a matter which primarily rested with the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TILSON. Unfortunately the Committee on Military Affairs also was unwilling to undertake it at this time, although I urged it with all my might. I think the change should be made.

Mr. SHERLEY. We followed the language of the three bills which carry the items for the Army, the language of the Army bill, of the fortifications bill, and of the sundry civil bill, and we did that for the very plain and compelling reason that in order when these respective bills were taken up at the regular session there would be some knowledge in the committee dealing with them as to the moneys that were available and have been available for the different purposes.

To my own judgment, our entire system of appropriating moneys is wrong. I have undertaken to say to the House over a series of 8 or 10 years that we are undertaking the impossible by our present method of detailed appropriations. We detail appropriations in order to tie the departments and prevent them from using moneys for purposes other than Congress intends and to compel economy of administration, but the result is usually that we tie the activities of an efficient officer, of an efficient administrator, and the inefficient one finds some way to circumvent our requirements. What is needed, and what this war will force upon the Congress of the United States, because of the magnitude of the sums we are dealing with, is a system of bookkeeping so devised as to not simply prevent embezzlement but to also show the cost of performing particular activities of the Government. Our entire bookkeeping system is predicated upon the idea of preventing misappropriation of funds. That it does, but it does nothing else. What is needed is to have a system which not only does that but also enables the Congress by an examination of the expenditures of a preceding year to determine not simply that the moneys that have been appropriated have been spent for the purposes intended, but that they have been efficiently expended, and then the remedy is not to tie the activities of department officials when you find they have been inefficiently expended but to cut off the head of the man who is responsible for the inefficiency of administration and to trust the man who is efficient. But under our present system there is no way of determining except by a species of cross-examination, which is more or less inadequate, who is efficient and who is inefficient. And the result is that Congress being unwilling to trust an agent that it can not control constantly undertakes to tie his initiative, with the result that we have wrapped the activities of the Government in red tape to the extent that it will require another Dickens to make the people realize it and get from under.

Mr. TILSON. Is there not danger of our suffering from the very same thing? And if we have suffered in carrying out the fewer activities we have heretofore had, shall we not fare even worse when compelled to enlarge our activities? Are we not in danger of so tying the hands of the executive departments, by framing this bill in the terms of previous bills, that we are going to considerably hamper their work?

Mr. SHERLEY. I am inclined to think that the sums granted now are so tremendous, and the ability of the department to expend them within the time this bill is supposed to make provision for, that there will not be the difficulty, at least, to anything like the extent the gentleman fears.

But, as I stated, it may develop that there will arise a need of giving a certain leeway, such as we gave in connection with the Panama Canal estimates, when we provided for the interchange of some 10 per cent in various items that were carried in the various appropriation bills in connection with the construction of the Panama Canal. But at this particular time it was exceedingly desirable that we should present in the language of the usual bills this tremendous appropriation. The moment this bill was reported to the House it underwent, and will continue to undergo, the scrutiny of the departments, and I am quite sure that if there is any real handicap upon their proper activities it will be brought to the attention of the Congress and be remedied before the bill is written into final law.

Mr. TILSON. Well, I am with the gentleman on that; but can not the gentleman conceive of there being, in an emergency of this kind, worse harm coming to the Government than even theft, and that it might be less harmful by the relaxation of a little red tape to permit even a few thefts than it would be to tie the hands of the Executive too much?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not think we need to take that alternative. I believe we can have, and will have, moneys honestly expended, but I agree thoroughly with what was in the gentleman's mind, that time is in many instances more important than money, and that the worse sort of economy would be an economy that was practiced at the expense of time. We are going to pay of necessity very much more for many things which we obtain in a hurry than we would pay if we acquired them over a long period of time, but the need is now. Let us hope that the need will not be in a few years to come.

I assure the gentleman that so far as I may have any voice in the making of these bills it will be given along the line of supplying the necessary moneys to the departments to enable them at the earliest possible moment to do the things that are at hand to be done, because I do not delude myself with any hope that other gentlemen seem to possess, that we may at any time wake up and observe that this great tragic war has disappeared and that we can step back into the old humdrum, peaceable methods that we pursued in the days that are gone. I fear that this country is facing months and years of trial, in which men will have to be willing to make a real sacrifice, and in which every energy of the Government will have to be speeded up to the highest possible point of efficiency.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for just one word further?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. I have spoken thus not in criticism of the bill at all, but spoken feelingly, because I have had some little experience at the other end of the proposition—that of spending appropriations in the field. I have observed the supply of troops under field conditions, though that was at a time when the Army was comparatively small; in fact, infinitesimally small as compared with the Army that we may be compelled to have later on. If the conditions were complicated then, what may they become with a very large Army and a vast number of comparatively inexperienced officers to expend these funds?

Mr. SHERLEY. The problem confronting the Congress is the most difficult that ever confronted a Congress—to steer a course between the two extremes of absolutely turning over all moneys without any real restriction to the departments on the one hand and on the other so curtailing their initiative as to paralyze their effective preparation for the war.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman retires from the floor, if he will permit, I would like to refer to his dissertation on the training camps. I am sure he can answer an inquiry I received this morning, whether these young men who are admitted from the schools and universities, but have had no training whatever—whether that action will in any way militate against or do injustice to the members of the National Guard who have long seen service and who have some military training and who are ambitious to advance, as all those in military service are anxious to do—whether their opportunity will not be lost in the presence of those who will now come in and supplant them?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not see it in that way. I hope that opportunity will be given to men not now holding commissions in the National Guard to strive for commissions in the National Army. I have no fear that we are going to have a superabundance of officers. I think we are going to have difficulty in training, within the time that we can properly give to it, enough officers.

Mr. FOCHT. The thought was that, instead of taking these young men from the schools, we should call officers from the National Guard and from those having experience and put the students in the companies.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is not a matter that we ought to control here. The thing we ought to try to do is to determine broad basic things and to let alone the details of an army and its management. We can not blunder worse than by undertaking to make ourselves judges as to the merits of particular methods of doing things in connection with the raising of an army.

Mr. FOCHT. The question, then, shall still remain in the minds of these young men that, even though they have been ambitious to advance in the service, others are about to take the places of rank they have long hoped for and to which they would seem to be justly entitled.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, there is no answer to make to a great many things that are being asked now by our constituents; but the answer will come in due course, and one of the greatest of virtues at this particular time is patience. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman passes from the first part of this bill, may I ask whether the gentlemen are correct in their title to this bill, "To supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the Military and Naval Establishments" of the United States Government, and if so, why are these other matters brought in here?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman ought to read all the title.

Mr. TILSON. I know that "other purposes" are included at the end.

Mr. FITZGERALD. These are emergencies arising out of the war.

Mr. TILSON. Why in the title should it be limited to two departments of the Government, when there are items applying to a number of the other departments?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Because those two departments have 99.99 per cent of the appropriations, and the others, while they are insignificant, nevertheless result from the existing war situation. Furthermore, it is in accordance with the well-established practice and custom of the House, universally followed by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TILSON. Is it not a little more convenient, as the gentleman has found, to charge everything up to the Military and Naval Establishments as far as possible? We hear a great deal of talk about the tremendous cost of the Military and Naval Establishments. Is it not quite easy to charge everything up to these two establishments, especially in time of war?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it is not. If the gentleman will notice the items of which he is complaining he will see that here is a bill carrying about $2,827,000,000, and he seems to be afraid that because $8,540 for guards for the Treasury Department is carried in this bill the cost of the Military Establishment will be unduly exaggerated by including this item in the bill. No one else in the United States, or out of the United States, or in the heavens above, or in places below, will concur in that opinion. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to acquire, by purchase, donation, or by condemnation, such land sites throughout the United States as are immediately necessary for the permanent establishment of aviation schools, aviation posts, and experimental aviation stations and proving grounds for the United States Army: Provided further, That not more than $9,000,000 of the sum last above mentioned shall be made available for the purchase of land sites and for the improvement and preparation of land and waters contiguous thereto; for the construction, maintenance, and repair of permanent barracks, quarters, stables, storehouses, magazines, administration buildings, hangars, sheds, shops, garages, and other permanent buildings necessary for the shelter of aviation troops, public animals, stores and equipment, and for administration purposes; for the purchase of all equipment and material necessary for the installation, operation, and repair of all water, sewer, electric-light and electric-power systems; for the construction of roads, walks, and wharves; for the disposal of drainage; for the clearing, grading, rolling, seeding, dredging, and otherwise improving and preparing land and water sites; for rental and lease of grounds for aviation fields, camp sites, and other military aviation purposes; for rental and lease of buildings or portions of buildings for occupation by aviation troops, and for use as storehouses, offices, shops, garages, and for other military aviation purposes; for the purchase of office furniture and office equipment; for the purchase and installation of special equipment, supplies, and accessories necessary for the establishment of experimental stations and proving grounds, aviation schools, and aviation posts; for the purchase of such textbooks, books of reference, scientific and professional papers, periodicals and magazines, and the purchase of modern instruments and material for theoretical and practical instruction in all experimental stations and proving grounds and aviation schools and aviation posts: Provided further, That not more than $2,500,000 of the said sum of $9,000,000 shall be used for the purchase of land.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word about this item, and especially as illustrative of some other items in this bill.

This is a bill of tremendous magnitude, larger than Congress has ever had to deal with in its history. I can only account for the smallness of the attendance on the discussion of it by the fact that very few of the Members of Congress yet realize the scope of the present legislation. This is not one of the familiar supply bills which so frequently engage the time and attention of Congress, even down to the most minute details, but it is a much larger and more far-reaching piece of legislation. This not only means that we are spending $2,600,000,000 in one bill, but it means more than that. It means that we are compelled, in expending that vast sum, to mobilize practically all of the resources of our country, and this item in regard to aviation is a good illustration of that.

My understanding of the way in which the War Department has grappled with this problem is that it has called to its aid in good faith and according to the intention of Congress the Council of National Defense. It has submitted these problems, after they have been worked out from the technical standpoint of the military men, to the business judgment of the members of the Council of National Defense. Take this item. Here is $47,000,000 for aviation; as we believe, to establish aviation in this country on a sound, complete, and efficient basis. When the Signal Corps worked out what they needed in the way of aviation, how many squadrons they wanted in the air, and how many machines they required, and how many men, and so forth, then the problem of the production, construction, and supply of those machines became very acute. The number of machines that could be manufactured in this country prior to the declaration of war was very small, and unfortunately they were not of the highest type. They were what were ordinarily called school machines, slow in speed and heavy in construction, used abroad only for the purposes of training and instruction. They are not the high-power war machines that are fighting the battles in the air. Manifestly we must have such machines of all kinds for scouting purposes, especially along the Atlantic seaboard. The department submitted that problem to the Council of National Defense, and the Council of National Defense created a subcommittee on the subject, at the head of which is Capt. Walton, late of the Packard Motor Co., a man whose services command a large sum in the commercial world, but who, as I understand, is giving his services entirely free, as a patriotic contribution to the Government.

Capt. Walton immediately began to mobilize every possible manufacturer of aviation materials in this country, even down to the wood that is used for the fans. He found the exact capacity of the Curtiss factory. He found how that capacity could be extended by combining with a well-known motor manufacturer, the Willys-Overland. He found in detail how many machines could be manufactured in the United States within the next six months. He says that the aviation manufacturers, combined with the motor manufacturers, can, if supplied with the raw material, turn out, as they claim, 6,800 machines. He discounts that to 3,800 machines in six months. Of course, even that will be an enormous gain over our present equipment of machines. I want to state that to the House for their information and as an illustration of the care with which the War Department has gone into this matter.

Now, something has been said about our limiting these appropriations to specific items. I hope that we are not going to do that to the extent of crippling the efficiency of the War Department, but I am strongly opposed to the indolent method of making a lump-sum appropriation of $3,000,000,000. I think it not only invites extravagance, which seems inseparable from the supplying of every army that ever fought in the field, but I think it takes away from the representatives of the people the stimulus to add their interest and their information and their business sagacity to the conduct of the affairs of the Government. In other words, if we have to meet these items and have them before us for consideration, we will exercise upon them or ought to exercise upon them that judgment which the Constitution requires us to exercise upon the expenditure of the people's money. For that reason I am strongly in favor of the segregation of these items, so that Congress may have full information and full responsibility in the expenditure of this money.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BORLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. What objection would you have to having the bill carry the items, and get the benefit of the deliberations of the committee, and then at the end put in the same language which you have put in halfway through the bill and specify that in the wisdom of the department they might spend the money but not above the total sum which the bill provides? What objection would there be to that?

Mr. BORLAND. I do not think that would reach the same end. That would merely recite the various items, and then at the end of the bill wind up by saying "We do not mean to itemize these expenditures; we mean a lump sum."

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. We do that for about half of the bill.

Mr. BORLAND. We do that with the Quartermaster's Department. In the proviso on page 31 you will see—

That all the money hereinbefore appropriated under the titles Subsistence of the Army; Regular supplies, Quartermaster Corps; Incidental expenses, Quartermaster Corps; Transportation of the Army and its supplies; Water and sewers at military posts; and Clothing and camp and garrison equipage—

You see that all these sums are lumped together, and the gentleman will see how wide it is—

shall be disbursed and accounted for by officers and agents of the Quartermaster Corps as "Supplies, services, and transportation, Quartermaster Corps," and for that purpose shall constitute one fund.

There is the item which takes care of all the slack, or lost motion, that may occur in the separation of items.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I will.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to ask if the information the gentleman gave the House was given before the committee in the way of testimony?

Mr. BORLAND. No; I gained that by way of a visitation to the War Department and the Council for National Defense. I gleaned that information myself.

Mr. BLAND. Then it is not a military secret?

Mr. BORLAND. No; if it was a committee secret I should not have felt free to state it.

Mr. SNOOK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SNOOK. Do I understand the gentleman to say that by the appropriation for the Aviation Service you expect to add 3,800 machines next year?

Mr. BORLAND. That is the maximum number. They expect to absorb that.

Mr. SNOOK. That is the maximum?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; but these are of the scout type; they are not the high-power war machines that the French are using on the front; they are used for scouting and inspection purposes.

Now, there ought to be and there must be complete harmony between the executive and legislative branches of the Government in the conduct of this war. We have had a spirited debate in the last few days, in which some gentlemen imagine they are at war with the War Department; some imagine they are at war with the General Staff, and others seem to imagine that they are at war with the metropolitan newspapers. The fact is, we are at war with Germany, the most vigilant, active, highly organized enemy the world contains today. We are at war with a power which in every way can be denominated as first class, and which mobilizes its resources and has brought its power to the highest point of development. We want to bring our power and skill to the highest point of development. I do not think we shall find it necessary in doing so—certainly not now—to eliminate any constitutional guaranty, either in a separation of the legislative and executive branches of the Government with regard to the raising of the people's taxes or the expenditure of their money, or the ordinary right of life and property of the common citizen. I think we can preserve the constitutional rights and mobilize the resources to produce the highest efficiency and skill. But it will take very patient, hard work, and diligent consideration by this Congress to do it. We can not pass enormous lump-sum appropriations and check them up to the President or anyone else, but the responsibility in the last analysis ought to rest on our shoulders and we ought to assume it. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of officers of the line, including staff corps of the National Guard, $42,000,000.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee a question. How many officers does this provide for?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know the number. This sum and the amount in the Army bill provide for all the officers that will be required for the National Guard, the Regular Army, and the additional army of 500,000 men. I think 45,000 officers for an army of a million men.

Mr. DENT. Forty-five thousand officers. My recollection is the Secretary of War said before our committee that it would require about 20,000 additional officers for an army of a half a million men.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is, 20,000 in addition to those in the Regular Army; then for 500,000 additional men it would require 20,000 plus the officers in the National Guard and Regular Army, and that would make about 45,000.

Mr. DENT. A little less.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am speaking in round figures.

Mr. DENT. Will the gentleman tell the committee upon what basis it calculated the pay of the officers—whether they took a captain's pay or a first lieutenant's—how they reached the total sum, whether they had any basis upon which they could figure.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Quartermaster General estimated the amount of money that would be required to pay the officers in the Army for a period of one year, and the committee has accepted his calculation as to the actual amount required, but has deducted the amount carried in the Army appropriation bill and provided for the balance.

Mr. DENT. The committee did not have any fixed basis on which they could reach the total amount. In other words, by summing up from a general down to a second lieutenant.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Quartermaster General figures so many lieutenants, so many captains, so many majors, so many lieutenant colonels, so many colonels, and so forth, deducting the amount carried in the Army bill, and we provided the balance, less $4,000,000 that could not be used because it was estimated that they could not have that number of officers for the entire year.

Mr. DENT. One more question. I understand the Appropriation Committee, in fixing the amount in this bill, has deducted the amount of the pending annual Army appropriation bill now in conference.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; about $281,000,000, upon the theory that as the Army bill was pending with a certain maximum sum it would not be likely to be the policy of the representatives of the House in the conference to make any reduction when they would know that the money necessary would be provided, and it was assumed that the Army bill would carry the highest amount possible, and this would merely supplement those sums in the various items.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of enlisted men of all grades, including recruits, $120,000,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 3, strike out the sum of $120,000,000 and insert in lieu thereof the sum of $226,882,560.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, as I stated in my explanation of the bill, this series of amendments proposes to add two-thirds of the amount of the additional sum that would be required for a million men in the field upon the rate of pay calculated on the increase of $15 a month as proposed by the House.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT.

Pay of enlisted men, $336,240.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 5, strike out the sum of $336,240 and insert in lieu thereof the sum of $696,240.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Additional pay for length of service, $39,003.84.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I suppose they do not get additional pay for length of service? We did not increase the basic pay, only the rate of pay. That would not give increase for lengthened service.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it would not. I will make this statement: The Army bill carried an appropriation of $2,153,000 pay for additional length of service.

This is the difference between that sum and the estimate originally submitted. The Military Committee has customarily made a reduction upon the theory that some of these men will die. Perhaps this additional money is not necessary.

Mr. MANN. I understand that. The additional pay is a percentage increase and not a flat rate.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It would not affect it, as I understand it.

Mr. MANN. I do not know.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know whether it would or not.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. In regard to this item, "Pay for length of service," is it not a fact that if the basic pay is changed it will change not only this particular item but a number of other things, because if we change the basic pay, it will change not only pay for length of service but also the pay of noncommissioned officers in a way that probably will make a sergeant's pay higher than that of a second lieutenant. That is the reason, or at least I had supposed it to be the reason, why the Senate did not pass the same amendment that we had hastily passed in the House. As I understand, the only reason for $29 instead of $30 being fixed in the Senate was because that slight difference would throw the matter into conference, so that the scale of pay might be worked out in conference rather than do it by disturbing the basic pay.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It may be true. The Quartermaster General was asked to furnish a statement of what additional moneys will be required for pay if the pay of enlisted men were increased $15 per month. He furnished that statement in detail, but did not indicate that any money was required for additional pay for length of service.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I understood the gentleman's statement to be that because of increase of pay to enlisted men he did not think it necessary to appropriate additional pay for foreign service. How about the officers? They are not affected by the raise. The gentleman understands that it is customary to pay officers when serving outside of the country 20 per cent increase.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. How would the men who go to Europe be affected?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The statute provides, my recollection is, for additional pay for foreign service.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. We are going to have a lot of officers trained in training camps, which will require a considerable expense of money. Is that provided for in any way?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no provision for the payment of men while they are at the training school in advance of the commission, because there is no authority to pay them. I assume that if it is determined to adopt that policy provision will probably be inserted in the legislation that is to be considered by the Military Committee. This committee did not take up the question of legislation to provide things of that kind.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Maj. Pierce stated to the committee that if this appropriation were made in a lump sum, they would take care of that item, if necessary, out of that sum.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If it were made in a lump sum, and if the Secretary were authorized to expend it in any manner in which he pleased, as was proposed; but if these men are to be paid while they are in the training camp and before they get commissions it seems to me that the Congress ought to determine that fact and ought to determine how much they are to receive.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I had reference particularly to the subsistence of the men.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is taken care of here.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Is it not true that a number of men are unable to go to the training camps because there is no appropriation for their services during that period?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The situation, as I understand it, is this: Men who have applied for commissions are being sent to training camps for preliminary training before it is determined whether they shall be given commissions. It is stated that there are many men who can not afford to go to these camps for this preliminary training unless provision be made to compensate them; that they will lose the ordinary emoluments of their various occupations and will receive nothing from the Government. There is no authority to pay men prior to the receipt by them of commissions, and there is complaint upon that ground. I understand that the matter is to be taken up and considered by the Military Committee.

Mr. DOWELL. I am receiving a great many complaints because people who are to attend these camps will lose their salaries and receive nothing to pay the expenses of those dependent upon them, and it occurs to me that we ought to make some arrangements whereby they will receive pay during the time they are preparing themselves for these commissions.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Probably some arrangement should be made, but it is a matter that should be worked out carefully, and the compensation determined and the period during which they are to be compensated should be determined, and that is a matter to be worked out in detail.

Mr. DOWELL. I was just making the inquiry to ascertain if it would not be possible to pay some compensation for this time that is taken necessarily out of their employment. My personal opinion is that it would be desirable to compensate these men during that period, and I shall vote for any provision that may be submitted along such lines. I hope the gentleman will assist in getting something from the Military Affairs Committee allowing some compensation for them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Of course, there are a number of matters of legislation that the Committee on Military Affairs I have no doubt will take up and work out. They have been pretty busy thus far this session, and you can not do everything that an emergency such as this requires in a few days.

Mr. DOWELL. Just another question. The training camps are open now on the 5th of May.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. On the 15th.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The 15th of May.

Mr. DOWELL. A number of communications that I have received indicate that persons are unable to attend those training camps now because they can not go and not receive the salary that they are now receiving in view of the fact they will not receive anything from the training-camp service.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I understand and appreciate the difficulty. I merely ask for information as to another class. The question already answered relates to a class attending these camps for the purpose of getting a commission. Now, some of those who have received commissions have been instructed to attend these training camps. Is there any provision of which the gentleman knows for paying those men?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are in the Reserve Officers' Corps, and provision has been made to compensate them and to pay their travel and subsistence.

Mr. DALLINGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will.

Mr. DALLINGER. I understand that the training camp in Cambridge, Mass., in connection with Harvard University, has been given up, or is soon to be discontinued, because the department says they have not the money to pay the subsistence of the men while they are there, to say nothing of compensation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know what the policy of the department is. I know the department got all the money it asked for that purpose.

Mr. DALLINGER. In other words, it is not the fault of Congress they have not got the money, but simply because they do not want to do it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would not say it was anybody's fault; war has been declared since Congress convened about two or three weeks ago.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, there is $3,281,000 carried in the Army bill for the purpose of civilian military training, and that is available for subsistence, transportation, and a number of other things, such as uniforms and expenditures necessary for water, fuel, light, temporary structures, and so forth.

Mr. DALLINGER. Will the gentleman from Kentucky permit a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. DALLINGER. If it was thought wise by the War Department to have another training camp east of Plattsburg before war was declared just as a matter of preparation, why, when war is declared and we want to mobilize all our forces, is this camp now discontinued?

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman will have to ask the War Department, but I have no doubt it is from very good reasons, and I have no doubt camps ought not to be located as a result of local pressure for them.

Mr. DALLINGER. This camp, as I understand it, was located there by the War Department because——

Mr. SHERLEY. It is probably not a good place.

Mr. DALLINGER (continuing). Because of its proximity to big universities containing thousands of young men.

Mr. SHERLEY. They are not going to get men simply from the universities, and probably there was no reason for continuing it.

Mr. DALLINGER. The reason was, they could not get the money for subsistence.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think that statement is absolutely erroneous. I do not know that Congress has refused to give money for any purpose connected with this war emergency.

Mr. GARDNER. Is not this the difficulty? You appropriate in the current appropriation bill $3,000,000 for the Plattsburg camp to train civilians. That is on a peace basis. Now you are going to have training camps not only for civilians, but for men who have already got commissions in the Officers' Reserve Corps, and there is no provision under law for paying those men. The officers of the reserve corps who already have their commissions are going to be at these camps the same way as the civilians. They will be paid as officers. Of course, they have to transport themselves at their own expense originally. The civilian goes there at Government expense, and the fact is $3,000,000 is not nearly enough to pay the bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, as soon as the bill becomes a law there will be money to pay those who have commissions.

Mr. GARDNER. Certainly; but the man who has got a commission has got to go at his own expense to the training camp——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not understand so.

Mr. GARDNER. Every new officer of the United States, even your cadet going to West Point, must report in the first instance at his own expense. It is exactly the same thing with the Officers' Reserve Corps.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That may be true; I do not know.

Mr. GARDNER. Take a man in my district, for instance, who wants to go to this training camp—possibly already he has his commission. He wants to know how he is going to get his expenses paid, whether he is going to have his expenses paid if he goes there, whether he is going to have a uniform, and whether he is going to get any payment.

There is no possible way on earth to answer the man's question until you have that additional legislation. You have only provided $3,000,000 for these training camps, and that is on a peace basis.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The $3,000,000 in the Army bill.

Mr. GARDNER. That is on a supposed peace basis. That is very slightly more than you had last year.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is somewhat in error still. As it passed the House it is $2,250,000, and has been increased by a Senate amendment. The absence of an estimate by the War Department before us for this purpose was evidence that for the present they thought they had money enough when they got this $3,000,000.

Mr. GARDNER. It may be so, but I find the greatest difficulty in getting an exact statement from the War Department.

Mr. SHERLEY. The trouble is, I really think, that they have not yet determined what is to be the policy touching the pay of men who have not yet received commissions but who are to be applicants for commissions. Now, if they are to be paid at the rate of officers, even of the lowest grade, that will have to be provided for by legislation, and then, of course, there will have to be additional funds made available.

Mr. GARDNER. That is to say, in order to pay the civilian in training you have to have additional legislation?

Mr. SHERLEY. If you are going to pay them more than enlisted men, if you are going to pay at the rate of lieutenants——

Mr. GARDNER. You can not pay them as enlisted men, can you—a civilian in training?

Mr. SHERLEY. It depends on whether or not they enlist. My understanding was that the original plan was that they were to enlist with further contract that they would accept the commission if it was given to them, and if they did not make good they would be discharged, but they would be enlisted men while they were there.

Mr. GARDNER. Now, then, let me get this thing exactly correct, because I want to know how to answer these numerous inquiries which I get. I can say when this bill passes they will have their subsistence paid, anyway?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not think there is any doubt about that.

Mr. GARDNER. So far as the $3,000,000 is concerned, their uniforms are provided for and their equipment and their transportation, to that extent, and beyond that it has not yet been decided what their status will be? In other words, exactly under what conditions transportation will be furnished them and whether or not they will get pay for their services are matters Congress has not yet determined.

Mr. SHERLEY. They will get transportation.

Mr. GARDNER. So far as the $3,000,000 will pay for it?

Mr. DOWELL. One question, please. At the present time, under the present regulations, do they not have to make a deposit also when they enter the training camp?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not familiar with what the regulations of the War Department are. It is a matter of administration, and I am not familiar with it. I am not going to bother with it, either.

Mr. OLNEY. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] is absolutely correct in his statement that there is no provision in this bill for the appointment of these men who are going to train at these summer camps. In talking with the War Department the Secretary approves the plan of paying all these men who train $100 a month. Hundreds of men are pouring into the offices of the summer training camps, because these camps become privileged and are the only places where rich men can go. And it is economy and a very important proposition that a recommendation be made to pay all men who train at these places during the three-months' period $100.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let them make their recommendation to Congress.

Mr. OLNEY. The conferees may arrange that, but that being subject to a point of order it might be best to offer an amendment here to take care of those men who train.

Mr. FITZGERALD. You can not offer an amendment of that character here and have it pass, because I should certainly introduce a point of order against it. The matter ought to be prepared and considered by the Committee on Military Affairs, and not done offhand.

Mr. HULBERT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. HULBERT. I understood from one of the officers of the War Department within the past hour that it was stated that some arrangement would be perfected growing out of the conference on the bill which was under consideration last week providing for at least some specific direction respecting the paying of these men while at the training camp. Would not such legislation be prerequisite to this bill containing a provision making the necessary appropriation?

Mr. DOWELL. Is it not a fact, however, that the bill that has just passed both Houses and is in conference does not have a question that will permit the conferees to make a report on the training camps?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not so sure about that. That is a parliamentary question on which I would not like to commit myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired on this.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended for one minute. I have listened here to the discussion about the severity of this war that we are going into, and the volunteer forces met a very severe loss here in the House last week. I think I might term it the first battle. The gentleman from New York is well informed. I see by the statement of the General Staff, in the estimates in which they ask for this money, they describe the forces to be raised as Regular Army, 242,954; National Guard, 329,954; "volunteers," 500,000; total enlisted men, 1,072,908, and 45,462 officers.

And then, on page 179, it says:

For the expense of equipping a force of 500,000 "volunteers," in addition to the Regular Army and National Guard and a reserve supply for one year.

And a letter from the Chief of Engineers to The Adjutant General states:

In accordance with instructions from The Adjutant General dated March 26, I submit herewith emergency supplemental estimates of the amounts required by the Engineer Department in case of the organization of a volunteer army of 500,000 men in addition to the Regular Army and National Guard.

And on page 180 there is the following letter from the Chief of Engineers to The Adjutant General:

Replying to your confidential letter dated March 21, 1917, the following estimates are submitted. These estimates include those called for in your letter dated March 21, 1917 (no file number), subject "Supplies and material for 500,000 volunteers."

Then, on page 180 I read:

1. Replying to your confidential letter dated March 21, 1917 (A. G. O. 2554258), the following estimates are submitted. These estimates include those called for in your letter dated March 21, 1917 (no file number), subject "Supplies and material for 500,000 volunteers."

Then, on page 182 appears the following from a letter addressed by the Ordnance Office to The Adjutant General:

1. In compliance with the instructions contained in letter from The Adjutant General's Office, dated March 26, 1916, A. G. O. 2555146 (O. O. 381.1/162), there are transmitted herewith estimates under the Army bill, the fortification bill, and the sundry civil bill (Panama Canal) covering the needs of the Ordnance Department for the equipment of a force of 1,000,000 men (500,000 National Guard and Regular Army and 500,000 volunteers).

Also items addressed to The Adjutant General showing that up to that time the official order was for 500,000 volunteers. That was on March 28, 1917. Can you tell me at what time in the interval between then and now the policy was changed from volunteers to conscripts?

Mr. FITZGERALD. As near as I can say, it was on Saturday night. [Laughter.]

I think I have what the gentleman has in mind. When it was believed that war was to be declared, the War Department determined at once to prepare estimates for an army consisting of 1,000,000 men. It was estimated that under the national defense act they were entitled to 242,000 men in the Regular Army; that under the National Guard they would get a number, I think, equal to about 329,000 men, and then there were to be 500,000 men additional. In preparing the estimates the department used the term "volunteers" in a generic sense. There were to be 500,000 men outside of the Regular Army and the National Guard; and it was pointed out that the expense of paying, subsisting, organizing, and equipping the men would be the same, whether they were obtained through the volunteer system or through a selective draft. I think the terms used in the preparation of these estimates were used advisedly, in deference to the fact that Congress itself had not determined upon any system other than a possible volunteer system. I think that explains the use of these terms.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. As I understood the gentleman, he said he would raise the point of order if this amendment were offered to this bill at this time. Assuming now that the Committee on Military Affairs would present such an amendment before this bill finally passes the House, would the gentleman then waive such a question of order and permit such an amendment to be considered?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I can not say as to that. I think this bill will be passed in a few hours, and I think the Committee on Military Affairs will not have an opportunity to prepare an amendment within that time. The opportunity will be given for it to prepare that legislation, and the money will be provided in accordance with law. Of course I have to make these points of order because that obligation falls upon me, inasmuch as I am in charge of the bill. I am in favor of these men going into training camps prior to the time of receiving their commissions, but in conformity with my obligation to the House I shall be constrained to make a point of order against an amendment to accomplish what I personally would like very much to see done.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read:

The Clerk read as follows:

QUARTERMASTER CORPS.

Pay of enlisted men, $15,114,328.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: On page 12, line 8, strike out the sum of "$15,114,328" and insert in lieu thereof "$24,890,128."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay of enlisted men, $10,000,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 12, line 14, strike out "$10,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof the sum "$18,748,960."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $1,178,000: Provided, That no clerk, messenger, or laborer at headquarters of tactical divisions, military departments, brigades, service schools, and office of the Chief of Staff shall be assigned to duty in any bureau in the War Department.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know whether these are all additional clerks to the present force?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are all additional.

Mr. ROBBINS. Are they appointed from the civil-service certified lists or otherwise?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are all in the classified service and are appointed from the civil-service lists.

Mr. ROBBINS. Here is an increase of a thousand clerks in that paragraph—1,024 clerks.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is a clerical force required for an Army of a million men. It is about a thousand clerks.

Mr. ROBBINS. It is 1,024. They are all appointed from the civil-service certified lists?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; from the civil-service certified lists.

Mr. ROBBINS. And not by political influence?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. These are all in the classified service and appointed from the civil-service lists. There is no patronage in this.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clothing and camp and garrison equipage: For cloth, woolens, materials, and for the purchase and manufacture of clothing for the Army, including enlisted men of the Regular Army Reserve and retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty, for issue and for sale at cost price according to the Army Regulations; for payment for clothing not drawn due to enlisted men on discharge; for altering and fitting clothing, and washing and cleaning when necessary; for equipage, including authorized issues of toilet articles, barbers' and tailors' materials, for use of general prisoners confined at military posts without pay or allowances and applicants for enlistments while held under observation; issue of toilet kits to recruits upon their first enlistment, and issue of housewives to the Army; for expenses of packing and handling, and similar necessaries; for a suit of citizen's outer clothing, to cost not exceeding $10, to be issued upon release from confinement to each prisoner who has been confined under a court-martial sentence involving dishonorable discharge: for indemnity to officers and men of the Army for clothing and bedding, etc., destroyed since April 22, 1898, by order of medical officers of the Army for sanitary reasons, $231,538,548.64.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the chairman, in view of the very large estimates, whether we have anything accurate, or are they more or less guesses? Here, for example, is an item of $231,000,000, and it ends with 64 cents.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is based upon obtaining certain supplies for a definite number of men, and there is a unit cost that is adopted, based upon experience, and that is calculated accurately.

Mr. FESS. It would seem to me that it could not be estimated down to the last cent.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It may vary a little, but it is calculated accurately for the number of men, based upon a unit cost.

Mr. FESS. It deals in more than mere probability, then?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the Quartermaster's Department estimates quite accurately the cost of these outfits.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Aviation: For aviation, including not to exceed $150,000 for the purchase of land, and for procuring, producing, constructing, operating, preserving, storing, and handling aircraft, including rigid dirigibles, and appurtenances, maintenance of aircraft stations and experimental work in development of aviation for naval purposes, $11,000,000: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy for drafting, clerical, inspection, and messenger service for aircraft stations shall not exceed $150,000.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee for some information relative to the $150,000 for the purchase of land, in line 22, on page 50. Is the land to be purchased at Pensacola?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They expect to establish a number of patrol stations, and, as I recollect now, this is for land on the Chesapeake, around Hampton Roads.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Is this a starter toward the purchase of the Jamestown Exposition site?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; this is independent of that. The Jamestown matter is not included in this bill.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Is it not true that it is the Jamestown site that certain people have been urging for a new aviation station?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Jamestown matter was specifically requested, but was not included. My recollection is that the cost of the land proposed to be purchased at Jamestown is $1,400,000.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. What is the necessity of starting a new aviation station at this time? Why can we not conduct this aviation work at Pensacola?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are establishing a number of patrol stations as a part of the active defense work.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say to the chairman of the committee that for some time there has been a movement on foot to get the Navy Department to take over the Jamestown Exposition grounds for one purpose or another.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Jamestown item is not in this bill. The specific request was made, but was not granted.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Has the land appropriated for in this item been selected?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They have not located this particular land.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. They have not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; they thought they might need to buy some land.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Is it to be in the vicinity of Norfolk?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They were unable to state just where this station was to be. It is not the Jamestown matter.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Is there anything in this bill that will prohibit the department from purchasing the Jamestown grounds, or is there any reason why under this bill they could not purchase a portion of the Jamestown grounds?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They could not purchase it with this amount. The price asked is $1,400,000. I would be very glad if they could purchase the Jamestown site for $150,000. I would not have any objection to that.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Does not the chairman of the committee think that perhaps this is the first step toward the acquisition of the Jamestown land? A little of it now and then more later on?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have stated to the gentleman that I think not. The Jamestown proposition was specifically submitted, and is not included in the bill.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. This question of additional land for aviation purposes has been before the Naval Committee on several occasions, and the Naval Committee have not seen fit to include money for this purpose at any time, and I am inclined to think that that committee has given the matter much more thorough consideration than the Committee on Appropriations can possibly have given it in so short a time and in the rush of other matters.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Navy Department requested unlimited authority to expend money for the purchase of land.

Mr. BUTLER. At what point?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. In the Chesapeake Bay region.

Mr. BUTLER. I will make a point of order against that, if it is not too late. We have had that quarrel up for a long time.

Mr. SHERLEY. The Committee on Appropriations were just as much determined not to enter into the purchase of the Jamestown Exposition grounds as were the members of the Naval Affairs Committee, and it was largely because we appreciated your opposition, and realized that it must be based upon proper grounds, that we would not listen to their proposal to carry an item for that purpose; and this money is not intended, and will not be used, for purchasing the Jamestown Exposition grounds.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Does not the gentleman think that if this $150,000 is used for the purchase of land in the Chesapeake Bay region, it will simply mean the beginning of a new aviation station and the abandonment of Pensacola, just as has been advocated for some little time?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me state to the gentleman this——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. We have made a big investment at Pensacola, and now we are urged to abandon it apparently and to start a new station at Jamestown or some place near Norfolk.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I was in error. It is intended to establish 11 patrol stations. They wish to obtain tracts of about 40 acres at each of these different places and to construct the hangars and other buildings. It is estimated that the cost of each station will not exceed $300,000. They hope to get the land donated in some places. It is estimated that it may cost

$10,000 or $15,000 for land at these different places. The department asked that they be given unlimited authority to spend money for the purchase of land. I am not able to say whether it is absolutely essential as a military necessity to patrol our coasts with aeroplanes at this time. All the military experts of the Government say so. I am not in a position to resist an appropriation for what the military experts are unanimously agreed on. I would not set up my judgment against theirs.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman states that the $150,000 is not to be expended at one place?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Jamestown Exposition matter was specifically outlined, and authority was requested. The committee investigated the matter, and after we had finished I conferred with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT], chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs. I submitted to him the statement made before the Committee on Appropriations as to the necessity and desirability and importance of acquiring that site. He took that statement and examined it. He then obtained for me the statements that have been made at different times before the Committee on Naval Affairs, and as the result of those conferences the Committee on Appropriations refused to recommend an appropriation to purchase and to improve the Jamestown site.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I understand the statement of the chairman to be that this entire sum of money is not to be expended in one place.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it is not. I inadvertently made that statement.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Would the gentleman object to an amendment by the way of a proviso being put in to prevent the purchase of the Jamestown site?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will state what it is for and let the committee determine that. I had rather not have the Jamestown site mentioned in it.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I do not want a new station started there until the matter can be fully considered.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think an attempt would be made to acquire the Jamestown site under this provision. The amounted requested for the Jamestown site purchase was $1,400,000 for, I think, 440 acres.

Mr. BUTLER. The Jamestown site, I understand, has over 400 acres.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Three hundred and twenty, and a hundred and some odd acres additional toward the channel. The entire tract was proposed to be bought. This is not for that purpose.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will say, as has been stated, that it is not intended for that purpose. It would be a gross abuse of the freedom we are allowing the department if it was made the medium for subsequently acquiring that land. I do not believe the Navy Department would be guilty of that breach of confidence—and I say this in order that the RECORD may show what is in the minds of the committee and of Congress.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If we could acquire that property that has been suggested by the Navy Department for $150,000, I think we would get a good bargain.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. If we start with $150,000 and make that investment in the property at Jamestown, it will be only one more step to go ahead and buy the rest subsequently. I do not think we should embark on the matter of buying land without knowing the ultimate purpose of the transaction.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not know so much about the Navy people, because I have appropriated less for them, but the Army never violates an understanding such as I am now stating. We repeatedly appropriate millions of dollars which, under the language of the appropriation, the Army could use for a purpose other than stated, but they never do it. I have no doubt but that the Navy will have the same high regard for the understanding on which such appropriations are made.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This money is to acquire several tracts at different stations.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert an amendment at the end of line 5, page 51, as follows: "Provided, That no part of this sum shall be used to purchase the Jamestown site or any portion thereof."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 51, after line 5, insert "Provided further, That no part of this sum shall be used for the purchase of the Jamestown site or any part thereof."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Michigan to the fact that this appropriation of $150,000 is for drafting clerks and inspection and messenger service. Of course that could not be used for the purchase of land, anway.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Where would the amendment come in to make it effective?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman's proviso should come at the end of line 5, page 51, after the $11,000,000.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment in that respect by putting it at the end of line 5, page 51.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modification of the amendment as stated by the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, would it annoy the gentleman from New York if I asked him a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will yield.

Mr. BUTLER. It is proposed by the Navy Department to acquire territory for aviation fields, which has given us some concern, and we have made some investigation. It is intended to purchase aviation fields along the coast to be used for the training of men to fly and for the use of flying machines, and at the same time afford protection to the coast.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Primarily as patrol stations.

Mr. BUTLER. After the war is over we will have on hand these 10 places.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They have to erect hangars.

Mr. BUTLER. I hoped that they might be able to rent these fields so that we might sometime get rid of them. It is my contention that we have too many fields and too many lands and not enough ships to sail the seas.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman will appreciate the fact that out of the $16,000,000——

Mr. BUTLER. I appreciate it, but I anticipate that the war is going to end sometime, and after the war is over I do not want too many fields on hand, for I know the enormous expense that is required to maintain them.

The Clerk read as follows:

Instrument and supplies: Supplies for seamen's quarters and for the purchase of all other articles of equipage at home and abroad and for the payment of labor in equipping vessels therewith and manufacture of such articles in the several navy yards; all pilotage and towage ships of war; canal tolls, wharfage, dock and port charges, and other necessary incidental expenses of a similar nature; services and materials in repairing, correcting, adjusting, and testing compasses on shore and on board ship; nautical and astronomical instruments and repairs to same; libraries for ships of war, professional books, schoolbooks, and papers; maintenance of gunnery and other training classes; compasses, compass fittings, including binnacles, tripods, and other appendages of ship's compasses; logs and other appliances for measuring the ship's way, and leads and other appliances for sounding; photographs, photographic instruments and materials, printing outfit and materials; and for the necessary civilian electricians for gyrocompass testing and inspection, $5,743,440.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I think language of this kind does not appear in the regular naval appropriation bill. Can the chairman give me some idea of how this sum was arrived at?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That language is in the regular appropriation bill. They are the supplies based upon the theory that the enlisted strength is to be increased 250,000 men.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I do not recall any heading of this kind appearing in the regular naval bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman has the regular naval appropriation bill he will see that this is the identical language.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval training station, Great Lakes: Maintenance of naval training station: Labor and material; general care, repairs, and improvements of grounds, buildings, and piers; street car fare; purchase and maintenance of live stock and attendance on same; motor-propelled vehicles, wagons, carts, implements, and tools, and repairs to same, including the maintenance, repair, and operation of one motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle and one horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicle to be used only for official purposes; fire apparatus and extinguishers; gymnastic implements; models and other articles needed in instruction of apprentice seamen; printing outfit and material, and maintenance of same; heating and lighting and repairs to power-plant equipment, distributing mains, tunnel, and conduits; stationery, books, schoolbooks, and periodicals; washing; packing boxes and materials; lectures and suitable entertainments for apprentice seamen; and all other contingent expenses: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy for clerical, drafting, inspection, and messenger service shall not exceed 4,500; in all, naval training station——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. On page 56, line 17, I notice that the dollar mark is omitted before the figures "4,500."

Mr. FITZGERALD. There should be a dollar mark inserted there.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] called my attention to it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I move to amend by inserting the dollar mark before the figures "4,500," in line 17, page 56.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 56, line 17, insert the dollar mark before the figures "4,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent, Bureau of Yards and Docks: For contingent expenses and minor extensions and improvements of public works at navy yards and stations, $750,000.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I call attention to lines 22, 23, and 24, on page 59. That carries an appropriation of $750,000 for "minor extensions and improvements" in the navy yards. It does not seem to me that they can be very "minor extensions," as the amount carried for this purpose in the last regular appropriation bill is only $75,000. What is this large sum of money to be used for?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this bill carries, for instance, $49,000,000 for the arming and equipping of a thousand merchant ships. Work in the navy yards is to be rushed, and every yard is to be utilized to its utmost capacity. A great many minor improvements that ordinarily would not be deemed essential must be made at this time if these yards are to be made efficient. We must expend money to make the yards as efficient as possible for two reasons. One is that it will materially lessen the cost of the work and, secondly, it will greatly increase the speed with which the work can be done. A track now might be located in one place that would not be the most efficient arrangement possible, yet the yard could get along with it. Now, it is proposed to arrange the various devices so as to make them the most efficient possible, and when we realize that between the amount carried in this bill and the amount carried in the naval appropriation bill, one thousand million dollars is to be expended for the Navy, that we are to commandeer practically every shipbuilding plant in the country, $750,000 is an insignificant sum to make possible the utilization in the most efficient manner possible of our own plants.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I call the chairman's attention to the fact that this $750,000 is for only minor extensions and improvements. There are millions carried in the last appropriation bill for the purposes suggested by the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The last appropriation bill carries $75,000 for this purpose. A great number of arrangements have to be made. We are going to build a great number of destroyers and submarines in the yards, and it is necessary to provide accommodations and facilities that would not be contemplated or thought of under ordinary conditions, and it seems to me the part of economy to make possible the utilization of these plants in the most effective manner possible.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Is the gentleman able to give any details as to the character of the improvements and in what yards the expenditures are to be made? I am asking this because the regular appropriation bill carries millions for these yards.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Rear Admiral Harris was not able to point out with very great definiteness the particular things that are to be done. Every day matters are coming up and being suggested, changes that must be made. It is to be admitted that to some extent he could not anticipate what they were. Some of it would be for dredging at places where unexpectedly deeper water would be required to utilize tonnage that previously was not needed. It is largely a maintenance item for these yards, to be utilized as never before contemplated. The fact of the matter is that, considering all that is to be done, the shipbuilding facilities are to be overtaxed in attempting to turn out the things that are required. No one can tell on a matter of this kind. It is largely a guess; but the committee believes on this kind of an item that we could not take a chance. We felt that we ought to put this sum at the disposal of the Bureau of Yards and Docks so that there would not be any question as to the best results.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Depots for coal and other fuel: Toward fuel-oil storage, including not to exceed $100,000 for the purchase of land, $1,500,000.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to lines 6 to 8——

Mr. FITZGERALD. The statement was made, but it was confidential, and we did not even print it in the confidential hearings. It is a reserve supply of fuel of the Navy and can not be made public.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I ask unanimous consent to return to lines 6 to 8.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask about the $750,000 for the improvement of the power plant systems in lines 6, 7, and 8, and I want to say to the chairman of the committee in the last bill we appropriated for these power plants $2,230,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know the committee did.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Was that sum found to be insufficient, and is this to make up the deficiency, or are there some new improvements contemplated?

Mr. SHERLEY. There are a number of new activities.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. We considered the new activities, and, so far as we could we sought to anticipate the needs of these yards in reference to power plants when we made up the last regular appropriation bill for the Navy.

Mr. SHERLEY. There are some needs, I will be very glad to tell the gentleman, that ought not to be stated for the RECORD touching the need of certain facilities in connection with power plants and the activities of the navy yards.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. It does not occur to me that the question of power plants——

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are utilizing these plants to a capacity never before used, and in some places they are going to increase the existing plant; in other places they wish to make connection with outside power plants. Now, in some of these instances it will be necessary to install transformers and reducers and distributing systems and do a number of things in order to utilize the plant.

Mr. BUTLER. I know that the gentleman is advising us properly, and the program of this department for its extension should not go into the public record; but was this plan placed before the gentleman and his committee?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not, in this instance, in the utmost detail—no; but sufficiently to justify, as we think, the appropriation.

Mr. BUTLER. I asked the question so we might know what the gentleman and his committee think, and I understand the committee was satisfied.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. In view of the information supplied me by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] privately, I will withdraw the request for a more detailed explanation for the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY.

Medical department: For surgeons' necessaries for vessels in commission, navy yards, naval stations, Marine Corps, and for the civil establishment at the several naval hospitals, navy yards, naval medical supply depots, Naval Medical School, Washington, and Naval Academy, and toward the accumulation of a reserve supply of medical stores, $3,000,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the indulgence of the committee to discuss for a moment an item further along in the bill. I expect to be called away on important official duties in a moment and will possibly not be here when the item is reached, and I would like to call the attention of members of the committee to the item at the bottom of page 79 now.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. That is in reference to the court of appeals building, District of Columbia. An appropriation was made last winter of $5,000 for the rent of temporary quarters for the office of the recorder of deeds, because of the fact that it was necessary for the recorder of deeds to move out of the old court building, that is being repaired, and find new quarters. It is now proposed to repeal that appropriation of $5,000 and to expend $12,000 for the purpose of improving and finishing the third floor of the building on Judiciary Square, occupied by the court of appeals for the accommodation of the office of the recorder of deeds. I called the attention of the members of the committee to it when the committee considered the report of the subcommittee. I have further investigated the matter as I then said I would. I visited the court of appeals building and the office of the recorder of deeds to-day, and I find this to be the situation: The office of the recorder of deeds occupies a floor space of about 6,500 square feet on the ground floor of the old court building on Judiciary Square. That space consists of two large rooms and half a dozen smaller ones. There are 6,500 feet of floor space. The space that it is proposed to improve at the expenditure of $12,000 is the unimproved space on the third floor of the new courthouse building on Judiciary Square, built a few years ago for the use of the court of appeals.

The only space left there is a space that never was intended to be finished and utilized for office purposes. There are two areas of 25 feet width and 65 feet long, one on either side of the building and joined by a dark brick tunnel 50 feet long. These spaces are lighted only on one side. They are right under the roof. They have dead walls at either end. Together they furnish only half the space the recorder now has. They would not furnish him room enough in the way of dead walls against which to place his present files. In my opinion the accommodations would be exceedingly unsatisfactory, it being very difficult to ventilate this space, and it never could be finished and improved so as to be satisfactory for permanent office purposes. So much from the standpoint of the recorder of deeds, and while I understand the recorder of deeds is willing to take this space, in my opinion he could not utilize it in a way that would be very satisfactory to him or the public. But, in addition to that, in order to reach this space it will be necessary for the public, the many people visiting the office of the recorder of deeds, to come into the main door of the court building, traverse a hallway of considerable length, then turn and traverse a still longer one the entire width of the building. This brings one to a small deliberately moving elevator. Mounting to the third floor one finds to the right a cell-like apartment, 25 by 65, lighted only on one side, while a 50-foot tunnel leads to a like space on the other side of the building.

The public passing in and out through that court building, right in front of the main door of the court room, would undoubtedly make considerable noise, create more or less confusion, all of which would be annoying to the court. The public would find it difficult to find its way through those corridors, until it got accustomed to them, to the foot of this elevator shaft, where they would embark in this slow-moving elevator, which is very proper for a court but not at all of the sort needed in an office building where the public comes and goes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman any alternative proposition?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I think there will be no difficulty in the recorder of deeds finding space for $5,000 for his accommodation. In fact, he can now rent fireproof space right on Judiciary Square, but he does not care to have it because it is on several floors. He could get other space, but I understand does not like it because it is too high up.

Now, I have in mind, and I desire to have the chairman of the committee particularly give his attention to this, a space that I think they could occupy, and which I think is very much better located for the recorder of deeds than his present location. That is the ground floor of the post-office building. I was in that building the other day and went about through the lower floor of that building, vacated by the city post office a short time ago, and found that that splendid first floor was occupied almost entirely as file and storage space.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is not used at all except for storage?

Mr. MONDELL. Simply for storage. Now, the recorder of deeds' office ought to be down town. I am told the recorder of deeds does not feel that way about it, because they have dwelt in the atmosphere of the courts until they have the idea that the office of the recorder of deeds is more important to the court than it is to the general public. As a matter of fact anybody who has had anything to do with that sort of thing knows that 10 people visit the office of the recorder of deeds relative to ordinary transactions in real estate where 1 visits the office with a view of looking up the record of deeds in connection with a case in the court. They ought to be down town. They ought to be in the Municipal Building. There is this room on the first floor of the post-office building. At any rate, I think it would be a waste of public money to spend $12,000 to finish the attic of the Court of Appeals Building, two separated areas under the sloping roof in that great building, for the use of an office which ought to be on the ground floor, wherever it is, easily accessible to the public, and which, in my opinion, ought to be down town.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for one minute more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not going to ask to strike out this item. I simply want to have the committee have it in mind so that if later in the consideration of the bill it is clear what should or can be done we can do it. I have talked with the Superintendent of the Capitol, Mr. Woods, about it. He has charge of these improvements, and thinks it will be necessary to move these offices in order that he may carry on the work of remodeling the court building. They will have no difficulty, if they want to accommodate themselves to the situation, in finding space for their office. And the appropriation has already been made for that purpose, and we ought to spend the money for that purpose unless we use the room in the Post Office Building.

In any event we should not spend $12,000 to finish rooms that never will be permanently used for business purposes, and ought never to be used for those purposes at all. If we spend this money, the rooms would only be used for a short time. This extra space in the Court of Appeals Building will soon be needed by the court for storage and other purposes, and for those purposes the space does not need to be finished. It is in condition now that the court can use it for storage purposes and other purposes that in the very near future will be found necessary and essential. Without spending a dollar it can be used for those purposes and it should be left in its present condition until the court needs the space.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provisions, Navy: For provisions and commuted rations for the seamen and marines, which commuted rations may be paid to caterers of messes, in case of death or desertion, upon orders of the commanding officers, commuted rations for officers on sea duty (other than commissioned officers of the line, Medical and Pay Corps, chaplains, chief boatswains, chief gunners, chief carpenters, chief machinists, chief pay clerks, and chief sailmakers) and midshipmen, and commuted rations stopped on account of sick in hospital and credited at the rate of 50 cents per ration to the naval hospital fund; subsistence of officers and men unavoidably detained or absent from vessels to which attached under orders (during which subsistence rations to be stopped on board ship and no credit for commutation therefor to be given); subsistence of men on detached duty; subsistence of officers and men of the Coast Guard and Lighthouse Services while cooperating with the Navy in so far as the regular appropriations for these services are insufficient therefor; subsistence of officers and men of the naval auxiliary service; subsistence of members of the Naval Reserve Force during period of active service; and for subsistence of female nurses and Navy and Marine Corps general courts-martial prisoners undergoing imprisonment with sentences of dishonorable discharge from the service at the expiration of such confinement: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to commute rations for such general courts-martial prisoners in such amounts as seem to him proper, which may vary in accordance with the location of the naval prison, but which shall in no case exceed 30 cents per diem for each ration so commuted; and for the purchase of United States Army emergency rations as required; in all, $31,740,992.45.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. I suppose this item carries the purchase of rations for the Navy, does it not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It says, "For provisions and commuted rations," and so forth. This is the item that buys the food for the enlisted men, is it not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I congratulate the Committee on Appropriations. It is a wonderful committee. They have given careful consideration to this bill. In the midst of the problems of the advancing cost of living this committee has been able to figure out the cost of living in the Navy to a cent, and it brings in an appropriation of $31,740,992.45. Not many committees of the House could be so accurate. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, the committee is to be commended for that.

Mr. MANN. That is what I am doing—commending.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Read!

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Buildings: For an addition to Isherwood Hall, $300,000.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of getting some information respecting Isherwood Hall.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Isherwood Hall is the building containing the study halls and recitation rooms, and this is to provide for additional instruction facilities for the additional cadets previously authorized. The naval appropriation bill, as I understand, carries an appropriation for the enlargement of Bancroft Hall, which is a dormitory building. This is to enlarge Isherwood Hall, which is a class room or school building.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that, as a member of the Naval Committee, this is the first time that I have ever heard of any need of additions for recitation purposes at the Naval Academy.

It has never been called to the attention of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and it certainly has not grown out of any war conditions.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is the first time I have ever heard of it. But what is the use of providing for an additional number of cadets and for commissioning them if you have no place to educate them?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. But we are graduating two classes this year and they will soon be out of there, and we have provided for additional cadets only to take the place of those classes graduated ahead of time. No extra schoolrooms will be needed on that account.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We have provided for additional midshipmen. The appointments will come due in a short time.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. But there will be only three classes there next year. Besides it does not seem to me that the Naval Academy authorities should come to the Naval Committee and get part of their needs taken care of and say nothing about other needs, which the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations says have grown out of the same general situation. We should have had the whole story.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will say the addition is needed because they have a very largely increased number of midshipmen and they will need this recitation room.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I do not think additional rooms are needed on that account, for the reason stated a moment ago. How soon will the building be erected?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In about eight months, as I understand.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I do not think this item should remain in the bill, but if the Committee on Appropriations can stand for it, I can.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I stand for a great many iniquities. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To provide by cooperation of the Bureau of Standards, the War Department, the Navy Department, and the Council of National Defense, for the standardization and testing of the standard gauges, screw threads, and standards required in manufacturing throughout the United States, and to calibrate and test such standard gauges, screw threads, and standards, including necessary equipment, rental in Washington and elsewhere, direction of temporary structures, office expenses, books of reference and periodicals, personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, and all other necessary items not included in the foregoing, $150,000.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. NORTON. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee whether these appropriations under the Bureau of Standards are really for war emergencies? Are they necessary and usual appropriations for that bureau, or are they occasioned by the present war?

Mr. FITZGERALD. These items are to enable the Bureau of Standards to be utilized to the fullest extent possible by the military establishments, due to the conditions growing out of the war.

Mr. NORTON. A total of $435,000 is asked for.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Thirty-five thousand dollars of it is for the equipment of the chemical laboratory, due to the increased costs which have taken place recently. Four hundred thousand dollars is to enable the bureau to do work of a very important character in connection with the Army and Navy Establishments.

Mr. NORTON. Every department here seems to have deemed it necessary or timely to ask for an additional appropriation. The committee thinks that this is really necessary?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think that this is probably the most important work that can be done, and by having the Bureau of Standards do the scientific work required it will mean great economy eventually. For instance, it has been ascertained that the Army blanket, which is made wholly of wool, does not keep the men warm. There is a desire to ascertain what particular combination is best for the Army blanket. That question will be worked out scientifically by the Bureau of Standards.

There are a number of questions in connection with the standardization of parts for aeroplanes, and different matters in which I undertake to say that the services rendered by the Bureau of Standards will be immensely valuable. They are being called on continuously, both by the War Department and the Navy Department, for information of an extremely valuable character.

I will call attention to the fact that heretofore the lenses for field glasses and other optical instruments have been obtained in Germany. They can not be obtained there now, and the Bureau of Standards is engaged in testing and investigating regarding the character of lenses possible to be obtained in the United States.

Mr. NORTON. The reason why I made this inquiry is that it seems to me, just as an ordinary individual, that every department of the Government is taking advantage of the present situation, and every one seems to be crying for more money; and unless there is watchful care of the funds of the Government there is going to be great extravagance, and in view of the large appropriations here, it seems to me that some of them are ridiculous.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is nothing in this bill to indicate that they have been getting excessive appropriations, because outside of the Army and Navy there is very little money in this bill for any of the other departments. And what is in this bill results entirely from the emergency of the war.

Mr. NORTON. I trust this money will be put to good use, but I am free to say that it seems to me to be very much of an extravagance.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In line 3, page 81, I desire to offer an amendment to strike out the word "direction" and insert the word "erection."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 81, line 3, strike out "direction" and insert in lieu thereof the word "erection."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The last paragraph speaks of the standardization of gauges, screw threads, and so forth. I understand it is the intention to make the Bureau of Standards the court of last resort to which all the standards to be used in different parts of the country, for instance, in the manufacture of ammunition and arms, will be brought. In this manufacture a great number of very finely constructed gauges are necessary. Is it the intention to have one complete set of these master gauges at the Bureau of Standards by which others may be tested?

Mr. FITZGERALD. To have the standards fixed there and test others for all the manufacturers. I think the gentleman from Connecticut appreciates the importance of this.

Mr. TILSON. I certainly do. I think it is one of the most important things in the whole bill. As the gentleman will recall, when the sundry civil bill was here I moved an amendment for $150,000 for this very purpose, the same amount that the gentleman has here.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Perhaps the gentleman is responsible for this. I do not know.

Mr. TILSON. It is the same amendment that I offered, except that I cut it down to $50,000 in order to get the gentleman to accept it at that time. I am glad it is going in now at $150,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is certainly an important matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

For stationery for the use of the committees and officers of the House, fiscal year 1917, $1,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 81, after line 14, insert: "To pay the widow of Henry I. Helgesen, late a Representative from the State of North Dakota, $7,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent to return to page 11, line 18, for the purpose of striking out a superfluous cipher in the amount of $9,000,000, which is printed "$9,000,0000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to return to page 11, line 18, for the purpose of offering the amendment indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I move to strike out the last cipher in the "$9,000,0000," in line 18, there being four ciphers in the last period instead of three.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 18, strike out the cipher at the end of the sum of $9,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, May 2, 1917.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we thank Thee for the cause for which we stand, a cause which is high and righteous and holy. We feel our personal unworthiness to stand in Thy name or in the name of humanity. We bless Thee that our national ideals are such as that we can invoke Thy blessing upon them and upon the Nation. We look to Thee for Thy guidance and Thy blessing as we seek to maintain them.

Grant us this day wisdom. Grant us the Divine guidance. Give to us gentleness of spirit. Give to us clear discernment of the truth; and lead us into the blessed way of success. We ask for Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Monday, April 30, 1917, when, on request of Mr. SMOOT and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to state that on the two votes upon pages 1624 and 1625 of the RECORD of May 1, 1917, I voted, thinking that the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] was in the Chamber. I did not inquire about it. If I had known that he was absent I would have announced my general pair with him and refrained from voting, unless I could have secured a transfer. I think in justice to him I should make this statement at this time. I am advised that he was absent on account of illness. My votes did not affect the result in any way.

NAVAL MAGAZINE, ST. JULIENS CREEK, VA. (S. DOC. NO. 13).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following communication from the President of the United States, which was read.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, May 1, 1917.

Hon. THOMAS R. MARSHALL,
President of the Senate.

MY DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: I inclose a letter from the Secretary of the Navy recommending that legislation be enacted by the Congress authorizing the Navy Department to proceed with the development of the site to be acquired as an addition to the naval ammunition depot, St. Juliens Creek, Va.

The recommendation of the Secretary has my approval.

Sincerely, yours,

WOODROW WILSON.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is uncertain whether the communication should go to the Committee on Naval Affairs or to the Committee on Appropriations. The Chair will send it to the Committee on Naval Affairs in the first instance, at least.

Mr. MARTIN. My impression is that all such matters are treated as deficiencies and are being handled by the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The communication and accompanying papers will go to the Committee on Appropriations, then, and be printed.

EXPORTS TO NEUTRAL COUNTRIES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting, in response to a resolution of April 16, 1917, statements of the exports from the United States to neutral countries, etc., which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Printing.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3545) to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DENT, Mr. FIELDS, Mr. QUIN, Mr. KAHN, and

Mr. ANTHONY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 3971) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the Military and Naval Establishments on account of war expenses for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair presents a resolution of the House of Representatives of the Legislature of Nebraska, praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which will be printed in the RECORD.

The resolution is as follows:

Mr. McCUMBER. I have resolutions adopted by the citizens of Grand Forks, N. Dak., at a great patriotic mass meeting in that city Tuesday evening, April 10, 1917, forwarded to me by Prof. McVeigh, president of the University of North Dakota. These resolutions present the patriotic sentiment of the people of our State so strongly that I ask that they may be printed in the RECORD, together with the names of the committee.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions adopted by the citizens of Grand Forks, N. Dak., at a great patriotic mass meeting in that city Tuesday evening, April 10, 1917.

Whereas the President, through his messages to Congress, has laid before us the conditions of the relations of our Government to the Government of the German Nation; and

Whereas, in recognition of the facts so presented, being coerced and forced thereto by a ruthless war waged against it by the Imperial German Government, our Nation has recognized and declared to exist the said state of war thus relentlessly and cruelly forced upon us, and our President has been authorized to make use of all the resources of the Nation for its protection, for the safeguarding of our people, and, as he has well said, "to vindicate the principles of peace and of justice in the life of the world as against selfish and autocratic power and to set up amongst the really free and self-governed peoples of the world such a concert of purpose and of action as will henceforth insure the observance of those principles":

Now, therefore, the people of the city of Grand Forks, N. Dak., in mass meeting assembled, with bitterness toward none "but with firmness in the right," do hereby

Resolve—

First. That as loyal and patriotic citizens we heartily and thoroughly commend and approve the action of our President in severing diplomatic relations with the Imperial German Government; and

Second. That as loyal and patriotic American citizens we heartily and thoroughly commend and approve the action of the Congress of the United States in recognizing and declaring to exist the war which has been waged against us; and

Third. That we promise our hearty and enthusiastic aid and support to the Government in every step and act to protect the safety of our Nation and the cause of freedom and democracy throughout the world; and

Fourth. That we urge our Government to conduct the war thus forced upon us with all the vigor, power, and strength of our Nation, and in thus resorting to arms to protect ourselves from the attacks relentlessly made upon us we disclaim any desire or purpose of conquest or of waging any war other than in defense of our persons, our property, and our sacred honor and in vindication of human rights, and in the peace which follows this war it is our hope and prayer that our beloved Nation, which has through the years since its birth led all the peoples of the earth in the pathway of individual freedom and liberty, may then add its authority and its power to the authority and force of other nations and create and form with them an enduring league of peace; and

Fifth. To this task we "dedicate our lives and our fortunes, everything that we are and everything that we have, with the pride of those who know that the day has come when America is privileged to spend her blood and her might for the principles that gave her birth and happiness and the peace which she has treasured"; and Sixth. That the chairman of this meeting cause copies of these resolutions to be made and that one of such copies be sent to the President of the United States and one to each of the Senators and Representatives of our State in Congress.

Geo. A. Bangs, Roger W. Cooley, Henry Holt, E. P. Robertson, J. B. Wineman, W. P. Davies, J. Nelson Kelly, O. B. Burtness, Tom Parker Junkin, J. D. Taylor, John M. Gillette, P. O. Thorson, W. H. Matthews, committee.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have a copy of resolutions passed in a convention by the Equity Cooperative Exchange, of my State. It covers many phases of the questions involved in the war, most of them, I think, relating to agriculture. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD, together with the names of the officers signing it, and that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I.

LOYALTY.

Whereas with war has come the supreme test of the Nation, necessitating vast economical and scientific production of foodstuffs upon a scale heretofore undreamed of: Therefore be it

Resolved by the members of the Equity Cooperative Exchange in special convention assembled, That we pledge anew our loyalty to the Nation, our faith in her democratic ideals, and our unswerving effort to omit no step which will make for increased production and the most effectual cooperation in the sale and distribution of farm products.

II.

THE GOVERNMENT SHOULD ELIMINATE SPECULATION AND FIX PRICES FOR FOOD PRODUCTS.

That by reason of the unlimited speculation and systematized price manipulation which has heretofore obtained in the so-called regular grain exchanges of the country, which practices are now immeasurably increased by reason of the abnormal and unprecedented conditions enforced by the war, the entire business of grain production has become a mere gamble, the outcome of which is determined by the riot of gambling and speculative transactions which daily and hourly raises and lowers the prices of commodities grown, which destroys all stability of price and lends itself to dishonest and selfish manipulation, to the detriment and injury of loyal workers in the field; be it further

Resolved, That we call upon the Federal Government, as a war measure and for the protection of workers everywhere engaged in production—

First. To abolish forthwith the practice of price manipulation in grain exchanges, together with the instrumentality through which this is accomplished, namely, future trading in grain and grain products.

Second. To fix and determine, with careful regard for the present disorganization of industry and the immensely increased actual and prospective cost of production, a schedule of minimum prices for farm products sufficient to guarantee to the producer a reasonable return and to insure him against the unnecessary gambling hazards of the present system. We call attention to the fact that practically all of the warring nations have already adopted this course and that the resultant stimulus to agriculture has been incalculable.

III.

Resolved, That we commend the action of the Government in its investigation of the speculative ownership and sale of grain and foodstuffs, and we urge the Government to take such steps as will prevent undue and unjustifiable profits in the manufacture and distribution of grain and grain products. We especially urge the Government to investigate the profits growing out of the manufacture, sale, and distribution of flour at present prices.

IV.

FARM LABOR, SEED, FEED, AND MONEY.

Whereas an assured and competent supply of labor, seed for planting, and feed for farm animals is absolutely essential to proper productions; and

Whereas to our knowledge competent farm labor has been increasingly difficult to obtain in past years, good seed is scarce and its price almost prohibitive, and many producers in the Northwest are literally without feed for necessary farm animals and without money to obtain or pay for the same: Therefore be it

Resolved, We call upon the Government, both State and Federal—and all the agencies of each—as well as upon the banks and all patriotic individuals with means, to assist the producers everywhere in obtaining necessary labor, seeds, and feed, and we further solemnly warn the country that unless cooperation and assistance is advanced the farmers of the Northwest can not hope to produce to the full limit of their capacity, and that assistance, if rendered at all, must be rendered within a few weeks and before the planting season is over.

We earnestly suggest that the Government take immediate steps to provide for the free, or practically free, transportation to and from the harvest fields of all persons in the cities who are able and willing to work on the farms, to the end that all idle and unproductive elements of city population may be profitably and productively employed in agriculture.

V.

TAXATION TO MEET WAR EXPENSES.

Whereas our Government has authorized the raising of $7,000,000,000 for war purposes; and

Whereas it is evident to all that the raising of this stupendous sum is but a start upon future amounts which it will be necessary to raise in order to effectively prosecute the war; and

Whereas, further, the experience of the European nations engaged in war has resulted in stupendous bonded indebtedness, which has already entailed endless burdens upon posterity and even threatens to plunge the Governments of those nations into national bankruptcy and repudiation: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we demand that the Government of the United States adopt a pay-as-we-go policy and refrain from burdening posterity and inviting financial ruin by the assurance of any bonds except for temporary purposes and for the additional purpose of loans to ally nations; that we call upon the Government to adopt a system of income taxation which shall place a tax of at least 10 per cent upon the excess of incomes over $2,500 and up to $5,000, and shall rapidly progress until, if the duration of the war and its cost make it necessary, all of that portion of incomes in excess of $50,000 shall be taken entirely; that, further, a tax be imposed upon war profits which shall take a very large percentage of such profits, together with an increased tax upon all luxuries.

We further call attention to the fact that the universal experience shows that permanent bond issues produce inflation, thereby increasing the cost of living and the cost to the Government of purchasing munitions and war supplies and generally financing the war. The taxation of incomes, luxuries, and war profits is a fair, equitable, and democratic method of meeting war expenses. The poor man in the trenches will be called upon to give his all, even to his life. If maimed or injured, what he has given can not be returned. If the wealthy are merely called upon to invest in bonds, they give but little. The investment they make will be repaid with interest, and in the meantime it is exempt from taxation and secure. It would be inequitable to expect the poor man who, with sacrifice and suffering to himself and family, has fought the country's battles in the trenches, to return to civil life and assume the more than life-long burden of taxation which would be necessary to repay the profitable war-loan investments of his wealthier and more fortunate brother who merely loans money and performs no further service.

We therefore demand, in the interests of equal and democratic service, and the efficient conduct of the war, that incomes and profits be at least equally as liable to conscription as human lives.

We further demand that United States soldiers be paid a living wage of at least $40 per month, and we take the occasion to record our belief that after the end of the war the Government should show its loyalty to its defenders by making adequate provision for the comfortable maintenance of all injured soldiers, together with their families and the families of the dead, not as a matter of charity, but as a matter of absolute right.

VI.

Resolved further, That we extend to the city of Fargo, and particularly the Commercial Club of the city, our sincere appreciation of the uniform courtesy and hospitality which has been extended to us.

VII.

Resolved further, That copies of these resolutions be mailed to the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States and to all Members of the United States Congress from the Northwestern States.

Mr. WALSH. I present resolutions adopted by the Serbian Society of Red Lodge, Mont., pledging their loyalty to the Government, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Red Lodge, Mont., April 24, 1917.

Hon. T. J. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I take great pleasure in transmitting to you the following resolutions passed by the Serbian Society of Red Lodge, Mont., April 22, 1917:

"Whereas the United States of America is now at war with the Imperial German Government; and

"Whereas the Serbian Society of Red Lodge, Mont., numbers among its more than 100 members men who, although their time of residence in the United States is more or less of recent beginning, yet yield to none in their devotion to the principles of liberty and order, and who believe that in their leaving European soil and joining their lives and fortunes with the lives and fortunes of native children of the Stars and Stripes they have established a just claim to recognition as members of the American family; and

"Whereas centuries of fighting for freedom against oppression and tyranny have bred into the bone and blood of Serbians an instinct of battle for their homes: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the Serbian Society of Red Lodge, That we pledge our united and individual support and loyalty to the United States of America in word and deed, and to the President of the United States of America, and to the Armies, Navies, and established institutions of the United States of America; and that we publish to the world our allegiance to the cause of freedom and democracy in all lands and under all flags, and in particular our allegiance to the banner of the United States of America and our determination to perform to the full extent of our knowledge and ability our utmost duty as citizens of this our country and protectors of this our flag, which resolution is made reverently under the witness of the Almighty God; and further be it

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the congressional delegation, Gov. S. V. Stewart, and the press.

"MIKE D. DIMIC, President."

Yours, very truly,

QUINCY SCOTT, Secretary.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I have received a brief letter from a farmer of my State breathing sentiments of patriotism so practical in their nature that I am moved to ask that it be read at the desk.

There being no objection, the letter was read, as follows:

LAUREL, MONT., April 21, 1917.

Hon. T. J. WALSH,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I will be 59 years old the 1st day of next July. Rather old for the Army or Navy, but I see no reason that because a man is past military age that he should not serve his country in time of war without being allowed to make a fortune out of his country's misfortunes. I see no patriotism in raising wheat at $2 a bushel, and unless the Government takes some action to fix the price of wheat that is what it will cost. I have half interest in 225 acres of fall wheat, and will have about as much spring wheat sowed on my irrigated land, and if the speculators fix the price each farmer will try to get all he can for his wheat. But if our President would come out with one of his popular appeals to the patriotism of the farmers I believe they would respond and feel that they were actually doing something worth while.

I hate to think that I belong to a class that think only of the almighty dollar in a time like this. Farmers can raise wheat and make money—lots of it—at $1 a bushel. I have raised lots of wheat and never received $1 a bushel until two years ago.

I wish that you could see your way clear to use your great influence to require farmers to sell their wheat at not more than $1 direct to the General Government and require the mills to grind it at a reasonable price. I know that this seems like a queer proposition in America, but it looks reasonable to me.

I am too old for the Army or Navy, as I said in the first place, and I have only one son, and he has lain in a sick room for more than six weeks fighting for his life against a very serious case of typhoid fever. Yesterday the fever turned and we feel sure now that he has won out, but it will be a long time before he is fit for active duty. For the sake of our own self-respect give us a chance to do the right thing and cut out the speculators.

Sincerely, yours,

L. A. NUTTING.

Mr. BECKHAM. I have received a number of telegrams and communications from business firms and associations in my State, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD. It will not be necessary to print all the names.

There being no objection, the communications were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LOUISVILLE, KY., May 1, 1917.

Hon. J. C. W. BECKHAM,
Senate, Washington, D. C.:

On behalf of the Intercollegiate Prohibition Association of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, and in order to make our country strong at this critical hour, we petition you to use your support to a measure prohibiting the manufacture of intoxicating liquor during the war.

Washington, D. C.:

The Men's Federation of Louisville, representing entire constituency of the Protestant churches of the city, urge you to support pending legislation in Congress for the prohibition of beverage liquor traffic, as a war measure; to conserve food supply; and promote factory and military efficiency. Patriotism and the welfare of our country appeal alike for this legislation.

MEN'S FEDERATION OF LOUISVILLE,
C. J. MEDDIS, Executive Secretary.

LOUISVILLE, KY., April 30, 1917.

Hon. J. C. W. BECKHAM,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: There are times when every man's brain should be clear and his nerve steady. The man in the factory and in the office can not work efficiently when he is slightly under the influence of liquor.

We strongly urge the prohibition of the liquor traffic as a war measure, first, on account of efficiency; and, second, because it would save an immense amount of food products which the Government is straining every nerve to supply.

Let's dare to do what we know is right.

Very truly,

DOW WIRE & IRON WORKS,
By W. HUME LOGAN, President.

A petition.

We, the undersigned citizens of Bell County, Ky., respectfully request that you use all possible efforts to effect the legislation prohibiting the use of grain in the distilling of liquors as a beverage or for other than war purposes throughout the duration of this present war.

COVINGTON, KY., April 30, 1917.

MY DEAR SENATOR BECKHAM: I am inclosing a petition which I have confidence you can best use for the purpose we have in view.

I hope you will not only labor for the suppression of the manufacture of alcoholic beverages but will do all you can to prevent entrenching the business more deeply by making it a large contributor through revenues of our Nation. We do not want our Nation supported by revenues on vicious business of any kind. Let us have an income tax that will reach the lowest income as well as the highest, equitably, and let us all individually contribute our share of our Nation's cost.

No true American can want some one else to pay his debt to our Government. Let all be taxed.

Very sincerely,

HUGH LEITH,
Minister First Presbyterian Church, Covington, Ky.

LEXINGTON, KY., April 25, 1917.

To Hon. J. C. W. BECKHAM,
Washington, D. C.:

We, the following residents of Lexington, Ky., realizing that our country faces a great war in which the conservation of food and manhood are prime essentials, and learning that the military encampment near our city is likely to be increased to from ten to forty thousand young men, we call upon our National Congress to pass and our President to sign a law enacting prohibition for our entire territory, at least during the continuance of the present war, in order that our young men may not have to face the inevitable danger of being preyed upon by the traffickers in intoxicating liquors, and in order that food-bearing grains may not be more than wasted by being converted into strong drink during these months of national peril.

THOMAS B. ROBERTS

NEWPORT, KY., April 30, 1917.

Hon. J. C. W. BECKHAM,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As loyal citizens of the United States, we hereby petition you in the interest of our country that as a war measure our food crops shall be conserved, and that we shall have prohibition of the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors. When our entire population could be fed for many months each year by the grain that is turned into liquor and other intoxicants, and when our men are rendered inefficient by the drinking of the article manufactured from the grain, it furnishes its own reason why consistency should cause laws to be enacted to rid ourselves of this great impediment to victory.

Yours, very truly,

LEROY M. ANDERSON,
Pastor Central Christian Church.

Signed by the members present Sunday, April 29, 1917.

Hon. J C. W. BECKHAM,
United States Senator from Kentucky, Washington, D. C.

SIR: A nation's trial tests the loyalty alike of its leaders and its people. The war which we have entered at the call of justice and humanity has made more acute the food crisis at home and the problem of hunger among our smitten brothers elsewhere. We commend our President's call to our people to increase and preserve in every possible way our country's food supply.

To this end we urge the passage of such laws as shall prevent, at least during our national crisis, the use of needed fruit and grain for the manufacture of alcoholic drinks. We therefore urge our President and lawmakers to express now that high honor and humanity which called us to take up arms by such legislation as shall conserve this fruit and grain for food and shall safeguard that greater treasure of our homes—the strength and honor of the young men who are answering the country's call—that they render the best service now and when the war is over.

Respectfully submitted,

MRS. JAS. H. WHITE
(And others).

We the undersigned citizens of the city of Covington, State of Kentucky, respectfully petition the Congress of the United States of America to prohibit the manufacture and distribution of alcoholic beverages throughout the United States and its dependencies. Especially do we desire this in these times of the stress of war.

HARRIET NORRIS
(And others).

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I present a petition of the ministers and laymen of the Sioux Falls district of the Dakota Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church of South Dakota, and also of a large number of citizens of my State, which I ask may be referred to the appropriate committee for serious, and, I may say, I hope favorable, consideration.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

Petitions of sundry citizens of Brookings, Wessington Springs, Mitchell, Holmquist, Emery, Pierre, and St. Lawrence, all in the State of South Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry are now holding hearings upon various bills for the conservation of food. A certain gentleman from Michigan, Mr. Grant H. Slocum, who is supreme secretary of the Gleaners, a farmers' organization, appeared before that committee. I have a telegram from him since his return to Michigan, which I ask may be read. I think it contains a great deal of valuable information.

There being no objection, the telegram was read, as follows:

DETROIT, MICH., May 1, 1917.

Hon. ASLE J. GRONNA,
Committee on Agriculture, Washington, D. C.:

Have tabulated returns from 176 farmers, who average 120 acres. They will plant 1,958 acres of beans, 739 acres of potatoes, 2,385 acres of corn, and 1,918 acres of fall wheat. They will plant under a minimum guaranty 3,037 acres of beans, 1,273 acres of potatoes, 3,077 acres of corn, and 3,228 acres of fall wheat. This means an increase in beans of 1,079 acres; potatoes, 534 acres; corn, 692 acres; wheat 1,310 acres. Remember these farmers are not asking for help. This organization will lend $10,000 to members for seed at interest of 2½ per cent under a minimum guaranty. Quick action necessary.

GRANT H. SLOCUM,
Supreme Secretary of Gleaners.

Mr. GRONNA. I present a number of telegrams asking for national prohibition. A few of them protest against an increase in postal rates. They are all very brief, and I ask that they may be printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEAR SENATOR: The Ministerial Association of Valley City, N. Our president, Herbert Myrick, suggested to Mr. KITCHIN, by letter April 12, equitable plan for war tax estimated to produce millions from publications it taxes in accordance with their ability to pay. Myrick wrote him April 25, showing that proposed doubling or trebling of second rates or zone system would utterly bankrupt our own farm periodical and many others. He has to-day wired Mr. KITCHIN that if they prefer war-tax advertising, it might be stamp tax upon invoices for advertising and publicity of all forms whatsoever, including posters, billboards, window signs. Beginning at 1 per cent for $5 to $99, increases graduated upward to 5 per cent upon invoices of $2,000 and over. Would suggest 1 cent tax upon each package mailed by parcel post, producing $15,000,000. Please urge these views on KITCHIN, RAINEY, DIXON, FORDNEY, and LONGWORTH. National needs of farms press more than ever in this crisis. Do not annihilate them.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am in receipt of resolutions adopted by the City Council of Wilmington, Del., relating to the acquisition of a canal connecting the Delaware and Chesapeake Bays, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD without reading.

WILMINGTON, DEL., April 19, 1917.

Whereas it has become alarmingly apparent that the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal in time of war would be absolutely necessary for the perfect protection of a great portion of the Atlantic coast, with its great cities and important manufacturing plants: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Council of Wilmington, That Congress is hereby urged to take immediate action looking toward the purchase of the canal or to institute immediate proceedings for acquiring the same by condemnation; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to our Senators and Representative in Congress; and be it further

Resolved, That the Council of Wilmington heartily approves of Senator SAULSBURY'S interest in the project and his endeavor to have the Government purchase or condemn the canal, and the council respectfully solicits the cooperation of Senator WOLCOTT and Representative POLK in bringing about the Government control of the canal, and later of its improvement.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have a couple of telegrams, one addressed by the governor of my State to the President, urging the prohibition of the manufacture of spirituous liquors from food grain during the war. The second telegram is from prominent men in the State of Nevada, taking the opposite view. I ask that both telegrams may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CARSON CITY, April 20, 1917.

Hon. WOODROW WILSON, President of the United States,
Washington, D. C.:

I most earnestly and respectfully urge you to use your great influence in securing adoption of national prohibition during period in which we are at war. The economic waste resulting from the manufacture and use of liquors, amounting, directly and indirectly, in this country each year to a sum estimated as equal to more than a third of the $7,000,000,000 which you have just provided as a war fund, should not be allowed to continue at such a time as this. I am sure that you properly want advices regarding intelligent public sentiment on a question of this character, and I do not hesitate to say, after investigation, that Nevada is strongly favorable to the proposition of utilizing all our needed food resources beneficially, of increasing national efficiency, and decreasing internal disorder by an inhibition of the manufacture and sale of all spirituous liquors, at least during the present crisis. Here we have proposed prohibition by the initiative, and it is confidently predicted by those best able to judge that it will carry.

EMMET D. BOYLE, Governor.

RENO, NEV., May 1, 1917.

Hon. KEY PITTMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

The following message is self-explanatory; show Senator NEWLANDS:

"The PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, WOODROW WILSON:
"Washington, D. C.:

"YOUR EXCELLENCY: The utterances conveyed to you by the Hon. Emmet Boyle, governor of Nevada, asking for national prohibition do not speak the sentiments of Nevada. Therefore we pray you, in your wisdom, knowing that you will not let the minority govern the majority, to consider our wishes as well and not grant national prohibition, thereby working innumerable sufferings and hardships on loyal and true Americans, whose livelihood would be taken from them. Nevada stands first, proportionately, in its quota of enlistments, but that is not due to those who ask national prohibition of you now. The enlistments have come from our class of people, who are just as loyal and patriotic as any in Nevada, and, no matter what happens, we are with you."

H. G. Humphrey, chairman State Republican central committee; George Wingfield, mine owner and banker; S. M. Pickett, chairman Democratic State central committee; Roy W. Stoddard, attorney at law; Frank J. Byington, mayor of the city of Reno; H. H. Kennedy, cashier Reno National Bank; C. A. Stout, stockman; A. Parker Lewis, M. D., physician; Washoe Building Trades Council, by George Townshend, president; Reno Business Men's Association, by P. Y. Gillson; Reno Central Trade and Labor Council, by B. F. T. Schmidt, secretary; United Nevada Industries, by John J. Donnelly, executive secretary.

Mr. KENYON presented petitions of sundry citizens of Iowa, praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HITCHCOCK presented petitions of sundry citizens of Nebraska, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the manufacture of food products into intoxicating liquor, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Nebraska, proposing methods of taxation to meet the expenses of the war, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of members of the Nine Mile District of the Interstate Canal System, of Minatare, Nebr., praying to be allowed the benefits of the farm-loan act, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a petition of the United Improvement Clubs, of Greater Omaha, Nebr., praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent speculation in foodstuffs, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented petitions of the Mothers' Council, of Dallas; the congregation of the Grace Presbyterian Church, of Temple; of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Yoakum; of the congregation of the College Avenue Presbyterian Church, of Fort Worth; and of sundry citizens of Longview and Amarilla, all in the State of Texas, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of Council No. 59, United Commercial Travelers of America, of Houston, and of sundry citizens of Sherman and of Harrison County, all in the State of Texas, praying for compulsory military service, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WEEKS presented petitions of the congregation of the Immanuel Baptist Church, of Newton; the Committee of Public Safety, of Hanover; the Woman's Club, of Norwood; and the Public Safety Committee, of Whitman, all in the State of Massachusetts, praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Committee on Public Safety, of Hanover, Mass., pledging support to the President, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present resolutions of the Board of Supervisors of Rock Island County, Ill., which I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the theory of well-directed government embraces the doctrine of "the greatest good to the greatest number," a republican form of government is based upon the principle of deriving its just powers from the consent of the governed, therefore the people, the greatest number, constitute the government; its official representatives are its servants, to work out and enforce such policies as are best calculated to guarantee equal rights to all, special privileges to none; and

Whereas government in the broadest sense exercises authority in regulating action, control, supervision; while such control implies regulation by established laws, government is even more; it may recognize an emergency, an unforeseen occurrence, or accommodation of circumstances calling for immediate remedy and direct by arbitrary will; and

Whereas an emergency now exists—an emergency of the gravest character, an emergency demanding immediate relief—in our beloved Nation, dedicated to the eternal principle of equal rights, the great mass of our people are struggling under the burden of unnatural and abnormal price inflation, constantly soaring higher and higher, until the bare necessities of life are beyond the reach of the average incomes; in the land of sovereigns we are dominated by kings more arbitrary than absolute monarchs or petty despots—food kings, oil kings, fuel kings, meat kings, transportation monarchs, and despots controlling every necessity—until the old principle of supply and demand has nothing to do with market quotations; and

Whereas the method of "investigation" as practiced in recent years has proven ineffective, lengthy investigations, elaborate collection of evidence, and the slow process of conclusion fail as a palliative, consume unreasonable lengths of time, during which the people suffer unrelieved, and ultimately come to naught, relief now, immediately, is the imperative demand; and

Whereas our Government is supreme in its power to protect its citizens, if its lawfully established means are inadequate to meet this emergency, its duty is clear—do it by arbitrary will. Confiscation is not suggested nor even desired, but compulsory action of no ordinary character, yet plainly within the province of the authorities, must protect the people if needs be: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Board of Supervisors of Rock Island County, Ill., That we memorialize our President and our Senators and Representatives in Congress to act quickly, decisively, and fearlessly in regulating the abnormal inflation of food prices, and see to it, by any and all means at their disposal, that our people be now relieved from this unnecessary, uncalled for, and unwarranted condition; and be it further

Resolved, That this resolution be spread upon the records of this board and copies furnished to the President of the United States and to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

STATE OF ILLINOIS,
Rock Island County, ss:

I, Henry B. Hubbard, county clerk and clerk of the board of supervisors in and for the county and State aforesaid, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of a resolution introduced by Supervisor

Bakersfield and unanimously adopted by the board on the 25th day of April, A. D. 1917.

Given under my hand and seal, at Rock Island, Ill., this 26th day of April, A. D. 1917.

[SEAL.] HENRY B. HUBBARD, County Clerk.

Mr. MYERS presented resolutions of the Hardin Community Club, of Montana, favoring selective conscription, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Hardin Community Club, of Montana, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the opening to settlement of the Crow Indian Reservation, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Presbytery of Kalispell, Mont., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit appropriations for sectarian purposes, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented resolutions of Hell Gate Lodge, No. 383, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Missoula, Mont., pledging support to the President on all preparedness measures, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. KENDRICK. I present telegrams from the mayor and prominent citizens of Riverton, in my State, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RIVERTON, WYO., April 29, 1917.

Hon. JOHN B. KENDRICK,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Labor question is a serious problem. Many acres of fertile land untilled, crops not planted, teams standing idle, while saloons are filled with indifferent and intoxicated laborers. Wages being high, it requires only a week's work to provide sufficient funds for the average laborer to live in a saloon for a month. Closing saloons and prohibiting sale of liquor will not only give us more laborers but all help will be more reliable and trustworthy. Liquor traffic is the producers' greatest handicap, and unless remedied immediately many acres will not be cultivated; crops will not be planted, cultivated, or harvested. Prospects for coming crops are very discouraging and Congress should suppress liquor traffic without delay and confiscate all grain hoarded by breweries and distilleries.

J. A. Defelder, mayor of Riverton; Riverton Commercial Club, J. A. Defelder, president; W. T. Judkins; Earl Warren; O. N. Gibson; Riverton Review; F. Chatterson; George F. Dobeler; Albert B. Tonkin, M. D.; Thad H. Stratton; R. W. Warren; J. G. Jewitt; A. P. Nesbitt; W. J. Martin; W. H. Bower.

RIVERTON, WYO., April 29, 1917.

Hon. JOHN B. KENDRICK,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

To-day's joint telegram describes actual conditions here. Best ranches in valley have many teams idle for want of labor. Streets and saloons full of men who decline work at exorbitant wages offered. Our situation is serious, principally due to drunkenness among laborers, who can't resist liquor when they have money. Instant suppression of all liquor traffic would bring great relief.

EARL WARREN.

RIVERTON, WYO., April 29, 1917.

Hon. JOHN B. KENDRICK,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

Joint telegram states exact truth. Farmers and business interests demand relief from handicap of liquor traffic.

J. G. JEWITT.

EXEMPTIONS FROM DRAFT.

Mr. McCUMBER. I present a petition signed by Rev. Christian Reimche on behalf of the Mennonite congregation of Harvey, N. Dak., praying that they and other noncombatant Christians be exempt from compulsory service. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Mennonites of this country are either immigrants or the descendants of immigrants from various countries in Europe which they left to avoid compulsory military service. Assurance was given them by high officials of the United States, including President Grant in 1873, that they need fear no compulsory conscription here.

In view of this our attitude regarding military service we petition the Congress of the United States to exempt us and other noncombatant Christians from all compulsory military training and service in the event of the enactment of such a law.

Our people are mostly engaged in agriculture and are in every way loyal citizens. They pray for this exemption because they try to follow the doctrine of our Lord Jesus Christ, stated in Matthew 5:44—"Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you."

Our hope that this petition will be granted is based on the fact that in a democracy the conscience of the individual is duly considered and the further fact that in Canada our brethren have been assured by the government that the exemption for which we pray is granted them.

Mennonite congregation at Harvey, N. Dak., April 28, 1917.

CHRISTIAN REIMCHE, Pastor.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, at this time I ask permission in view of the character of the petition presented to say just a word.

I wish also to present another petition in the form of a telegram from New York. This petition reads:

We strongly urge your support of exemption from military service for those who have conscientious, moral, or spiritual objections to warfare. Why should Quakers be allowed more freedom of conscience than other equally moral and spiritual persons? Freedom of conscience should be the sacred right of each individual. Without it there can be no progress.

ELSIE B. GOLDSMITH,
EDITH BORG.

In view of the position which I took yesterday, I ask permission at this time to say that if all the Christian people of the world, or even a half of them, were like this congregation of Menonites, or other noncombatant Christians referred to in the gospel of Matthew, if all were so kindly disposed there would be no war and never an occasion for compulsory service. But unhappily the world is not so constituted. In every age of the world the greater military nations have bullied, attacked, crushed, and enslaved the nonmilitary and peace-loving nations. And as liberty is better than slavery, as justice and right must be defended by force, as no nation can long exist that will not oppose force with force, I hold it the sacred duty of every citizen to bear his breast to the onslaught and draw his sword in defense of liberty and nationality.

As governments are instituted for the sole and only purpose of protecting the weak from the strong, the lowly from the great, and as in this country the people themselves are the Government, the obligation of each citizen to furnish his moiety of the force necessary to enforce the laws or defend the life of the Nation becomes imperative.

So, too, Mr. President, I have a conviction as deeply rooted and earnest as that which ever rested upon a religious creed, that the citizen whose property and liberty and very life are protected by his government and by the lives and liberties of other members of society owes to that country a debt which can only be repaid in the tender of like sacrifices. Imbued with this conscientious creed concerning the duty of American citizenship, I could not, without a gross violation of my conviction, vote to relieve any class from the sacred duty of citizenship.

This view, Mr. President, also answers the second petition. There is not, there can not be, such a thing as a moral right of exemption from the performance of moral duty.

SELECTIVE DRAFT.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, some days ago I received on one morning 19 telegrams from the town of Malden, Mo., one of which I read to the Senate, concerning what is known as the selective draft or conscription bill, then pending. I then expressed some wonderment as to how these 19 men in one comparatively small town had waked up suddenly to send this bunch of telegrams on the same morning and just what influence had operated to excite their sudden spasm of patriotism. I stated that I would send a copy of the RECORD containing my remarks to each one of the senders of these telegrams with the hope of finding out how it happened. This morning I am in receipt of a letter, the body of which I will read, as follows:

Noticing your comment on the telegram received by you from Malden, I am inclosing you a circular letter which likely explains the sudden outbreak of patriotism. I have not heard of any enlistments from Malden, however. Stand by your convictions. Your friends will be able to do the rest.

Yours, very truly.

Mr. President, the letter inclosed is from St. Louis and was sent to the writer of the letter I have just read. It is headed "St. Louis Branch, The National Security League." It is an appeal sent out April 24, broadcast, I assume—certainly to practically all the senders of the telegrams I received. I am not prepared to say that the letter I hold in my hand from the Security League was sent to any other towns or post offices than that of Malden, although it would seem strange if that were not so.

Mr. President, I am going to ask to have this letter from the chairman of the branch of the National Security League at St. Louis printed in my remarks.

This is not important, and I would not refer to it at this time except that I had stated when I brought the matter to the attention of the Senate some days ago that I would seek to ascertain through what inspiration this propaganda was begun and has been carried on. I think this is the explanation. It was the result of suggestion or solicitation. I ask to have the letter printed in the RECORD without reading; that is to say, I shall not take the time of the Senate to read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

ST. LOUIS, MO., April 24, 1917.

DEAR SIR: Our country is at war with the greatest military power that the world has ever known, and we are face to face with a crisis in which every American citizen must do his part.

It is your duty and ours to support President Wilson in every way in our power.

He is badly in need of your support now, and we appeal to you to telegraph and write your Congressman to stand by the President and to vote for the bill that he advocates, providing that our Army shall be raised by selective conscription.

Selective conscription means that the War Department shall select and conscript as soldiers those who are best fitted to be soldiers. It means that those who are working on farms, on the railroads, and in munition plants and other factories, who are rendering as great public service as if they were actually fighting in the trenches, shall not be taken from these necessary occupations, but shall continue doing work that is equal to any in honor, patriotism, and usefulness in this great national crisis.

The experience of England and our own failure in obtaining recruits proves the volunteer system to be a failure.

The President knows this. He is the Commander in Chief of all our armies and must be given our support in quickly raising our Army to war strength in the way that he knows to be right.

This appeal is addressed to you because of your known patriotism, loyalty, and influence in your community.

The only way your Congressman can know your views is for you to telegraph him to stand by the President and to urge all your friends to do so.

Yours, very truly,

NATIONAL SECURITY LEAGUE,
By GEORGE M. BROWN,
Chairman St. Louis Branch.

BUDGET SYSTEM.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I introduced a few days ago a joint resolution with reference to the adoption of a national budget system. I ask unanimous consent to have that joint resolution printed in the RECORD. I also ask unanimous consent to have printed a list of the nations of the world having a national budget system, evidencing the fact that the United States and Turkey are the only two prominent nations of the world without such a system.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 46) creating a commission to report a plan for the adoption of a national budget system.

Whereas in times of peace the expenditures of the Government were increasing yearly at a rapid rate; and

Whereas our entry into the world war will enlarge these expenditures to enormous proportions; and

Whereas the increased taxation to support the Government will place new burdens upon the shoulders of every citizen of the United States; and

Whereas this vast sum of money should be spent with the utmost efficiency and economy, and under modern methods of control; and

Whereas the estimates for the expenditures of the Government come to Congress without revision or scrutiny by any centralized agency of the Executive Government and are not treated by Congress as a part of its legislative program; and

Whereas under our present methods of legislative procedure the responsibility for the expenditures of the Government is scattered amongst a number of standing committees in the two Houses of Congress, which work independently of each other and of the Executive Government in providing funds; and

Whereas it is possible for private Members on the floors of the two Houses to offer amendments at will increasing the items of expenditure provided in the respective appropriation bills beyond the amounts requested by the Executive; and

Whereas under this procedure the evil practices, known as "log-rolling" and "pork-barrel" methods, have grown up and flourished; and

Whereas under this system there is no possibility of a governmental business program, or of a financial policy, or of a coordination of expenditures with revenues; and

Whereas it is the consensus of opinion among men of business, publicists, and students of public finance that the adoption of the national budget system would put the finances of the Government upon a sound, efficient, and economical basis by making possible a business program prepared upon the responsibility of the Executive and presented by him to Congress to be enacted into law; and

Whereas the chief political parties of the country in their platforms in 1916 pledged themselves to carry out budgetary reforms for the Federal Government; and

Whereas it is the experience of practically all foreign Governments that the national budget system is the only efficient method of dealing with the expenditures and revenues; and

Whereas to plan such a system for this Government requires careful study: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That a joint commission to report out a plan for adoption of a national budget system is hereby established. Its membership shall consist of the Secretary of the Treasury and two other officials of the Executive Government, to be appointed by the President; three Members of the Senate and three Members of the House, to be appointed by the presiding officer of the House and Senate, respectively.

SEC. 2. That no compensation shall be paid to any member of said commission.

SEC. 3. That said commission is hereby empowered and directed to report at the opening of the next session of Congress a plan for the adoption of a national budget system for the Government of the United States, and showing therein what changes, amendments, or adjustments the adoption of said budget system would cause in the rules of the Senate and the House in the laws now in operation relative to revenues and expenditures, in the organization of the Treasury Department, in the forms and method of preparation of the departmental estimates, in the method of presenting said estimates to the Congress, in the methods of accounting and audit, and such other and further information as said commission may see fit to lay before the Congress.

SEC. 5. That said commission is authorized to employ such experts and such clerical assistance as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this resolution.

SEC. 6. That the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry out the provisions of this resolution.

SEC. 7. That said commission shall expire on the 31st day of December, 1917.

LIST OF NATIONS HAVING A NATIONAL BUDGET SYSTEM.

Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Cuba, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, France, Germany, Great Britain, Greece, Guatemala, Honduras, Hungary, Italy, Japan, Liberia, Luxemburg, Mexico, Montenegro, Netherlands, Newfoundland, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Portugal, Roumania, Russia, Salvador, Serbia, Siam, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Union of South Africa, Uruguay, and Venezuela.

ARTICLE ON CONSCRIPTION.

Mr. STERLING. I have here a letter from the president of the Encyclopædia Britannica, whose letter incloses an article on conscription taken from the Encyclopædia Britannica, the eleventh edition. The article is very instructive; it treats of the subject historically and also from the economic standpoint; and I believe it is worth while, in view of the present interest in the subject, that it should be printed as a public document. I therefore ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so referred.

FOOD CONTROL.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I present an article which appeared in the Ohio State Journal of April 29, 1917, on the subject of food prices. This article is based upon an investigation which was made by Mr. George Thomas Crawford, of the New Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce. It contains the retail prices of 31 food articles obtained in 59 Ohio cities on March 15 and 16. There is such a variance in the prices in the different cities that I feel that the article may be of interest to Members of the Senate.

As illustrations, turnips in Portsmouth were worth 85 cents a bushel, while in Mount Vernon they were worth $6 a bushel. Corn meal was 20 cents for a 10-pound sack in Washington Court House and 50 cents in Ashtabula and Paulding. Onions were worth $2.75 a bushel in Kenton, as against $11.20 in Lebanon. Other articles had as large differences in prices. This newspaper article contains the minimum and maximum prices of these different articles, and I ask to have it printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The article referred to is as follows:

[From the Ohio State Journal, Apr. 29, 1917.]

FOOD CONTROL BY STATE MAY COME IN FALL—DISTRIBUTION AND REGULATION OF PRICES BY OFFICIALS IS EXPECTED TO BE AN ACTUALITY BEFORE ANOTHER YEAR OF WAR—INITIAL STEPS ALREADY TAKEN—SURVEY OF RETAIL PRICES ON FOODSTUFFS IN 59 OHIO CITIES SHOWS WIDE VARIATIONS—TOO GREAT, DEFENSE COUNCIL HOLDS.

One of the biggest tasks of the State branch of the National Council for Defense is expected to be that of control of food distribution and regulation of prices before another year of the war rolls around, possibly by next fall.

Figures showing a wide variation of prices of foodstuffs in different localities of the State were submitted yesterday to Gov. Cox, who turned them over to the council for defense. Such a staple as eggs, for instance, varied from 22 to 38 cents; rib roast, 16 to 30 cents; potatoes, $2 to $3.80, on the same day.

The Federal Government is expected to take a hand in distribution and price regulation, and place the State work in charge of the councils for defense, which will furnish the basic information and machinery for control.

TABULATES OHIO PRICES.

Promotion of food production, in which the State council now is engaged, is known to be only a small portion of the work mapped for it. The Federal Government has under consideration the fixing of a minimum price for foodstuffs to farmers and is working on marketing, transportation, distribution, and further price-regulation problems.

Everything undertaken by the defense council, which will be enlarged as needs demand, is planned on a three-year war basis.

George Thomas Crawford, of the New Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce, has tabulated retail prices of 31 food articles gathered from mayors and civic organizations of 59 Ohio cities as of date March 15 and 16. Following are typical differences in prices:

Turnips, 85 cents a bushel in Portsmouth, against $6 in Mount Vernon; corn meal, 20 cents for a 10-pound sack in Washington Court House, against 50 cents in Ashtabula and Pauiding; onions, $2.75 a bushel in Kenton, against $11.20 in Lebanon; lamb chops, 20 cents a pound in Canton, 38 cents in Lakewood (suburb of Cleveland); rib roast, 16 cents in Canton and Chardon, 30 cents in Piqua; pork roast, 15 cents in Painesville, 31 cents in Lakewood; creamy butter 40 cents in McArthur and Newark, 50 cents in Ashtabula, Cincinnati, Chardon, Elyria, Lakewood, and Mount Vernon; country butter, 28 cents in Washington Court House, 45 cents in Warren, Ravenna, Painesville, and Dover; fresh eggs, 22 cents in Waverly, 38 cents in Warren; potatoes, $2 at McConnelsville, $3.80 at Delaware.

SAY RANGE EXCESSIVE.

Members of the defense council assert that even after allowance is made for variation of quality and proximity to place of production and distribution, the figures show too great a variation. Some of the highest prices on a particular commodity were quoted in cities in the center of a community producing it.

In each case the lowest price in a city is taken. The following table shows minimum and maximum prices found in the State:

		Minimum.	Maximum.

In these figures it must be taken into consideration that some instances of high prices may be due to temporary shortage of supply. Turnips, for example, may have been $6 in Mount Vernon only temporarily because of a shortage. This would be because of inefficient distribution. Again, it is possible that the $11.20 price for onions in Lebanon refers to fresh, greenhouse onions, while most of the other onion quotations are on onions harvested last fall.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in that same connection I present a table prepared by the Old Dutch Market Co. showing a comparison of retail prices of foods during April, 1914, before the war, and April, 1917. This table includes staple articles in the grocery line as well as beef, pork, and vegetables. It shows the startling fact that since April, 1914, to April, 1917, there has been an average increase in prices of 85.32 per cent.

The table is very interesting, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table referred to is as follows:

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 3971. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the Military and Naval Establishments on account of war expenses for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

RAILROAD REVENUES.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I request the consideration of Senate resolution 52.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate resolution 52.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. My understanding is that under the rule this resolution can be called up during the morning hour.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair did not know merely from the number what the resolution was. The Chair is now advised that it is a resolution coming over from a former day, and he therefore lays the resolution before the Senate.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 52) as follows:

Be it resolved, etc., That the Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby directed to furnish for the use of the Senate a statement of the gross and net revenue of the railroad companies reporting to the commission for the first fiscal year for which reports were made after the creation of the commission, together with a statement showing the gross and net income of said railroads since said time, the statement to be total of said roads and not statement as to each road.

The commission is furthermore directed to furnish for the use of the Senate a statement showing the gross and net incomes of said roads for the last six months of 1916, the statement to be totals of said roads and not statement as to each road.

The commission is furthermore directed to furnish for the use of the Senate a statement of the bonded and other liabilities of the railroads, together with their capital stock, preferred, common, and debentures. Also statement of the net income of said roads after paying interest on their bonded debts. The above information to be applied to the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

The commission is furthermore directed to furnish for the use of the Senate a statement of the gross and net incomes of the said roads for the last six months of 1916, with a comparison of same with the gross and net incomes for the corresponding six months of 1915, reference being had to the calendar months.

The commission is furthermore directed to furnish for the use of the Senate a statement showing a comparison of the gross and net income of said roads, for the months of January, February, and March, 1917, with the gross and net income for the corresponding months of 1916, together with the total book costs or property investment account of said roads for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1916.

The commission is furthermore directed to furnish for the use of the Senate a list of the roads making a total net income of 7 per cent or more upon their capital stock during the fiscal year ending July 1, 1916, together with a statement showing the percentage of profits upon the capital stock for the fiscal year of 1916.

The commission is furthermore directed to furnish for the use of the Senate a list of the roads making a total net income of 7 per cent or more upon their book values during the fiscal year ending July 1, 1916, together with a statement showing the percentage of profits upon the book values made by each.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, this information is all in the possession of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and a couple of competent men can in a very short time put it in shape, as directed by the resolution, for our use. I have most of it already; but I would be glad, in using it, to be sure of the accuracy of my figures; and I can only feel perfectly sure if I have the figures compared with the records of the commission.

To call attention to the importance of these figures, I wish to mention that I expect them to show the capital stock, preferred and common, and debentures of the railroads reporting to the commission, which cover all the railroads earning a gross income of a million dollars a year or more, amounted on July 1, 1916, to $6,963,000,000, leaving out the thousands. I expect also to show that, after paying all operating expenses, taxes, and so forth, and the interest on all their obligations, they had for that fiscal year a net income of $601,508,000. That is to say, the railroads of the United States netted for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1916, more than 8½ per cent on their capital stock—first preferred, common, and debentures, all capital stock obligations. Of course, some of them earned very much more than 8½ per cent, while some earned less than that; but the average income, as I am advised, for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1916, was 8½ per cent.

I expect to show, further, coming to the classes of roads, that certain roads, as the Pennsylvania Central, cleared for that year 10.76 per cent; the Pennsylvania Co., a branch, I believe, of the Pennsylvania Railroad, or a part of that system, cleared 17.84 per cent; the New York Central, 16.18 per cent; the Norfolk & Western, 14.61 per cent; and the Chesapeake & Ohio, 10.96 per cent.

Coming down to the class of southern roads, the Central of Georgia earned 20.43 per cent; the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis, 14.61 per cent; the Alabama & Great Southern, 13 per cent; and the Louisville & Nashville, 19.51 per cent.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator take as a basis of his calculation of percentages the capital stock, including the common stock of these railroads?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. All.

Mr. THOMAS. Has the Senator made any calculation, then, of the percentage of profit upon the capital actually invested, the common stock, as the Senator well knows, being what is generally known as "water," something that has no value except that which comes to it from the increased revenues of the concern issuing it?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I can answer the Senator only in this way: I do not know the actual value of the properties. They are now being appraised by the Government to ascertain actual value. Turning, however, to their books, I find that the book estimate of value exceeds about $1,000,000,000 the amount of liabilities, including stock issued. So far as my information goes the figures mentioned are correct, but I wish to state most positively that I do not personally assume responsibility for these figures, and it is for that reason that I wish this report from the Interstate Commerce Commission——

Mr. THOMAS. The figures of the Senator remind me of a statement made by a prominent railroad man a few years ago upon the witness stand, that 90 per cent of the stock issues of the railroads were water.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Answering the Senator, my advice is that the records of the commission will show that the bond indebtedness, capital stock, preferred, common, and debentures, amount to $16,922,000,000, and the property investment account of these roads, as kept by the roads, amount to $17,984,000,000. As to the accuracy of the property investment account, of course, question has been raised. I was simply calling attention to the dividends earned for the year ending July 1, 1916, upon their capital stock and debentures, to let it be seen that a general advance of fifteen one-hundredths in freight rates would be neither reasonable nor just.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator from Georgia that I understand those figures are based on the capital, not on the selling price of the securities?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. They are based on the capital, as I understand.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, many of those securities sell for less than par. Some of them sell for very much more than par. The suggestion, therefore, that has been made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] is not entirely true, because in many cases the laws require that stock shall be issued at a market price, and in many States they have been issued at a premium of 50 per cent, and even of 100 per cent in some instances. So that there are a good many different conditions that would have to be taken into account in arriving at an accurate statement of the actual capital invested.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think the criticism made by the Senator from Massachusetts is sound so far as it goes, but it does not go far enough. Because a railroad company is doing an enormous business does not justify an increase of its capital stock, however valuable that capital stock may become, and then ask people to pay an additional amount of freight in order to keep up the dividends on that stock or to make it a paying investment.

Now, if the Senator from Georgia will pardon me a moment, let us suppose——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. Let us suppose that Mr. Ford, whose company does a business of something like a hundred million dollars annually, with an actual profit last year of $58,000,000, should capitalize his concern on the basis of 6 per cent on those earnings. The stock would be enormously valuable, but it would be water just the same. And then if Mr. Ford came here and asked permission through us, if we had the power to grant it, to increase the price of his cars in order to meet the dividends or to pay a dividend upon this increased stock because of increasing expenses, that stock would be as fictitious for such a purpose as though it had no value whatever behind it. It would not represent the capital invested in the business.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will yield to the Senator from Montana, but I will request that I be allowed to finish after his interruption is ended, because it was not my desire to enter into any discussion as to the effect of this evidence.

Mr. WALSH. I rise to ask the Senator from Georgia if he has any information about the western roads, the transcontinental lines, traveling through more sparsely settled territory, and territory less directly affected by war conditions?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I have not in detail that information with reference to them, except for the month of January of this year, which I will give in a moment; but the resolution which I have introduced will give us all of this information from the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Having called attention to the status of the roads, according to their business year ending July 1, 1916, or rather with reference to the fiscal year prior to July 1, 1916, I wish to state that as I am advised, and as I gather from this sheet taken from the Interstate Commerce Commission, their net profits for the last six months of 1916 exceeded their net profits for the last six months of 1915 by between fifty and sixty million dollars, although the large net profits to which I have referred were made for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1916, including the last six months of 1915.

Now, with reference to the present year: I understand that in the eastern district there has been a decline of net profits of some 16.6 per cent as compared to 1916; that during the month of January, 1917, there was a falling off of net profits in the eastern roads as compared to 1916, but that in the southern district there was an increase of net profits for January, 1917, as compared with January, 1916, of 22.9 per cent, and that in the western district January, 1917, showed an increase of net income of 42.7 per cent as compared to January, 1916.

It is this information, which I think is so valuable to us, that I am asking by this resolution to obtain; and I am sure it can be furnished with very little difficulty. A couple of the many excellent accountants that the Interstate Commerce Commission have can prepare it for us in a very short time.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I want to suggest to the Senator from Georgia that we were informed this morning in the Interstate Commerce Committee that the information for March, 1917, was not yet available, but that it probably will be in the course of several weeks.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If March is not available, we will abandon it; but I was advised that we could now obtain the figures for March from the Interstate Commerce Commission, also.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia a question. I notice that in the resolution, from line 21, on page 2, down to and including line 8, on page 3, the Senator asks for the net earnings of the railroads showing an income of 7 per cent or more upon their capital stock, in the first part.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. KELLOGG. What is the objection to giving us the information as to the net income on the capital stock of all the railroads?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am perfectly willing to accept that suggestion.

Mr. KELLOGG. Then, I suggest the following amendment to page 2. Strike out lines 21 to 25, inclusive, and lines 1 and 2, on page 3, and insert the following:

> The commission is furthermore directed to furnish, for the use of the Senate, the net income of all the railroads upon their capital stock during the fiscal year ending July 1, 1916, together with a statement showing the percentage of profits upon the capital stock for the fiscal year 1916.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I accept that, Mr. President.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, allow me to suggest that instead of the word "all," the Senator use the word "each."

Mr. KELLOGG. That is satisfactory—"each."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I accept that.

Mr. KELLOGG. And the second amendment: Strike out lines 3 to 8, inclusive, on page 3, and insert the following:

> The commission is furthermore directed to furnish, for the use of the Senate, a list of the roads, together with the income upon their book values during the fiscal year ending July 1, 1916, together with a statement showing the percentage of profits upon the book values made by each.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am perfectly willing to accept that.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I should like a little information from the Senator from Georgia. For what use are we to secure this information?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There is a resolution now pending before the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate asking for an investigation of the subject, and there is also a resolution pending before the Senate requesting the commission to suspend the proposed 15 per cent increase. It is information for the use of the Senate in connection with any consideration we may see fit to give to the proposed 15 per cent flat increase of freight rates throughout the entire United States.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, some years ago we created a commission to pass its judgment upon all the information with respect to the rates. Then later we gave the commission power to fix rates according to a certain standard fixed by the Congress of the United States—that they should be just and reasonable. The commission having all the information, I want to ask for my own information why it is necessary for us to take up the matter and secure this information? Do we doubt that the commission will act properly in the case?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not know what the commission will do. For myself, if the commission does not suspend these rates, I am ready to support a measure to suspend them by congressional action. I go further and state that I believe there is a condition existing that the Interstate Commerce Commission really is not in a position to handle. If there are weak roads that need help, perhaps legislation upon the subject may be necessary. Surely we should not build up enormously increased percentages to roads making 20 per cent because some other road is not able to make more than 1 or 2 per cent. I regard it as a matter of information for legislative consideration, that we may determine whether there is a responsibility resting upon us and that at least we may have the facts before us during this session.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then at the present time the Senator does challenge the good judgment of the commission in its action?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I do not; but I do not waive the responsibility of Congress.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have no objection to receiving the information, but I did want to know whether or not the Congress had now come to the conclusion that its own creature has failed to perform its functions in accordance with the law passed by Congress.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to answer the Senator in this way: I am not at all sure that the legislative discretion vested in the commission is broad enough to handle the subject. I doubt it. I believe that probably a condition exists that existing legislation does not meet, and I think this information will help us to correct that condition.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, answering the Senator from North Dakota further, I will say that I have no objection to the resolution of the Senator from Georgia requiring the commission to give us all the information; but in answer to the Senator from North Dakota I think it is fair to the commission to say that they have already ordered a hearing as to whether or not they will suspend these rates. That hearing is going on now, or will go on soon, as to the merits of their demands. I should like to send to the desk and have read the substance of a statement put out by the commission within the last few days, which will show that the commission are proceeding to hear the railroads and the public and the shippers on the question as to whether or not they will suspend these rates.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Interstate Commerce Commission has readjusted its calendar for the month of May so as to set apart the week beginning May 7 for hearings before the commission on carriers' proposals to generally increase freight rates and the protests thereto. The hearings will be held in the ball room of the Raleigh Hotel, in Washington, beginning at 10 o'clock a. m. During those six days it expects the carriers will put in their case. Hearings will be resumed on May 23, and it has been suggested that full presentation of the carriers' side may be facilitated if the cross-examination of their witnesses is deferred until subsequent hearing. This will give the representatives of shippers and of the public additional opportunity in which to prepare to cross-examine, as well as to prepare the case in chief against the proposed increases.

Hearings will be continued until adequate opportunity has been afforded for presentation of such matters as in the opinion of the commission may aid in determining whether or not it should suspend all or any of the supplements carrying the proposed increases, or require modification thereof as a condition of their becoming effective July 1, their proposed effective date.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have no objection at all to the passage of this resolution; but as a member of the Committee on Interstate Commerce I want to make this observation:

A year or two ago, when there was an application pending before the commission for a 5 per cent increase of the freight rates generally throughout the country, a regular propaganda was begun throughout the country in an effort to influence the finding of the Interstate Commerce Commission. My mail was burdened with letters from shippers and manufacturers asking me to use my good offices toward getting this increase. I uniformly declined to take any action in that behalf, believing that the question of increase or decrease in freight rates was one which should address itself wholly to the commission. It is organized for that purpose. In the matter of the determination of rates it sits as a court; and I would no more assume to interfere with the findings or judgment of a court than I would with the findings of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The matter of rates should be determined upon the evidence that is presented. In my judgment, there are very few Senators who can give to this question the time which would be required in order to enable them to come to a correct conclusion as to whether rates should be increased or decreased; and I do not feel that in advance of these hearings we are justified in saying that we will not abide by any finding that the commission may make. I trust that they will find that it is not necessary to grant an increase, but I do not know whether the facts are such as would justify them in making that order or not; and I simply wanted to take this opportunity of expressing my view in that behalf. I have no sufficient information to justify my coming to any conclusion now. I do not know what the increased cost of supplies or of operation may be.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I propounded the inquiry which I addressed to the Senator from Georgia by reason of the fact that there came into my hands a few days ago a report of one of the western roads for the year 1916, conveying the very highly gratifying information that its net receipts for the year 1916 showed a very substantial increase over what had been realized in any preceding year in its history; and I am very well satisfied from other information which comes to me that a similar condition exists in the case of practically every other one of the transcontinental systems.

Mr. President, it is true that quite a good many years ago the Congress of the United States constituted an agency for the purpose of regulating rates and for hearing in all its details any controversy that may arise between the public on the one hand and the railroads upon the other, the shippers likewise being an interested party; but, Mr. President, it does not occur to me that the responsibility of the Congress of the United States to the people represented by the Members thereof is entirely released and discharged simply because they created such an agency. I apprehend that the responsibility still rests upon Congress to regard with some degree of attention, at least, the work of that commission; to keep itself advised, at least in a general way, concerning what it is doing; and it seems to me that in a great controversy of this character, involving a mass the aggregate of which simply staggers the imagination, it is quite appropriate for Congress, in order that it may follow the investigation with some degree of understanding, to call upon the commission for such information as it has at its command concerning the salient and more important features of the case.

It may develop another thing, Mr. President—and I should not be surprised if it did—that it would be a part of the duty of Congress, considering the tremendous interests involved, to make some additional provisions so that the interests of the public may be adequately and appropriately presented to the commission. I should not be surprised at all if when this report comes in it would be deemed advisable by the Congress of the United States to employ the best legal talent the country can afford to aid the able force now at the command of the commission in presenting the public side of this controversy.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that the information called for by this resolution ought to be furnished promptly to Congress.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, while I agree in a general way with the statement made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], it does not seem to quite do away with the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia that there may be some need for further legislation. Take, for instance, this question of what is called car shortage. It develops that some roads have not control or possession of more than 40 or 50 or 60 per cent of their own cars. It is not so much a problem of car shortage as it is a problem of proper distribution. I doubt very much whether there is power in the Interstate Commerce Commission to control the question of the distribution of cars.

Mr. GALLINGER. May I ask the Senator a question? I heard the Senator make that same statement a little time ago in private conversation, and he rather startled me by suggesting that there was one road that had not more than 20 per cent of its own cars. I ask the Senator if there is a real shortage of cars. Do not the roads have the cars of other roads in their possession?

Mr. FLETCHER. It seems not. It appears they have not only lost the control of a very large percentage of their own cars, but they have not any cars to take the place of their own cars.

Mr. GALLINGER. My information is—in fact, I have some knowledge on the subject—that each of these roads have agents going over the country looking after their cars and seeing that they are returned. I have supposed that they were interchangeable and that the roads having a shortage of cars of their own have in their rolling stock cars belonging to other roads, which in due time will be returned to the rightful owners. But, of course, I have no definite knowledge on that point as to the roads the Senator has in mind.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course they do interchange cars, but the situation in some portions of the country is very serious, and the reports are that certain roads not only have not enough of their own rolling stock but a large percentage of it is in the possession of other roads and they have not any rolling stock of those roads to take the place of it. The difficulty is to give some power and authority somewhere to compel the roads who seize the cars of other roads nolens volens and keep them as long as they please, probably paying demurrage and things of that sort, which they can well afford to do at the present freight charges and the prices of goods, and so forth. They make the shippers pay for it, probably; but there seems to be an absence of power in the commission to control the matter of car distribution, and the roads do take one from the other.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. FLETCHER. In a moment. They take and retain just as they please cars of different lines, and that is largely responsible for the present condition. It may have a bearing on this question of rates; I do not know. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Florida that a witness testified yesterday before the Agricultural Committee in regard to refrigerator cars. He made the statement that it was admitted by the officials of most of the railroads at a hearing held by the Interstate Commerce Commission recently in regard to the distribution of cars that many of the roads had in self-defense taken all the cars they could get, no matter whose cars they were, and kept them as long as they could. He told us of an instance where refrigerator cars made and built for the purpose of carrying perishable products were then taken by other roads than the owners and put into other business, carrying dead freight, such as iron ore and things of that kind, which could just as well be carried in other cars, thus creating a shortage of refrigerator cars at a time when it was absolutely necessary to have refrigerator cars to move the perishable crops and goods that are produced in various parts of the country. He said the effect was a shortage of refrigerator cars for the purpose of moving that kind of freight at a time when they have less refrigerator cars and a greater amount of those products than in the preceding year.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that confirms one point I rose to suggest, that there is a problem which may call for further legislation to strengthen the authority and power of the Interstate Commerce Commission over that condition. Unquestionably these products are now paying as high price as they ought to pay, and to increase those rates in order to relieve the roads and increase their earnings, and so forth, where their earnings are decreased by reason of their lack of control over their cars and lack of control in some power over that situation, would be a very doubtful proposition. I simply rose to suggest that as a matter which might be considered in connection with the adoption of the resolution and as one of the things that might be reached.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, in answer to what the Senator from Florida has said I beg to inform the Senate that some time ago I introduced a bill conferring full authority upon the Interstate Commerce Commission to control the distribution of cars, and we are to have hearings on that bill to-morrow before a subcommittee of the Interstate Commerce Committee. Some time ago this question was before the Interstate Commerce Commission and by a vote of 4 to 3 they decided that they already have that power. If there is any doubt about it at all, of course Congress will be only to anxious to clear it up.

In further explanation of what I said a moment ago, as perhaps I did not make myself entirely clear, I stated that I had no objection to the passage of this resolution; I only took issue with the statement which was made to the effect that if the commission should make a certain finding some Senators would be ready to condemn them. I confess I am so constituted that I can not judge of a finding of a commission before the finding is made and before I know what the evidence is.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, the truth is probably that there are not freight cars enough in the United States to do the business of the country. If these freight cars were all under one jurisdiction, so that they could be sent to the points where business is pressing, undoubtedly they could handle the business of the country better than it is done now; for instance, if they were handled as are the cars of the Pullman company. If traffic is running north and south the Pullman company divert cars to that service; if it is a summer resort or a winter resort business the cars are diverted for that purpose.

As a matter of fact, there are five prominent railroad presidents sitting in Washington trying to adjust this car situation as far as it is possible for them to do it. They represent the Pennsylvania, the Chesapeake & Ohio, I think, the Southern, the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, and the New Haven Railroads. They are trying to determine where the need of cars is most pressing, and they, if I understand the question correctly, have full power of the railroads to divert cars to carry the business which is most pressing and most necessary for the time being.

That is really what the law should provide, that the cars should be sent where the service is most pressing. If that were followed out, either by the Interstate Commerce Commission or as a result of further legislation, it would answer the purpose as far as the number of cars available would enable it to be responded to.

But I do not believe that there are nearly enough cars in the United States to do the business that is offering to-day. We must remember that the building of cars now is a very expensive operation. The probabilities are that a freight car costs very nearly twice as much as it would in normal times, and in the final analysis the cost of the car is going to be imposed in freight, so that the public, if the railroads do build liberally, are going to pay the additional cost of the equipment which is furnished in this way.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, I hope very much that the resolution will be adopted. I also hope that the other resolutions touching upon the same subject now before the committee will be reported out and adopted. I do not believe that Congress should always take for granted that its offspring is going to do exactly the right thing.

I can understand the theory and the practice of intrusting questions of rates to the Interstate Commerce Commission, especially at times when it concerns only certain commodities or in ordinary times to make a horizontal raise even, but at a time like this, when we are engaged in a world war, I think the Interstate Commerce Commission should have some solicitude and respect for the opinion of the people of the United States and Congress particularly, and should not object to but welcome advice or direction which Congress may give upon so important a subject. I think it might be very helpful to the Interstate Commerce Commission to ascertain the opinion of Congress as to the wisdom of a great raise in freight rates at this time, and particularly in respect to putting a rate in force at once pending the investigation. I want to give it as my judgment that the people will condemn the Interstate Commerce Commission or Congress if at this time a rate is put into effect increasing the present freight rates at all pending an investigation.

This is not a question of technical knowledge or technical information. There are some things connected with this demand for increased freight rates that I think even an ordinary citizen can understand, that even an ordinary Senator can understand. What has happened that would warrant a 15 per cent increase in the railroad rates? A short time ago the railroads came in and asked for a 5 per cent increase in freight rates. Why? Because they said they were not doing a normal business. At that time they pointed to the empty freight cars that were congesting traffic in the freight yards, and they said they had many cars which were idle and which were bringing in no revenue. That was true to a certain extent, although the wisdom of the raise was then questioned. There were a great many people well posted in this business who said that the railroads, on their legitimate investment, were then earning more than a fair return on the investment.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HUSTING. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to say that the car shortage which we hear so much about arises partly from two causes, one of a permanent nature and the other of a transitory character. The great eastern roads terminating at New York, like the Baltimore & Ohio and the Pennsylvania roads, have failed to do what our great western roads have done terminating at the head of Lake Superior—they have failed to supply large terminal elevators in which grain can be stored. The same is the case, I think, with the roads terminating in Boston. At the head of Lake Superior, where we have two great transcontinental lines terminating, we have large terminal elevators that can take care of the grain in the winter, so that it can be stored there until spring and shipped. The eastern seaboard cities lack entirely the terminal facilities in the shape of grain elevators that they ought to have to store the grain that comes in there.

Another reason that I referred to is that a large number of cars have reached the seaboard on the East from the interior and the West with agricultural supplies and all other commodities, and the cars are retained at the seaboard for warehouse purposes. For the lack of shipment to take the goods abroad they do not take the products out of the cars. You will find cars by the scores and hundreds full of western freight tied up there and used as warehouses instead of putting the goods into terminal warehouses. If the eastern roads were to supply warehouse facilities for the western products, grain and flour and all other commodities, it would remove to a large extent the car shortage which arises not so much from lack of cars but because the cars are stranded on the eastern seaboard and used for warehouse purposes.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, I want to thank the Senator for the information; but the point I want to make is that at that time the railroads were asking for a raise upon the ground that they had an oversupply of cars; that they had no use for the cars they had; that they were not doing any business; that their cars were idle, their trains were idle, and they dismissed a number of their crew, and that consequently they were not making the amount of money the law allowed. On these grounds they got a 5 per cent raise. Now they come here and ask for a 15 per cent raise because they say they have not got enough cars to do business with; that their facilities are overtaxed; in short, that their business is too good.

If there is any grabbing of cars, I assume that every road grabs whatever cars it can get, and thus, at least in part, is equalizing what damage it suffers at the hands of other roads. On the other hand, it is apparent that cars are in great demand, and that every car in the United States is in operation, is being used, and is bringing revenue to the railroads. It means that they have not got facilities enough to do the business that is brought to their lines; that they have not cars enough; that they have not engines enough; that they have not crews enough. What does that mean? Does that mean bad business, or does it mean good business? Does it mean a losing business, or does it mean a prosperous business? It does not take a scientist to understand that when business is so good that it overtaxes the facilities of the roads, that when there is no idle rolling stock and no idle capital, that when no men are laying off but all are working; in short, when every energy of the railroads is taxed to the utmost and everything is in motion and in service, the roads are not losing money but are making money.

So I say that the ordinary man can understand that if a raise of 5 per cent was necessary two years ago because the cars were idle and were doing no business, now, when the roads are doing business and overtaxed to the extent that they have not enough cars, it means they are offered so much business that they can not handle it, and that if they could have more cars and better facilities they would make still more money; in other words, it does not mean that they are losing money now, but it means that they are not making as much money as they would make if they had still more cars and still greater facilities for handling them. And it does mean most emphatically that the roads are making money now. These two inconsistent theories, that they need a raise when cars are idle and that they need a much greater raise when they have got so much business that the roads can not handle it, are not going to stand up very well before the ordinary citizen.

Another thing about this proposed 5 per cent raise at this time: We were told then that the railroads were not making quite the percentage which they were entitled to make. Very well. Suddenly a great streak of prosperity hit this country, and now they are doing so much business that they have not enough cars to do the business and their receipts have jumped up by leaps and bounds beyond anything in the history of railroad operation. I have not the slightest doubt that the figures of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] are practically correct. So a year after the 5 per cent increase they had not only got back to normal conditions but to supernormal conditions the other way. Before the hard times of 1914 and part of 1915 and before the 5 per cent raise they had not made any complaint; they were making money before the hard times hit them. When normal times came back, and on the top of that still more prosperous times came, what did that mean? It meant that they were making more money than they did before they got the 5 per cent raise.

Well, why are they not here with an offer of restitution? Why should they not offer a reduction in rates? If they could get along without the 5 per cent prior to the time they asked for it, why can they not restore the 5 per cent or reduce their rates 5 per cent, when they have not merely returned to normal times but to better than normal times, for they are now making more money than they ever did? To the ordinary individual it would seem that they ought to be coming here with an offer or a prayer to the Interstate Commerce Commission to reduce rates by 5 per cent instead of asking to boost them 15 per cent. I think that is what will appeal to the ordinary man who puts two and two together.

It is said that because of the passage of the Adamson law the operating expenses of the railroads have increased. Well, it may be that operating expenses have increased a little, but nothing compared with the raise that they demand. It has been stated here, I think in one of the preambles of the resolutions of the Senator from Georgia, that this raise on account of the Adamson law, as has been estimated, varies from $30,000,000 to $60,000,000, while their demands for a 15 per cent increase means $400,000,000 increase in freight rates. Are the railroad companies acting in good faith when they come before the Interstate Commerce Commission and, because of a slight increase in operating expenses, demand a 15 per cent increase in rates?

I venture to say, further, that if the figures of the Senator from Georgia are correct, viz, that the Adamson law increases the operating expenses between $30,000,000 and $60,000,000, and that a 15 per cent increase would mean now an increase of $400,000,000, then a 5 per cent increase, which they are enjoying now and to which they are not entitled, would amount to one-third, or over $130,000,000, and much more than overcomes the increase caused by the Adamson law. So they are now enjoying the "velvet" of the rates between the cost under the Adamson law and the 5 per cent increase; and, therefore, they are already getting more than they are entitled to.

There is another feature of this matter. The President not long ago sent out an appeal to the country calling upon men, high and low, to serve the country. As a consequence of that appeal, men are coming in and offering their services gratuitously. Industrial concerns are coming in here and offering to put their plants at the disposal of the Government without profit. A manufacturer of shoes in Milwaukee has made an offer to the President to furnish 500 pairs of shoes a day at absolute cost, to be figured by the Government.

Not only that, Mr. President, but we have passed a conscription law by which the Government can enter any home and put its hand on a man, and say, "You must serve the country; you must sacrifice your life, if need be; you must give up your position, whether you are earning $1,000, $2,000, $10,000, or $50,000 a year, and you must serve the Government at $30 a month." When the Government conscripts a man, it conscripts his earning capacity, and when it conscripts his earning capacity, it conscripts his property as well as his life. It is a poor rule that does not work both ways. Are you going to conscript men and their lives and their service at $30 per month and at the same time reward others who are not conscripted by enormous increase in rates and in profits?

You have heard of the high cost of living and yet by a 15 per cent freight increase you are going to pile on top of the already staggering cost of living extraordinary transportation charges, to be saddled upon the backs of those who are left at home because their breadwinner has gone to the war and who must subsist on $30 per month?

Mr. President, this is no time, in my judgment, for business or for railroad companies or for industrial enterprises or for anybody else to come in and ask to have high profits or even to have profits increased. This is a time for service, not for gain, not for profit. The judgment of Congress and of the people of the United States, and their seal of condemnation should at once, and for all time, and at the very start, be put upon any such attempt as this. If this is going to be a game of grab, if men are going to set out at once to get hold of all they can while men are sacrificing their lives upon the battle field, everybody will grab, and everybody, instead of trying to find opportunities to give, will devote his time and energies looking for opportunities to get.

Not long ago there was a bill under consideration here providing that the Government should advertise in the newspapers and pay the newspapers for advertising for recruits. Very properly the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], although himself a newspaper man, condemned the bill upon the ground that newspapers should be willing to do their part. This is the high plane to which other agencies should lift themselves or to which they should be lifted. Now, I say, let the railroads serve; let the industrial organizations serve; let everybody serve. Those who do not have to serve with their bodies at least should serve with their money or their service in some other way. Let us help to pay and not try to take. Let us not fill our pockets; let us rather try to empty them in the general cause and for the general welfare. If it should come about that the Interstate Commerce Commission should increase these rates, as requested, under these circumstances, who, I ask, will oppose the United States taking over these railroads and commandeering them in the interests of the general welfare? I for one will not, and I want to predict that the people will demand that the Government take them over.

If it is going to appear to the people of the United States that the men at the head of our great transportation companies are going to be actuated by sordid motives and are not looking toward the service of the Government, but toward service of self, I here say there will be a sentiment going throughout this land in favor of this Government doing what other Governments have already done, namely, taking over the transportation companies and operating them for the purpose of serving the people in this great emergency.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HITCHCOCK in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. HUSTING. Certainly.

Mr. CALDER. Of course, the Senator from Wisconsin knows that the farmers of his State are getting for their products double what they ever received before; that the manufacturers of his State are getting double what they ever got before; that the railroad companies are paying double what they formerly paid for equipment, steel rails, wages, and everything else.

Mr. HUSTING. I do not know that the Senator's figures are correct. I know that it is generally supposed that the farmers are getting very high prices, that industrial concerns are getting very high prices, that railroad companies have to pay large prices; but it also appears, on certainly as good authority, that the railroad companies are making more money now in net earnings than they ever did before in the history of this country, and this notwithstanding the increased cost of operation.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I can say to the Senator from Wisconsin that the people of New York State who are buying the products of the farmers in his State and the products of the manufacturers in his State are paying double what they ever paid before; and I do not see how any industry can be expected to live when it is compelled to pay double for everything it uses without any opportunity to increase its revenues.

Mr. HUSTING. I will answer the Senator that, according to his philosophy, as I understand it, because the farmers are getting double, because the manufacturers are getting double, therefore the railroads should get double. I ask if we permit one class of men to charge more than is equitable shall we then extend the privilege to everybody and let everybody else also fatten upon the country or shall we rather, as I would propose, restrict them? Where men are getting too much, do not let them have it. I do not advocate favoring any class, whether it be the farmers or whether it be the manufacturers or the transportation companies, or permitting them to take undue or unfair advantage of the people or the country, at a time like this, especially. I say at a time like this everybody should serve; everybody should make sacrifices of some kind. If one can not, by reason of age or otherwise, be of service at the front let him at least be willing to serve at home. All citizens ought at least be willing to do something in the nature of sacrifice and not insist upon having an advantage.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. HUSTING. Certainly.

Mr. CALDER. If the Senator can develop a scheme by which the people of the country can buy the things they need more reasonably than they do now, I shall be glad to help him work it out.

Mr. HUSTING. I will say to the Senator that I am more anxious to restrict undue advantages or restrict profits already existing than I am to extend such undue profits to others and thus make conditions still more unendurable than they are now, and I hope before the end of this session something will be done to bring about a greater equality of service and benefits and a greater equality of the burdens of war. I sincerely believe that the Senator from New York will cooperate to that end when the time comes or opportunity is afforded.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HUSTING. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I desire to suggest, for the consideration of the Senator from Wisconsin, that the rule which should govern the profits of public-service corporations, such as transcontinental railroads, should not be the one applicable to determining the profits made by individuals in their private activities.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if the Senator from Wisconsin will allow me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HUSTING. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I only desire to express the hope that the Senator from Wisconsin will not go so far into the general merits of the question as to prevent action on this resolution. It only asks for information. I am afraid that part of the figures I have given to the Senate have been incorrect, and I want to get the real facts.

Mr. HUSTING. I will say to the Senator that I consider this a very good time now to make the observations I have made.

I want to say that the rule suggested by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], which is applied to public-service corporations which are supposed to serve the public in a quasi public capacity, is a far different rule from that applied to individuals. I will even go further and say now that all should serve, whether they are private corporations, public-service corporations, private individuals, or officials—they should all serve.

I say this is a good time now to make these observations, because any attempt of this kind should be discouraged "right off the bat." This whole business should be lifted onto a higher plane, and men engaged in any walk of life, in any industry or vocation, whether it be farming or whether it be manufacturing, merchandising, or any other form, should understand that at a time when some men must sacrifice position, salary, business, and life itself there ought to be no encouragement for other men to increase their material advantages. I say it is not fair to conscript men and make them go to the front or make them give up positions where they have got to sacrifice not only profit but the very living of their families, and then encourage, on the other hand, increases of profits. In my judgment, all these transportation companies and these men at their head—and I respect many of them very highly—ought to be good sportsmen, ought to be good citizens, and good patriots, and instead of coming here asking for increased rewards and profits, they ought to come here offering something to the country. If the country will get together on that basis, it will find no dissatisfaction with the war.

I desire to sound this word of warning: That if this is going to be a fight for money as well as a fight for glory on the part of some men, if men are to be sent overseas to fight and die for their country so that others may stay here and get rich in their absence, you will have dissatisfaction with the war. I am anxious to see that this war shall be a success; that class distinctions shall die over here; that the captains of industry and the captains of transportation will so conduct and demean themselves in this crisis that all class feeling and class hatred will die away, and we shall have a brotherhood of American citizens, all willing to sacrifice something for their country, all willing to share in the burdens of war. To get increased profits will not involve sacrifice. Sacrifice can be made only by the relinquishment of something of value, not by the taking of something valuable. I say that this is the only way, in my judgment, that this war can be fought out successfully and leave this country in a stronger position than it now is.

I do not stand here and ask for confiscation, although I want to point out that in war even confiscation is not only justifiable, but is actually practiced. The Government, when it drafts him, is confiscating the man. It is confiscating his earning capacity when it drafts him and puts him into the service, and I say if the Government can do that with a man's life why should it not be just to do that with a man's property?

However, that is not what I am talking about. I am talking about fair play. I say that men and corporations should not come here and ask to have profits heaped upon profits at a time of stress like this; and I say that it would be well for the Interstate Commerce Commission to understand this, and to understand that the people are not in a temper to look with complacency on governmental action which has for its object and purpose the increase of profits at this time.

I hope that this resolution will pass and that the Interstate Commerce Commission will raise no rate temporarily or otherwise before the public's side can be fully heard.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I submit a proposed amendment, to which the Senator from Georgia, the author of the resolution, does not object, and I trust that it will be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the resolution it is proposed to add the following:

The commission is furthermore directed to furnish for the use of the Senate a list of all railroads in the United States now in the hands of receivers, with the percentage of mileage covered by said roads as compared to the total railroad mileage of the country.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be considered as adopted.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I find myself in entire accord with so much of the observations of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HUSTING] as cover the idea that this is a time for service. I am interested at this period in the railroad problem with the view, and with the exclusive view, of seeing that the railroads of the country, as its highways, render the greatest possible service in this emergency. The railroads are the highways of commerce; and it is over the railroads that the resources and the troops and the materials, whether they be food products or munitions of war, that are required by this Government and that are required by our allies, must be transported to the consumer.

A railroad as a highway can no more be maintained without profits than the Mississippi River could be maintained as a highway without rain. Railroads wear out; the roadbed deteriorates; the rails break or are worn out; the rolling stock is gradually consumed; and all of these things must be replaced. I do not understand that it is the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia that railroads should be disallowed profit. His resolution only goes to the question as to the obtaining of information from which some estimate of the justness of those profits could be made.

Mr. President, that is primarily the function of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I happened to be a Member of the Senate in 1906, and happened to take an active part in the discussion of the questions that were then before the Senate in respect to the regulations of railroads and the enlargement of the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission. As all Senators will remember who were then Members of this body, and particularly those who participated in the debate, that was a period of self-renunciation. We had reached the conclusion, and perhaps wisely—indeed, it was almost unanimous—that it was not a possibility for us to deal legislatively with these great problems of railroad transportation, and that for that reason a commission should be employed, and that the powers and the functions of the then existing commission should be enlarged so that they could primarily, in the first instance, intelligently pass upon these questions, and practically determine the rule by which the railroads should be governed in their relations to the public.

Mr. President, there is a vast difference between the service that we shall exact from the private corporation and the service that we exact from the railroad. There is a vast difference between a railroad and the owner of a profitable operating concern in the city of Milwaukee or in the city of Pittsburgh or Philadelphia, who in all probability has a fat bank account, who has accumulated the savings of years, and is rich independently of the operation of his property. A railroad would cease to exist as a useful highway if you ceased to keep it up to the times, if you ceased to make good the deterioration to which I have referred. These are times of war, Mr. President. We know not what the future has in store for this country. If it is at all similar to the experience of the countries where the great battles are now being fought—France and Belgium—we will find that one of the great things that causes the suffering and the delays in the movement of troops and supplies is inadequate railway facilities. The fact is, Mr. President, that they are tearing up the railroads in Great Britain and shipping the ties and the rails and the cars to Flanders, because of the tremendous increase in the demand upon the functions of the railroads.

Mr. President, I have not the slightest objection to the Senate obtaining all the information called for in this resolution; but the theory of the Senator from Georgia, as I understand, is this: We want to be in possession of information that will enable us to judge whether the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which is to pass primarily upon these questions, is just and is warranted by the facts. Now, if that is the theory——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. KNOX. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is not the only theory. I regard it as a very important question, and I think the information may lead to additional legislation with reference to the powers of the commission, and, broadly, that it is information entirely outside of this action by the commission that Congress ought to have at this time. I have never really suggested any final action that I thought ought to be taken. I have introduced a resolution requesting the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate to consider the whole situation and see what they think ought to be done. I have even suggested before them that if they find a particular difficulty at some particular place in railroad service, it might be advisable, in view of the general situation, for the Government to seek to relieve the trouble.

Mr. KNOX. Well, Mr. President, I had accepted that as one of the purposes, and I understand the Senator from Georgia does not disavow that that is one of the purposes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; that is true—for consideration.

Mr. KNOX. But assuming that there is the additional purpose to which the Senator now alludes, it only strengthens the argument that I am about to suggest for broadening this resolution.

This resolution, in my judgment, calls for mere ex parte evidence, supposed to be tending to prove that the railroads are not entitled to the increase they are asking. Now, they may be or they may not be. I know nothing about that, and the Senate will know nothing about it unless it hears all of the evidence and all of the information bearing upon the subject. My suggestion is that this resolution ought to go to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, in order that it may compile a schedule of the information that we desire, that will enable us to deal intelligently with the entire subject; and I do not think we should pass the resolution asking only for the specific information therein set out.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. KNOX. Certainly.

Mr. HUSTING. I just wanted to ask the Senator, in view of what he said on the question of profits of railroads, whether he understood that I took the position that railroads should make no profits; that they should be run at a loss, or that they should be run at such rates as would destroy their usefulness?

Mr. KNOX. I certainly gathered, from the illustration the Senator used in speaking of the patriotic citizen of Milwaukee having turned over his factory to be operated without profit, that he meant to convey the suggestion that that was what the railroads should do.

Mr. HUSTING. I just want to say, then, in reply briefly to the Senator's understanding, that I merely cited that as an illustration of what citizens were ready and willing to do and were offering to do, and also pointing out that men were compelled by the Government to relinquish positions of profit to work for the Government at the rate of $30 a month, and that in view of that fact the railroads should not ask for increased profits; that they should be willing even to take less than the law would allow them in case of an adjustment of rates. In other words, my position was that if men were willing to make sacrifices of all their incomes plus their own lives, railroads should not be coming and asking for increased profits, but should be willing to do the work at a minimum profit and not a maximum profit.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I am really gratified to know that I did misunderstand the Senator from Wisconsin. As to what may be a reasonable profit, or whether an advance at this time is justified or not, I do not know. My point is that if we are going to pass upon that question at all, and pass upon it intelligently, we ought to have all of the evidence bearing upon the equation laid before the Senate.

It may be that the railroads are not entitled to a penny of advance; but, if my memory serves me, at the time the Adamson bill was passed the President of the United States, who evidently had been devoting his mind for many days and many nights to thoughtful consideration of the railroad problem, said or intimated that the time had come when the railroads could with propriety consider an application for an increase of rates. I may be mistaken as to that having been his position, but that at least was the position that was presented to the public through the press; and I still think the Senator from Georgia ought to consent to allow this resolution to go to the committee, and then let the committee determine the scope of the inquiry.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania further yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. KNOX. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If others want additional information, they can ask for it; but I do think we are entitled to this information now. I especially want it because I have used a number of those figures, and if I have been wrong I wish to correct them. I think I was wrongly informed as to some of them.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, if you are entitled to any information now, you are entitled to all the information now. Men are liable to form a judgment upon ex parte testimony. They are liable to form a judgment upon a prima facie showing that a subsequent examination of evidence tending the other way is often unable to uproot.

In dealing with a great problem of this kind, the time for us to decide, if we are called upon to decide anything in connection with this matter, is when we have all of the facts before us.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] made some statements about grain elevators at the eastern ports in which I think he was a little in error. Of course we have not at Boston or New York the system of enormous grain elevators which they have on the Lakes, but we have very large grain elevators at both those ports. On the Lakes they have to carry an immense amount of grain during the season when navigation is closed. Navigation is not closed at the Atlantic ports, and the elevators are built upon the theory that they will hold the grain only for a short time, that it will pass through rapidly to foreign countries, so that there will always be room for the grain as it comes in over the railroads.

Just now we are short of tonnage. Grain gathers in the elevators at Boston and New York, and, no doubt, other ports, and they can not take the additional grain that comes in the cars, and then the cars are held for storehouse purposes, as the Senator from Minnesota said; but the center of the problem is just where the center of the problem is in the war in which we are engaged, and it is part of that problem. It centers on the ships.

If you can get the grain and the rails and the locomotives and the thousand and one articles that are needed by the allies and by those who are now fighting with us against a common foe taken out of the Atlantic ports and carried across the ocean, a great deal will be done to relieve the congestion and apparent shortage of cars in this country.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, if the Senator will excuse me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I do not know what the conditions are in other cities, but I will say that in Baltimore they are building and preparing to build very largely increased facilities in the way of storage elevators. There is one already completed, and I understand the Pennsylvania Railroad expects to put in $2,000,000 in building increased elevator storage in Baltimore city. I do not know how it is in other seaports.

Mr. LODGE. I will ask the Senator, before he takes his seat, if he does not think that what I have stated about the congestion of the great Atlantic ports is largely true—that it is the difficulty of finding tonnage to get the wheat abroad?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. That has evidently been the trouble. They can not get export; they can not get vessels to ship the grain in, and it has created a congestion that, of course, can not be remedied at once; but they are endeavoring to remedy it in the city of Baltimore now to a very great extent.

Mr. LODGE. I do not know whether they are building additional elevator space in Boston and New York or not, but I think I have stated the general situation correctly. It seems to me that at this juncture it is perhaps more important to do everything we can to promote the attack upon the common enemy than to amuse ourselves by assaulting our own railroads. Of course, as the Senator from Pennsylvania said, we all sympathize with what the Senator from Wisconsin said. Nothing is more sympathetic to any one than to make somebody else act on a high plane. We all like it. It is a form of altruism that appeals to every one of us. But it seems to me that even the railroads are entitled to a fair hearing, and I say, with all respect to my friend from Georgia, that this resolution calls for the evidence on one side and creates what seems to me to be an unfair impression on its face. If we are going to have the gross and net incomes, I want also the operating expenses.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The net income is what they have after they get through paying their operating expenses.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; but I want to know what the operating expenses are, and I want to see how they have increased if they have increased or decreased if they have decreased. Gross and net incomes are not all. The movement of operating expenses is a very important thing in judging of the relations of any corporation, and I think we ought to have that. I shall move to insert, after the words "gross and net incomes," wherever they occur, the words "and operating expenses."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I accept the suggestion.

Mr. LODGE. Although I think the amendment moved by the junior Senator from Minnesota in regard to not confining this to railroads with 7 per cent income——

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I ask the Senator, would it not be well to find out what the railroads make—those over 7 per cent or below 7 per cent.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have already accepted the amendment suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I was not aware that it had been accepted. I was going to say simply——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will accept any suggestion for the fullest information asked for by anyone.

Mr. LODGE. Very well, I thought it only included the roads in the hands of receivers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill No. 2.

PUNISHMENT OF ESPIONAGE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2) to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. LEWIS. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] is detained on official business.

Mr. THOMAS. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SHAFROTH] is detained on important business.

I was also requested to announce that the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] is unavoidably absent, and he has a general pair with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. LANE] on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] on account of illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the President of the United States, the Congress, the governors of the different States, the mayors of cities, the commercial clubs, and thousands of other organizations in this country have been pleading with the people to plant and cultivate every possible acre of ground for the purpose of raising sufficient food crops to feed the American people and our allies engaged in the present war for the coming year. Lands have been offered freely without recompense in any way, and there has been, I was going to say, almost a universal response on the part of the people.

But, Mr. President, I find from letters received by me from different parts of the country that there is an imposition being imposed upon the public by many concerns distributing seeds, and that the prices charged for them are outrageously high. I expect to call the attention of the Secretary of Agriculture to it. I believe that some movement should be made to prevent people who have responded so willingly to the appeal of the President and those whom I have already mentioned from being robbed as they are being robbed to-day in the purchase of seed.

A friend of mine writes me that after attending one of the meetings at which an earnest appeal was made for the cultivation of every possible acre of land he decided, upon leaving the meeting, to put all his back yard into vegetables and cultivate the land in the best way that he could. The next morning he started out to purchase some garden seed. He went to a seed house and bought some 10 or 20 packages of garden seed of different kinds. He took them home thinking he had plenty of seed to plant the small piece of ground. In opening the packages that were sold to him at five cents a package this is what he found:

He found just eight peas in the package of peas. I notice on the front of a package a picture of a pea pod and I count in the pod nine peas; but inside the package you will find only eight. The package was put up by the New York Seed Co., of New York.

The package of beets was put up by William Elliott & Sons, of New York, and there were just 13 beet seeds in the package.

That is not all. I see that in a package of radishes for which they charged 5 cents there were 15 radish seeds. I have not a pair of scales nor had I the time this morning to go to an apothecary's shop to see what 15 radish seeds would weigh, but at the rate charged for the 15 seeds it would amount to $20 or more a pound for radish seed. That is what people are paying for the seed they are going to plant in small lots to help feed the people of this country.

Of lettuce seed we find enough in the package to perhaps plant not to exceed a row of 5 feet.

Mr. President, I wish to call this to the attention of the Senate, hoping that something will be done to relieve the situation. I asked why they did not buy the seeds in bulk. In one case it was stated that the town was so small there was not a seed house in it and the only way they could buy seed was to purchase them in packages put up by the seed companies.

If this is to be universal, Mr. President, there will be millions of dollars spent by the American people in purchasing seeds put up in the form to which I have called the attention of the Senate.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CALDER. Were the seeds purchased in the city of New York?

Mr. SMOOT. Of these seeds two of the packages—the beet seed and the radish seed—were purchased by Mr. W. P. Monson, of New York.

Mr. CALDER. In the city?

Mr. SMOOT. In the city. The other two packages that I have were purchased out West.

Mr. CALDER. They were purchased at retail from a retail dealer in a small place, but manufactured in New York.

Mr. SMOOT. They were put up in New York.

Mr. President, I simply call attention to this matter hoping that something will come from it. I am going to ask the Secretary of Agriculture to take up the question, so that in those places where there are no seed houses people can buy seeds in the bulk; that there shall be some arrangement made by which they can be sent out and the people not robbed as they are being robbed all over the country by purchasing seed in packages as put up to-day.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield the floor.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator a question before he takes his seat.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. I ask the Senator from Utah if he has given consideration to the bill now before the Committee on Agriculture, section 5 of which covers to some extent this question, to enable the Secretary of Agriculture——

Mr. SMOOT. I have read the bill, I will say to the Senator, but I have not given any special attention to it, because I did not think that was necessary until the bill was either reported to the committee or we knew that some action was to be taken upon it.

Mr. KENYON. That bill is now before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and they are devoting consideration to that very question.

Mr. SMOOT. I so understood, Mr. President.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the facts laid before us by the Senator from Utah are deplorable, but they are not surprising. The seed men and all those who retail food products are taking advantage of existing conditions, just as everybody else are doing. Hence there is nothing new in the Senator's disclosures. If there are any producers on a large scale outside of some of the farmers, who are not profiting by the opportunities now presented, I have not heard of them.

I received a letter yesterday from a woman living in the city of Denver, my home city, calling attention to a situation at the other end of the food line, which is equally reprehensible and which, I fear, is not at all local in its application. I desire to read the concluding sentences from the letter, which refer to that situation. The lady says:

> About the food situation, there is a lot of talk about women wasting food. Well, they do, of course. There is more or less of that, but not among the masses. * * * But what about the men who buy up the fields and orchards and allow the food to rot?
> I was in Kansas City recently and heard the people there talking about the food destroyed there last year and this year. If people grow as much stuff as they expect to, what will be the result? Why, only the growers will benefit, for the speculator will destroy all that can not be sold at high prices to the nonproducer. There must be some drastic measures taken at once.

The name of this lady is Mrs. Frances Walden, 4554 Irving Street, Denver, Colo.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. CURTIS. Does the lady indicate the kind of produce destroyed? I ask the question because I had a similar letter, and in it there was no mention of the kind of produce that had been destroyed.

Mr. THOMAS. No; she does not. I will say to the Senator, however, that I was told about two months ago by a gentleman whose word is beyond question, that he knew of instances within 40 or 50 miles of Chicago, where last fall men from that city bought the product of some farms chiefly consisting of pumpkins, winter squash, and so forth, paying an extraordinarily high price for them, but which were never gathered. No pretense was made of harvesting the crop, and it having been sold the farmer, of course, could do nothing with it. The purchasers simply permitted them to remain on the ground, and thus decrease or minimize the amount of similar products upon the market. The effect upon their prices is obvious.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to say to the Senator that I have in my office a letter inclosing a clipping from one of the papers in my State, and in that clipping there is an announcement that there had been destroyed in Chicago 150,000 bushels of potatoes, that they had been destroyed lately, and destroyed for the purpose of decreasing the supply. I can not believe that that is true; I feel certain that it can not be true; and yet stuff of that kind is being circulated through the country to excite our people. Has the Senator any knowledge of any such destruction?

Mr. THOMAS. I have given the instances that have reached me directly. I recall, now that the Senator mentions it, seeing that account of the destruction of potatoes in or near Chicago. I do not say that these things are true; I hope they are not true; but I believe that the speculators would not hesitate to go to that extreme, if necessary, to enhance the price of their products.

Mr. McCUMBER. I can say, Mr. President, if it is true, there are some people in the United States unhung who ought to be hung. But I can not believe that the statement is true.

Mr. THOMAS. I quite agree with the last sentiment expressed by the Senator from North Dakota. I know of no crime more serious and reprehensible to-day than the deliberate destruction of food products anywhere. I know of no crime that approaches it so nearly as the practice which does prevail of cornering food products to enhance their prices. There is no question but that such practices are flourishing and the law seems to be unable to reach or punish them. I greatly fear that unless something is soon done to prevent them, resort will be had to the lamp-post.

I do not care to take the time of the Senate further in discussing the subject. I propose to offer when chapter 7 of the bill now before the Senate is reached an amendment suspending boards of trade and chambers of commerce in the United States which permit speculation in food products until the President by proclamation declares the war to have ended.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. I do not believe there has been any deliberate destruction of food products in the United States. Prices are not fixed by demand and supply; they are fixed by estimated demand and estimated supply. The traitors who were in the pay of Von Papen and Von Rintelen and Von Igle are now spreading these reports all over the United States, with the view of making food cost as much as possible to the American people, the American Army and American Navy, and the armies and navies of our allies. There has not been anything like a deliberate destruction of food products anywhere. Somebody would have known it; somebody would have seen it; somebody would have seen the fire or the other method of destruction.

Prices depend upon psychology, contrary to the general impression. If you fix the psychological impression upon the public mind that supplies are being destroyed and are being diminished, prices go up, and if you fix the opposite psychological impression, the opposite result follows. I believe that the full amount of the German corruption fund has not yet been exhausted.

Mr. BORAH. Certainly the German corruption fund has not actually raised the prices.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; it has and does now. The German corruption fund has created a hysteria; it has created a psychological impression that foodstuffs are short and the supply is insufficient, and in creating that it has increased prices.

Mr. BORAH. I think it was well founded, but the most alarming information which has gone to the country at all has gone from the Agricultural Department.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not talking about that, because that information, real as it is, can not account for the present prices. It can not account for the situation just disclosed by the Senator from Utah that there is a condition actually existing in places in which the nonproducing part of the population of the world in armies and navies is eating food to an enormous extent, out of all proportion to normal conditions, when there would be a similar proportion of the people producing food. That is undoubtedly true, but that does not account for this condition.

Now, this condition exists worse in the boll-weevil districts of the South than almost anywhere else right now. The people had their cotton crops destroyed by the boll weevil. So they wanted to raise foodstuffs this year. They have found that they can not buy a great many things, soy beans for one thing. Velvet beans are very scarce. Even cowpeas are said to be very scarce. Yet there is not a man throughout that country who does not know that we raised last year a bigger crop of cowpeas than we ever raised before in our lives. But the cowpeas are being cornered somewhere, and the impression is being placed upon the public mind that peas are scarce.

There is no one who does not know that the South planted more corn this year than it ever planted, and it planted more last year than it planted in the year previous. Because of the Mexican boll weevil and because of the high price of corn a man would say, "I can not afford to raise cotton with the proceeds of which I must purchase corn. Corn is $1.75 a bushel"—as it was for a short while—"so I will raise corn."

Now, you must remember that there is a great deal of hysteria in the country outside of all the German espionage and German corruption funds, which have been deflected to this new purpose since the gentlemen whom I previously mentioned had to leave the country. Outside of them there is a general hysterical war condition existing. People are going crazy about some things.

A man came around to me the other day. I have a little back yard on Sixteenth Street, about as big as from that desk to this one and back there [indicating]. He wanted me to plant vegetables. I could not plant vegetables enough there to furnish food for the family for hardly more than three breakfasts. It is stupid.

Now, the first thing you have got to get rid of is this psychological condition. You have got to get rid of the hysteria, and let the voice go out to the American people that there is no great shortage of the foodstuffs of America, or that at any rate while there may be a shortage it is not the extravagant shortage that the newspapers are feeding us on every day.

A newspaper boy naturally hunts the sensational; he has got to put things in the paper—by the way, he is about the fairest fellow in the world to us and to everybody else—but he is always hunting news, and the more extravagant the news is the more welcome it is and the further it goes. It is the psychology of the situation more than anything else, and we can correct it better from right here than from any other place in the world.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. One word further. In the meanwhile, in order to correct it, let us take the course indicated by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. Let us put our hands upon the throats of these speculators, if there be any great number of them, so that we may fix for the farmer the minimum price and fix for the consumer the maximum price that shall be fair to all. Meanwhile, let us not let our allies in Europe think that their main dependence for food—America—can not be depended upon. We have the food, we have the money, we have the men, we have the courage, and we have got everything else.

One other thing I want to say. So far as the South is concerned, just at this moment, the trouble in raising food is not so much the lack of seed—though that is a trouble with vegetables and some other things, like soy beans and velvet beans, the new crops—but it is the lack of labor, though already in many places throughout the South men are beginning to substitute machinery for labor.

Mr. BORAH. I suppose the Senator would include fertilizer also, because we appropriated $10,000,000 for that yesterday.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would, undoubtedly, but I was dwelling upon the chief trouble. The chief trouble in the South is the lack of labor. The whole South wants to turn itself into a place to raise food. You can raise oats and cowpeas and wheat and plant them with a tractor plow. One man on one place of mine now has put 150 acres into oats with a tractor plow, and is to follow it in the same year with peas. There never was a tractor plow seen around there before. But we simply can not get labor. The immigration from Europe has been shut off. As a consequence, the negro labor of the South has been going North. A man told me not long ago that he saw a camp of negroes working in Vermont—a thing never before seen there, I presume. Now, in the South farmers are gradually substituting for man power machine power, and it will not be long before they have substituted a sufficient amount of it to meet the trouble. But whatever else happens, let us not get hysterical.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I merely want to add to what I have said one reflection suggested by the remark of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. I think it is undoubtedly true that the hysteria of the time has much to do with some of the conditions of which we complain; but my imagination is not vivid enough to ascribe to it all of the evils which we are now discussing. I do not believe that German propaganda is the cause of the very small number of seeds in these bags, to which our attention has been called by the Senator from Utah, nor of the impression that our food supply may be confronted with a shortage. I agree with the Senator in that. I do not think there is immediate danger of such a calamity. I certainly hope not; yet, as suggested by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], much of the information—some of which proceeds from official sources—may have been subject to the general hysteria and can not have been influenced by any German propaganda.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Colorado must admit that the agents of the Agricultural Department to-day are largely actuated by the motive of persuading the people to put in more and more foodstuffs, and are, therefore, very naturally biased in making their estimates as to what will be planted. They want to scare the people, so that there will be no danger of a lack of foodstuffs.

Mr. THOMAS. I think so, Mr. President, and I think that that is a very commendable course to pursue.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think so, too.

Mr. THOMAS. I am sure that the Senator from Mississippi and I would agree on that proposition; at the same time there is a basis for the apprehensions of the department, which I think is pretty well founded.

This shortage is actually threatening us in some directions, due not to the lack of supply but to the manner in which that supply is controlled. I refer to a speculation which would confront us irrespective of the activities of enemies within our midst. For example, I have two clippings from the New York World of April 24. The first informs us that—

SPECULATORS ARE HOARDING VAST SUPPLIES OF FOOD.

Developments yesterday in the wholesale produce district here and at Chicago disclosed that large speculative syndicates, backed by millions of cash capital, are buying and hoarding vast quantities of eggs, dried beans, cheese, and some other foodstuffs urgently needed by our allies within the next few weeks.

This hoarding is going on just in advance of very large bids by the Government at Washington for food supplies for the Army and Navy and by the allied Governments for supplies to be shipped abroad.

The other is a telegram clipped from the same paper, as follows:

SPECULATORS HOLD 36,000,000 EGGS—COMMISSIONER DILLON'S AID TELLS OF VAST SUPPLY IN CHICAGO.

CHICAGO, April 24.

About 200 carloads of eggs, approximately 36,000,000, are on railroad tracks in Chicago to-day and they are being held by speculators, according to Hebert A. Emerson, who is on his way to his home in New York from the Pacific coast, where he investigated food conditions for John J. Dillon, commissioner of the State of New York.

Mr. Emerson said that the Pacific Coast States this year, instead of importing eggs as they have done usually, will have a surplus of 75,000 to 100,000 cases. This will release the supply from the Northern and Middle Western States which has been going to the coast in the past and will turn that supply toward the East. Mr. Emerson said he had no evidence of an Egg Trust, but said he is sure there is a "mighty close understanding" among the big dealers.

"The butter situation is a parallel," he said. "The Pacific coast this year will be able to ship east a surplus of 150 cars of butter, 24,000 pounds to the car. Four years ago the coast imported 200 cars." He said Chicago is now paying higher prices for eggs and some other foods than London and Liverpool.

This accounts in part for the failure of the large production of beans, to which the Senator from Mississippi referred, to affect sensibly and by way of reduction the prices for those commodities. It is this speculation in food products, Mr. President, which holds up the consumer, the Government, and our allies, and which will reap huge benefit from the $5,000,000,000 which this Congress has just voted for war purposes.

The real enemy of the American people to-day is the speculator and the combinations which seek to control the necessities of life and dictate their prices to the people and to the Government. They are creating a situation certain to create a crisis more serious than the war crisis now confronting the Nation. I earnestly hope that before we adjourn we shall enact legislation whereby the Government may take such people by the throat and keep its strangle hold until this war is over.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I agree with the views expressed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] as to one of the causes of the high cost of living at the present time; I have no doubt that the element of speculation enters into it to a very large degree; but I disagree entirely with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], and with others, who express belief that there is not a shortage of food in this country. There is, and there has been for the last six months, a very wide and extended suffering upon the part of the poor people of this country for want of food. There is not any more doubt about it than there is that we are here in this Senate Chamber. The facts are to be gathered upon every hand. If it were not that we are having our attention diverted by conditions of war the facts would be so pointedly presented that no one could doubt them. There is a shortage of food supplies, and there will continue to be unless the most persistent, extraordinary, sustained, and vigilant efforts upon the part of the American people prevents it.

In my judgment, the most serious and stupendous fact which confronts us to-day with reference to the question of war is that of food; and there is no use of blinding our eyes to the fact. If this war continues for two years and there is not the most extraordinary exertion, sustained and constant upon the part of the American people, we shall face a world famine.

More important than men upon the front, and more important than any other question connected with this war, is the organization of the industries of this country, so that we may see that the people who go to the front are fed and the people who are at home are not visited with widespread famine. If the United States can do its part and if it can arouse the people to the necessity of doing their part in regard to this matter—as the Senator from Mississippi says, we have the men, we have the material, we have the territory, we have the area, we have the acreage—we can prevent it; but we can not prevent it by drifting.

Mr. President, this is not alone due to the fact of the conditions superinduced by war. There has been a constant rise in food prices for the last 15 or 20 years. There has been a constant decrease in acreage, proportionately speaking, and a constant increase of population in the cities. There has been a large number constantly going into the cities and a smaller number going to the farms to feed them. Mr. James J. Hill, who was not only a great railroad builder, but also an empire builder, warned us 10 years ago that if there was not turning from the city to the farm and an increase in acreage in proportion to the increase in population, we must face the fact that there would be universal want among the people who were drawing small salaries and earning small wages in this country. That prophecy has come true. He gave us the decrease in acreage from year to year in the production of wheat in proportion to the population, the decrease in acreage in the production of corn in proportion to the population; and it proves itself. It is a mathematical proposition. There is not enough being produced to feed those for whom the producers are working.

Here is an illustration of it. In 1890, according to an authority before me, we had 62,000,000 people, and we had at that time in this country 58,000,000 cattle. Now we have 100,000,000 people and 41,000,000 cattle. That is not a condition which has been superinduced by German spies or German corruption funds. It is a fact which had been demonstrated long before the situation which now confronts us was apparent to the country; and that must be overcome in order to meet this situation. It is just as necessary, Mr. President, as the question of raising armies and men to fight upon the battle front.

The American Steel & Wire Co., in a recent statement, said:

Live-stock growing is the most important subject in the country at this time. America in the past has offered meat three times a day to all comers; now things are changing, for the population is increasing faster than the meat to feed it. Must the country go backward to the European standard? Live stock is leaving the farms too fast—the raising of live stock has become unprofitable in the face of the greatest demand the world has ever known.

This is an illustration of what the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has said. It is by reason of the fact that there is a gigantic combine, a gigantic monopoly, which is in control of the situation, constantly impoverishing those who are raising the stock and constantly increasing the price to those who must feed upon the meat, if they get it at all.

Mr. James F. Pool, editor of the Live Stock Journal, in an article in the Chicago Examiner of January 20, 1917, says:

"Texas never has been as short of cattle since it grew grass," said Robert R. Hammond. "In one section of the Panhandle, where 200,000 head could easily have been found at this season a few years ago, I was able to find less than 200,000." Similar information comes from every section of the southwestern breeding grounds.

There will not be enough mature cattle to fill Flint Hill's pastures in the spring, to say nothing of the northwestern grass requirements.

Now, Mr. President, I turn back to some of the reasons for this situation. The American National Live Stock Association, at a meeting some time ago, passed these resolutions:

The packing interests of the country to-day are in control of practically all the stockyards at the market centers, exchange buildings, and all terminal facilities for the caring for and handling of stock.

In a very large measure they are in control of the banks and cattle loan companies at these market centers.

To-day a farmer ships his car of finished stock consigned to a commission man, who is found to rent his office from the packer—the buyer—and does his business with a packer-controlled bank. Under these conditions it is impossible for the seller to meet the buyer on equal terms. While the packer by his methods is impoverishing the producer, the cost of meats to the consumer is higher than ever before in the history of the country.

The object of the association is to bring about such a condition as will give the producer a fair profit and to once more raise the consumption of meats by the consumer to the level of five years ago by reducing the cost to the consumer. The shrinkage per capita consumption of meat during the last five years has been about 18 per cent.

The following resolutions were read and adopted:

"Whereas the big meat packers of the United States are largely in control of stockyards and the terminal facilities thereat, of the slaughter and distribution of cattle, sheep, hogs, and poultry, and the products thereof, including hides, tanneries, and the products thereof; many of the articles that are made from the horns and hoofs, including glue, buttons, combs, etc.; cottonseed oil mills and refineries, the products of which are used in the manufacture of lard compounds, soap, and various oleo products; and

"Whereas they also control the price of fertilizers, with which the fertility of the farms of the Nation is maintained; and

"Whereas they largely own and control the refrigerator cars and icing facilities used in the transportation of fruits, vegetables, and other perishable products; and

"Whereas in many localities of production they control the price paid and the distribution of fresh and canned fruits, and are thus able to influence the effect of supply and demand and to cause violent fluctuations in prices to the great detriment of the producer and without benefit to the consumer; and

"Whereas such control as recited above gives those possessing same a practical monopoly of the marketing of goods and other necessities of life and is a menace to our country: Therefore be it

"Resolved—

Then they ask for an investigation, I think, by the Federal Trade Commission in regard to the facts.

Only a short time ago what is known as the National Conference of Marketing and Farm Credits, which was attended, it was said, by 2,000 delegates from 47 States, passed this resolution:

We earnestly urge upon Congress the imperative need of a prompt and thorough investigation by the Federal Trade Commission, assisted by the Department of Agriculture, of the marketing of live stock and the meat-packing industries in this and other countries. We urge that this investigation be followed by a report with constructive recommendations for the improvement of the conditions and methods under which live stock is marketed, and the products thereof manufactured, distributed, and sold.

ADEQUATE APPROPRIATION AND AUTHORITY.

We urge upon Congress the making of an adequate appropriation and the giving of adequate authority to the Federal Trade Commission to enable it to cover all important phases of the problem.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me an interruption?

Mr. BORAH. Yes, sir.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator will remember that in the last sundry civil appropriation bill $250,000 were appropriated for that investigation. I think that was in response to a resolution similar to the one to which the Senator has referred.

Mr. BORAH. I know that that appropriation was made, but I am convinced the situation requires a remedy more speedy and drastic than a congressional investigation.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me an interruption?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to say to the Senator that the representative of the organization whose resolution the Senator has read, a former Secretary of the Interior, has been here lately and advocated this specific appropriation. He said it was just what he wanted to cure the situation.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; but does not the Senator from Minnesota——

Mr. NELSON. The Senator from Idaho knows to whom I refer.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, I know.

Mr. NELSON. I refer to Secretary Fisher, who was here. He wrote me about this matter and came to see me in regard to it; there is no secret about it. He wanted an appropriation of $400,000, but if he could not get that he would be satisfied with $200,000, but he said this was just what he wanted.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely; and I know how badly he wanted it, because he wrote me about it, and it was a step, perhaps, in the right direction. We would have a very learned and industrious investigation; it would reveal a startling state of facts, the volumes of which investigation would go into the archives of the Capitol, and there they would remain for all time to come; but the increase in the cost of living would proceed apace.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, does not the Senator believe that, with the interest now manifested in this question, Members of the other House and of the Senate will thoroughly study that report?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, of course we thoroughly study all these questions, but the remedy which we usually provide is homeopathic; it does not seem to purge the system. There is not much doubt about the facts. Then why investigate? Does anyone really doubt the complete and absolute monopoly of the packers of this country over the live-stock industry? It can be demonstrated by the calling of a grand jury in three days; and you will never stop it by mere congressional investigation.

I said a moment ago that the most serious question in this war right now is the question of the supply of food; and, in my judgment, if the war continues, as I have said, for any length of time, that is going to be the situation with which it will be most difficult to deal.

We are conscripting men. I am for conscripting the means by which to feed the people of this country and the people of Europe, and I am in favor, as a war measure, of this Government taking possession of the packing plants of the country, to officer and run them for the benefit of the American people from now on, so long as the war continues.

Mr. THOMAS Mr. President, does not the Senator also think we should conscript all of the food in the different cold-storage warehouses of the country as well as the meat supply?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I do.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho if he really thinks the retail prices of meat products would be any less if the Government were controlling the business?

Mr. BORAH. I think they would. Does the Senator from Massachusetts think they would be no less?

Mr. WEEKS. I have great doubt about it. I am inclined to think that the prices would be higher rather than lower.

Mr. BORAH. Well, two of the packing companies last year declared in the way of stock and cash dividends $125,000,000.

Mr. WEEKS. Let me ask the Senator from Idaho how much business they did?

Mr. BORAH. It does not make any difference to me how much business they did; they did a tremendous amount of business; but we propose to do the same amount of business with their plants, and give the American people the benefit of the $125,000,000 profit during the war.

Mr. WEEKS. How much capital did they have involved?

Mr. BORAH. I do not know.

Mr. WEEKS. How much rent would you pay, and how much higher wages would you pay?

Mr. BORAH. The Senator is talking about something that does not enter into this matter at all with me, so long as this war continues. We would not need to pay any higher rent or any higher wages. And then, when the war is over I would turn them back stripped and purged of their monopolistic elements. I would make the situation such that independent packing companies would dare to start and be able to live.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am interested in the Senator's figures. I propose to ask him whether there is any possibility of a mistake? I remember some months ago looking up the figures, and, as I recall, the profits of the Armour packing plant, which is one of the largest in the country, were $20,000,000, and not $120,000,000 or $125,000,000. It seems to me there is an error, and I know that the Senator from Idaho does not want to make an error. If I am wrong, I should like to be corrected. I do not say that as any answer to the Senator's argument, but in the interest of accuracy I make the suggestion that the Senator may be mistaken.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have before me a statement of facts, furnished to me by a gentleman in Chicago. I do not feel free to give his name, but the statement which he furnished me carries, to my mind, the evidence of verity, because it is sustained by a very thorough presentation of the facts, and he has been giving a great deal of time to the subject. I may be in error about it, but my information is that what I have given is a correct statement.

Mr. REED. I do not challenge the Senator's statement; I simply call attention to it, because it is in such great variance with the figures that I found. My figures, however, are some months back. Whatever the facts are I know we want to know all of them.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I received the annual statement of the Armour Packing Co. for the fiscal year ending December 31, 1916; and that statement, if I remember correctly, showed a profit for the year of nineteen million and some odd dollars. It also showed that the profit on the gross business—that is, on the amount of business handled—was a trifle less than 2 per cent, or, in other words, that for every $1,000 of business done by Armour & Co. the profit amounted to a trifle less than $20. Of course, I wish to say to the Senator——

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of California in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. BORAH. In just a moment. Of course, if I have been led into attacking an impoverished concern—a concern which is on its last legs financially—I should be glad to record my apology, when the facts are properly presented to show that fact.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want the Senator to understand that I intimated that they were not making a good profit upon the amount of money invested. I simply called attention to the fact that, even if the Government of the United States were going to handle the business, it is very probable that it could not be handled for less than 2 per cent; and yet 2 per cent upon the great volume of business that they do shows a good profit for last year's business on the amount of money invested.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator, when he refers to the financial statement, take into consideration the stock dividends declared as well as the cash dividends?

Mr. SMOOT. Every dividend declared, and all of the profits that were made from every source.

Mr. BORAH. Then I venture to say that the Senator has been—something that does not often happen to the Senator—very sadly misled.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, I say to the Senator now that I base my statement on the annual report that was sent in pamphlet form to all of the stockholders and to many of the business men of the United States, showing the exact amount of business done during the year, the assets and the liabilities of the company, and showing the net profits of the company for that year. I can not say, of course, whether they were correct or not. I can only say that that was the statement that was given out by the company and signed by the president.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I will yield to the Senator from Wyoming in just a minute. I would not quote a mere news publication which did not seem to be verified with reference to this matter, but I am quoting from one who has convinced me by his position to know, and by his long and industrious investigation, that he is pretty familiar with it. I may be in error.

I now yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I should like to say for the information of the Senator from Idaho, in answer to the statement made by the Senator from Utah, that the claim has been made by the packers for the past quarter of a century that they were not receiving a greater profit than he has indicated here; but the facts show beyond the shadow of a doubt that their profits are in the by-products that they produce, and that they are uniformly piling up profits, while those who produce live stock are, at least in many cases, losing money as producers. It can be shown without any question that their profits greatly exceed the claims they make, because they are covered up in the by-products.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the annual report to which I have reference—and, by the way, I will send for it and have it here in a very few moments—takes into consideration every dollar of profit made by the concern. It not only takes into consideration the profits on the purchase of the stock but it takes into consideration the profits on all by-products. The company deals in sheep, cattle, hogs, wool, hides, glue, and they use everything there is in a carcass with the exception of the squeal, as somebody has so well said.

Mr. THOMAS. The squeal.

Mr. SMOOT. Nothing is lost; and that is absolutely shown in the report. The report shows the amount that is made in every subsidiary company of the concern, and I think the Senator is mistaken when he says that the profits in the by-products are not taken into consideration. But, Mr. President, I want it distinctly understood that it can be shown upon the face of the report that 2 per cent upon the volume of business done by the concern will bring about the profits of the institution as shown by their reports. It is not 2 per cent upon their capital; they turn that capital over many many times a year; and, of course, the profits upon the amount of capital invested are, as I said before, particularly the last year, amounts in the aggregate to a good profit.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. KENDRICK. If the Senator from Idaho will pardon me, I will say that this question of profits is one very easily juggled and covered up. It is true beyond a doubt that while within two or three years the imports into this country of meat products have fallen off our own consumption has greatly increased; our exports have increased at the same time; and yet it can be proved with figures, and is shown by the records, that the producers were receiving lower prices than they were under former conditions, the packers accumulating, by their own statements, enormous profits, and thousands of men who produced the live stock going on the rocks of failure.

Mr. BORAH. I believe the Senator from Wyoming has stated the matter just as it is; and one of the greatest evils of the situation is not the mere fact that the packing companies may or may not be making large profits, but by reason of the manner in which the business is conducted, the farmer being in a sense the peon of the packing companies, the farmer is discouraged from raising cattle and hogs and stock. He must deal alone with the packing company. When he goes to a commission merchant, the commission merchant, he finds, has his office rented in a packers' building. When the farmer wants to borrow money for the purpose of marketing it, he finds that he borrows it of a packers' bank; and so he is in every sense the industrial slave of the packing companies of the country.

So long as that is true, you may be sure that the farmer will feel discouragement, and it will be shown by a decrease of the production of live stock, as it has been for the last 10 years, notwithstanding the fact that meat prices have been constantly going up. If things were normal, if conditions were permitted to have their sway as they should, the natural rise in prices would naturally produce more stock, and in that way produce an equilibrium and a fair price; but here the amount of stock is constantly decreasing while the value of meat products is constantly going up.

I want to read again, for the benefit of some of the Senators who have come in since, the article which I read a few moments ago from the Live Stock Association, which bears out precisely what the Senator from Wyoming says:

> The packing interests of the country to-day are in control of practically all the stockyards at the market centers, exchange buildings, and all terminal facilities for the caring for and handling of stock. In a very large measure they are in control of the banks and cattle loan companies at these market centers. To-day a farmer ships his car of finished stock consigned to a commission man, who is found to rent his office from the packer, the buyer, and does his business with a packer-controlled bank. Under these conditions it is impossible for the seller to meet the buyer on equal terms. While the packer, by his methods, is impoverishing the producer, the cost of meats to the consumer is higher than ever before in the history of the country—

And so forth.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. If I correctly remember some of the figures in the report to which the Senator from Utah has called attention, the Armour Co. claimed that they were receiving only one-fourth of a cent a pound profit on their meats—on beef. Of course they produce a vast amount. I have looked into this matter a little, however, and it strikes me that the middleman, and in some instances the retailer, are quite as much to blame for the high prices as the packers.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; but, Mr. President, when we talk about the profits of the packing company, we do not get at the profits they get by reason of being stockholders in a bank which does the financial part of the business and takes its "rake-off."

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly not.

Mr. BORAH. We do not get at the profits they make by reason of being perhaps copartners with the commission merchants, salesmen, and so forth. They reap a profit all the way down the line, and they make a report to the American people of the final profit of the packing company, which is only a small part of the profits which they get out of the business.

Mr. GALLINGER. One other suggestion: The Senator suggests that the Government ought to commandeer these establishments, and perhaps that is right; but am I wrong in my recollection that some of these concerns, and perhaps all of them, offered to turn their establishments over to the Government a little while ago?

Mr. BORAH. I do not know.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think I am correct in that.

Mr. BORAH. Well, then, that would make it that much easier. I do not know upon what terms they offered; but I would take them at their offer.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. KENDRICK. I just wish to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that in conversation with the Secretary of Agriculture a few days ago with regard to this same question, he stated to me—and I think I betray no confidence in repeating it—that there had been more said about turning over these packing houses in the newspapers than had been said to him by the packers.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I saw the statement to which the Senator from New Hampshire referred, that the profits made by the packers were only a quarter of a cent a pound; but the Senator will remember that the turn-over, so to speak—I think that is the commercial expression—is almost daily. Suppose, however, it were every five days: That would be a quarter of a cent for five days, and if you calculate the amount of profit during the year upon such a basis the Senator can very easily calculate what the actual profit is.

Mr. BORAH. I can understand that it is pretty large.

Now, Mr. President, I want to refer to another feature of the food question, perhaps not so interesting, but one upon which I do not have to rely so much upon the statements of other people.

The Secretary of Agriculture and the President, in his address to the American people, have both urged the American people to cultivate as large an area as possible, in view of the fact that they understand perfectly that it is necessary to make every exertion to meet the situation in reference to food; and people have been advised to cultivate their lots. I believe the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] said that he was requested personally to cultivate his back yard, which was a space of about 2 by 4, or something like that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A little bit larger.

Mr. BORAH. And so on. Now, I agree with all that. I am in perfect harmony with it. I may disagree with my colleagues here upon some matters with reference to the method of preparing for this war, but I do not disagree with them at all as to the necessity of preparing to feed this situation. I have given more attention to it, and perhaps am therefore more imbued with the necessity of it. But if you suppose that you are going to draft men from this walk of life and that walk of life and send them out upon these farms to raise food products and to help raise live stock, and so forth, without relieving the situation as to the speculator, as to the monopoly which controls the situation, without having a vast amount of trouble in this country, you are doomed to disappointement.

If the American people can feel that they are to have the fruits of their labor, and if they are to be compensated according to their industry legitimately, you will not have much occasion for the enforcement of that part of the bill which refers to partial military service; but if you do not relieve the situation by lessening the grip of those who are collecting their millions in the way of speculation in this hour of peril, and undertake to force people to work as peons for these great organizations, you are going to have a vast amount of trouble in this country for which you will need an army before this war closes. You must relieve the situation from above, and then you will have very little occasion to draft people to go into these industries and work.

Again, Mr. President, out West we do not have to till our back yards. We have a vast amount of territory out there which is waiting for the hoe or the plow or the cultivator. If we can simply get the Government to assist us in putting that territory under water, we have not only large yards out there but we have hundreds of thousands of acres of as rich and fertile land as lies outdoors, upon which the settlers are now settled and waiting for the Government to assist them in putting the water upon the arid land so that they may cultivate it.

It is true that this will not meet the situation for this year, but I think you are going to be disappointed if you suppose that this war is going to end before another season. If we could take the censorship off of the situation, if the facts were to come through as they exist in Russia and England and France, no man would believe that this war would be over by next winter, and we must prepare for another season and another year. In order to do that we ought to reach out, by the aid of the Government, wherever we can and encourage men to go upon these lands and prepare to do their part in raising the food which will be supremely necessary for another year.

We have pending here before the Congress measures providing the means by which to do that. Now, it is not the fault of the able Secretary of the Interior that it has not been done. I am sure that the Secretary of the Interior would have been glad to reclaim these lands during his administration for the last four years, but he is limited in the amount of funds which he has at his disposal for this purpose, and he is unable to go forward without Congress helping him; and the Congress of the United States, in view of the fact that every dollar of this money comes back, ought not only to loan its credit and guarantee these bonds which are to be placed upon these irrigation projects, but it ought to make a loan of fifty or seventy-five millions of dollars to the reclamation fund to enable the Secretary of the Interior to proceed.

These projects can be utilized inside of six months. The settlers are there; the lands are ready for irrigation; in many instances vast canals are flowing within a reasonable distance, and all you have to do is to build the side canals, and these hundreds of thousands of acres can be utilized.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. That makes me think that the Senator from South Dakota has pending here a bill which is also of great importance in this matter. He has pending a bill which subordinates the lien of the Government upon these projects to the farm-loan mortgages which may be put upon them. Now, these people can have that kind of aid, and that bill ought to be passed. It is a war measure. These people can have that kind of aid without costing the Government ultimately anything whatever, because this money all comes back into the Treasury.

I urge, Mr. President, in all seriousness, that any measure which has for its purpose the reclaiming of an acre of land and putting it under cultivation is just as much an emergency measure and a war measure as almost any other measure which may come before us concerning this great conflict.

Mr. WILLIAMS, MR. REED, and Mr. NELSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, men differ very much more in words than they do in ideas; that is, men of sound thinking. There is no doubt about the fact, as the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has said, that the most important thing in connection with this world conflict is the production of food enough to carry the conflict through. It is of more importance than the furnishing of men in the trenches. Of course the men are the first line of defense, and if there are not enough of them we will lose; but in the ultimate end, unless you can feed the men that you can put there, you will lose anyhow.

Mr. President, the Senator is right about another thing. There is no doubt in the world about the fact that there is something absolutely "rotten in Denmark" about the manner and price at which I sell a cow in Mississippi and then buy beef in Washington; the manner and price at which I sell a hog in Mississippi and buy bacon in Washington; or the manner in which I sell a sheep in Mississippi and buy mutton in Washington. Whether that is the fault of speculation or the fault of bad distribution, I confess I have not thus far been able to learn, though I am inclined to think that a great deal of it is the fault of a misdistribution—costly, wasteful, and uneconomical distribution—though I think that much of it is also attributable to the hand to which I referred a few minutes ago that has the American agricultural throat within its grip, which hand ought to be made to turn it loose, and that is speculation.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do.

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to ask the Senator if he does not have the same trouble in buying beef, mutton, and other products in the cities in the South as well as in Washington?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, just the same; but it just so happens that I sell cattle and sheep and hogs in Mississippi, and for the most part of the year I buy the finished products here, so I referred to them in that way; but with a little bit less emphasis the same difference exists.

Mr. President, there are several reasons for this condition. One of them is a legislative reason, and I want to call the attention of the Senator from Idaho to that. For the last 30 or 40 years five of the great powers of the world have been engaged in legislation, the very end of which, if not its very intent, was to hothouse out of agriculture into manufacturing the labor and consumers of the United States, of Germany, of Russia, of France, and of Italy. Now, that has had a great deal to do with it. Then there is another reason, and that is a natural reason. It is the bent of all civilized countries, as they become more and more civilized, to become more and more industrial and less and less agricultural. That can not be prevented. That is a natural tendency that must prevail everywhere. It prevails because of two reasons: First, because as a State becomes more industrial the wages of industrial pursuits are greater in proportion than those of agriculture, and, secondly, because machinery takes the place of hand labor and of horse labor on the farm, and that is occurring more and more. But the amount of foodstuffs produced per capita ought not to decrease in the same proportion as the agricultural population decreases; but that takes place simply because machinery can not keep up with the decrease of labor all the time. After a while it will, of course, catch up as far as that particular matter is concerned.

There is another reason and that is the war reason, and that is the reason facing us now, and that is the thing I do not want us to get hysterical about. The Senator and I, like all men of tolerably fair sense, agree about things in the main; but the point that I was trying to make this morning was that we must not overexaggerate this situation. We must not overexaggerate the influence of the war upon the situation. You must remember the other things that have influenced it and have created it and were already causing it to exist before the war broke out. Wages were not keeping up with the cost of living before this war broke out; not only not here but not anywhere else on the surface of this earth, except perhaps in Asia Minor and part of Africa. So you must not overemphasize that, and you must not go around frightening and scaring into hysterics the people with a lot of new discoveries about "starvation certain to approach in the immediate future" when it is not going to approach in the immediate future.

Why, even Great Britain will raise a larger crop of foodstuffs next year than she ever raised in her history before, because she is putting down her deer parks and her sheep walks and everything, with all human labor and with motor plows running them. The South will raise more, because every day the South is substituting motor power for man power and horsepower. The whole world is sizing up the situation, and the world is going to face it, and we must not encourage these speculators in frightening the people about food scarcity. We must not by our talk here give them ground whereupon to proceed to excite the public imagination in favor of a speculative view of short supplies and in favor of increased demand. The war has just this much to do with it, and no more: Just in proportion as men go off of the farm and into the Army they keep the demand what it was before, and they decrease the supply and thereby in proportion raise the price. Now, that is all. It has no more to do with it than that.

The Senator from Idaho is eminently right when he says that one of the best things we can do is to put water on land that needs it to produce food. I can tell him another thing we can do that does not apply to his country, but does apply to mine, and that is to take water, where there is too much of it, off of land so that it can produce food.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the bill to which I had reference, and which I introduced, includes the swamp lands as well as the arid lands.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know that. I am agreeing with the Senator. He and I generally agree.

Mr. BORAH. I am complimented by that fact.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But I want to emphasize that "being as how," as the darkies say, he has emphasized the other side of the proposition, I want to emphasize the fact that it is just as important to take the water off of the land of the lower Mississippi Valley, where it is as rich as the Valley of the Nile, or richer, as it is to put water on the hillsides and valleys in Idaho. The Senator is precisely right about that.

But I did not rise in the first place in order to minimize the danger, but I rose for the purpose of putting an end, at any rate as far as I could, to any expression or any view which might encourage the very evil which the Senator has been describing. Frequently it goes out all over the country that Congress thinks that the country is about to be threatened with a famine, and then speculators will have a much easier job before them in raising prices than they had without it.

I agree with the Senator about another thing. This war is not going to close in one year or in two years. I know the German people. They are just going to begin fighting when they get back to the Rhine. We will have 2,000,000 men in Europe before this war is over, if you do not have more, unless some revolution there, some domestic trouble there, puts an end to the war. International conflict is not going to put an end to it in that length of time. It is going to take the money and the resources and the man power and the virility and the mental power of the United States, added to the democratic forces all over this world, to whip German, Austrian, Hungarian, and Turkish military autocracy to its knees.

The Senator is eminently right in thinking that the things which will ultimately end this war will be not men so much as resources—food, munitions, money, and men—but we must not act the part of cowards while we are about it. We must not be satisfied merely with resources, with food and munitions. We must show that we are fit to be the brethren of the French who fought at Verdun and who fought in the trenches, and the English under Gen. Haig, and all that brave little allotment of Belgians who died almost to a man in the most wonderful struggle that a free people ever made against insolent tyranny. We have got to prove that to all the world.

I merely want to emphasize this: That we shall not by our conduct and voices here unnecessarily increase popular hysteria; that we shall keep our heads cool and shall not mislead the people into hoarding food for the reason that they have been frightened about not having it week after next or some other time.

There is plenty of it to feed us even if we can not send much of it abroad, and, in my opinion, plenty to feed the world. By a good many things that have been said by the Agricultural Department and a good many thing that have been said by popular associations and a good many things that have been said here we are creating a sort of psychological situation which leads people to speculate, which leads them to corner foodstuffs, and which leads them to do it by holding out the hope of an immense profit if they do, when, in my private opinion, if they cooperate thus for about a year they will lose millions.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I feel very sure there will be general concurrence in the view expressed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] that we ought not to be unduly alarmed about any situation that can be remedied. To those who, like him, think there is nothing serious in the whole situation, I commend an article which appeared in last Sunday's New York World by Arthur R. Marsh, one of the leading economists of this country. I am going to read a few paragraphs from the article. He says:

> If there be any virtue in publicity the people of this country are now completely informed of the seriousness of the present and prospective food situation throughout the world. It may perhaps be doubted, however, whether they have as yet really passed from the stage of intellectual apperception of the facts to that of personal realization of what these facts will ultimately mean for themselves as individuals.
> * * * * * * *
> Great numbers of persons—

Evidently including the Senator from Mississippi—

> Great numbers of persons undoubtedly believe that all the talk of a scarcity of food, at least in this country, is fallacious and indulged in for some sinister purpose.
> Naturally those in this frame of mind are indignant when told that it is now a duty of the United States, notwithstanding the scantiness of its own stores of food and the ever-increasing prices therefor, to share these stores with other still more necessitous countries, even though these be now our allies in the greatest of all wars.
> Despite this skepticism, the people of the United States have to face, certainly for the coming twelvemonth, and in all probability for more than one year thereafter, a condition of things with respect to their supply of food the like of which has not been seen on the North American Continent since its earliest colonization by the white race, unless exception, perhaps, be made of the first winter of the Pilgrim Fathers.

Then, Mr. President, after giving detailed statistics concerning the world's supply, he calls attention to the fact that there still remain three great food products the planting of which may be carried on very extensively, namely, beans, corn, and potatoes. He says:

> Corn and potatoes, however, must now be the country's chief recourse, both for supplementing its domestic food supply and for fulfilling its obligations to its allies. Every effort of those charged with the conduct of our affairs in these particulars should be directed first to the production and then to the saving of these crops. It is well to insist upon the importance of the second of these obligations, since the amount of really important waste in connection with these two crops is greater than perhaps for all our other crops put together.
> The all-important point, however, is that the United States, in order to be safe in the matter of foodstuffs for its own and its allies' uses, ought to raise and preserve for the market a potato crop of at least 600,000,000 bushels, as compared with the 285,000,000 bushels estimated to have been grown in 1916, and at least 3,500,000,000 bushels of corn, instead of the 2,500,000,000 bushels of the past season. It were well, too, if we could produce 100,000,000 bushels of beans, instead of our usual ten or twelve million bushels.

Mr. President, I am satisfied the people of the country—at least if I may speak from conditions which prevail in my own State—are exerting every effort to get under cultivation the largest possible acreage of ground; but a great problem confronts us, and that is the problem of providing labor for the proper cultivation and harvesting of these great crops. A citizen of my State called upon me to-day and seriously proposed that we suspend the operation of our immigration laws, so as to permit the introduction into the country of 250,000 Chinese to work upon the farms and in related industries in this country.

Mr. President, this condition of affairs, to my mind, demonstrates the wisdom and the statesmanship of the President of the United States in his action in vetoing the immigration bill passed at the last session of Congress, excluding from our shores Caucasians, who would fill this great want for labor, because they could not read or write. I regret that the chairman of the Committee on Immigration is not here. He might be moved possibly by these considerations to endeavor to procure Congress to suspend the operation of that provision of the immigration law, at least for the period of the war.
